News of the Week.

The accounts received this week from all parts of Italy inform us that the Franco-Italian convention has been received with the greatest satisfaction; but strong opposition is still shown to the removal of the capital to Florence, if that measure is intended to be a renunciation of Rome. In Turin the people, irritated by the journals of the republican and clerical parties, renewed the rioting on the 22d ult., and, after raising seditious cries, threw stones and fired shots before the Royal Palace. The police and troops fired upon the populace, killing and wounding 20 persons. Several soldiers were also severely wounded, and the colonel and 10 men were killed. On Friday morning the announcement that the King had dismissed the Ministry and had commissioned General Della Marmora to form a new Cabinet, had an excellent effect in allaying the popular irritation. The city at once resumed its ordinary aspect, the shops were opened, and the artisans resumed work; and the tranquillity of the city has not been further disturbed. The municipality of Turin has since addressed a remonstrance to the Government, stating that on the first announcement of the convention the universal sentiment was one of satisfaction; but on learning the condition of the transfer of the capital to Florence, the people considered that such a step signified the renunciation of Rome. In common with the inhabitants of many other towns they were opposed to this renunciation, but were still ready, as they had been for a long time past, to sacrifice their material interests for the idea of Rome as a capital. A great meeting, at which all shades of Liberal opinions were represented, was held at Naples on Wednesday, when resolutions were unanimously adopted approving the Convention, proclaiming Rome to be the capital of Italy, and Venice free, and calling upon the Government to disregard municipal interests in choosing a provisional capital. General Della Marmora has not yet succeeded in completing the new Ministry, and a Royal decree has been issued, postponing the opening of the Italian Parliament from the 4th to the 24th inst., in order to afford time for the formation of a Cabinet. A despatch from Rome says that the Pope has received the news of the Convention with great interest, and has stated that he will examine it with the attention it deserves. The French journals discuss at great length the real meaning of the Convention. The semi-official papers represent the transfer of the capital to Florence as a practical renunciation of Rome, while the Liberal papers regard the treaty as most favourable to the Italian cause, maintaining that it must ultimately lead to the unity of Italy and to the establishment of the seat of Government at Rome.

A despatch from Vienna states that it is the intention of the Austrian Government to protest against the Franco-Italian Convention as a flagrant attack upon the treaties of Villafranca and Zurich. The Earl of Clarendon, who is now in Vienna on a mission from her Majesty's Government, is said to have intimated to Count Rechberg that the Italian question urgently requires a solution, and that if Austria forms a Northern alliance to oppose the Convention, England will not co-operate with her, although she is ready to support Austria if she leans towards the policy of the Western Powers. His lordship is also said to have urged the necessity of bringing the peace negociations with Denmark to a speedy issue. To these representations the Austrian Government is said to have reserved its reply.

The Spanish Cortes were dissolved by Royal decree on Friday, and the new elections are to take place on the 22d November.

Accounts from the United States inform us that some of the leaders of the Peace Democracy have declined to accept General M'CLELLAN on the terms of his recent letter, and intend shortly to hold a meeting to nominate another candidate. Mr. VALLANDIGHAM, however, who was one of the first to object to General M'CLELLAN's letter, has now announced his intention to support him, and the ratification meetings at New York, Washington, and throughout the North have been unanimous in his favour. The election of Mr. LINCOLN is preferred by the Southern journals to that of General M'CLELLAN, whether regarded from the peace or the war point of view. Both General GRANT and General SHERMAN have urgently demanded reinforcements, and in consequence of their representations Secretary STANTON has ordered the draft to take place on the 19th inst. in all the States which have not furnished their quota. General SHERIDAN defeated General EARLY with heavy loss in the Shenandoah Valley on the 18th ult. A large Confederate cavalry force has made a raid within General GRANT's lines, capturing 2500 cattle. The rumour that Admiral FARRAGUT's vessels had advanced within shelling distance of Mobile is discredited at Washington.

Advices from Mexico state that the French have taken the port of Matamoras, and that CORTINAS, being unable to hold the city against them, has crossed the Rio Grande with 2000 men, and after driving the Confederate Colonel FORDE out of Brownsville, has occupied that town in the name of the Federal Government, to which he has offered the services of his troops.

Home News.

THE COURT IN SCOTLAND.—On Wednesday week the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, walked in the grounds of the Castle. In the afternoon her Majesty, with Princess Helena, Prince Alfred, and Prince Elimar of Oldenburg, drove to the Lynn of Dee. On Thursday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, Prince Alfred, and Prince Elimar of Oldenburg, went to Alt-na-Guithasach and the Lynn of Mnich. Princess Louisa, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold went to the Lynn of Quoich. On Friday the Queen drove out, accompanied by Prince Leopold. In the afternoon her Majesty, accompanied by the Princess Helena and Prince Elimar of Oldenburg, drove to Invercauld, returning by Aberarder. Mr. Morier arrived on a visit. On Saturday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, drove by Invercauld to Allanquoich, where ponies and ghillies were in waiting. Her Majesty and the Princess having mounted, proceeded up the vale of the Quoich to Ben-a-bourd, recrossing the terrace that divides Glen Lui and Glendery from the Quoich Glen on their return to Mar Lodge. The Royal carriage there met her Majesty, who returned by Braemar to Balmoral about 7 P.M. Prince Elimar, of Oldenburg, left the Castle for Inverness. Earl Russell left for Edinburgh. On Sunday afternoon the Queen, with Princess Helena and Prince Alfred, attended Divine service at the parish church of Crathie. The Rev. Dr. Stewart officiated. On Monday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena and Prince Alfred, drove to Alt-na-Guithasach. The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone arrived as the Minister in attendance on the Queen. Mr. Morier and the Rev. Dr. Stewart left the Castle. On Tuesday morning the Queen and Princesses drove out. On Wednesday morning Lieut. Haig arrived at the Castle in attendance on Prince Alfred.

VISIT OF THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES TO SWEDEN.—On Saturday the Prince and Princess of Wales left Copenhagen in the Royal yacht Osborne for Stockholm. The Danish Royal family and Sir Augustus Paget accompanied their Royal Highnesses on board. Salutes were fired from the batteries of the forts. The ships in the harbour, as well as the public and private buildings, were decorated with flags; and the Prince and Princess were loudly cheered by the spectators. The Royal yacht was sighted from the entrance of the Port of Stockholm at noon on Monday. Prince Oscar and the Danish Ambassador went out to meet their Royal Highnesses, and joined them 12 miles outside the harbour. The royal yacht arrived at Stockholm at 7.30, and the Prince and Princess landed by torchlight. An immense crowd of people had assembled at the landing-place, by whom they were most enthusiastically received. Prince Oscar accompanied their Royal Highnesses to the Palace, where the Royal family were assembled to receive them. On leaving Stockholm their Royal Highnesses will return to Copenhagen, where they will remain another week, after which they will probably proceed to Paris. The projected journey of the Prince and Princess to St. Petersburg has been abandoned. Their Royal Highnesses are expected to return to Sandringham Hall on the 15th or 16th inst.

PRINCE HUMBERT OF ITALY.—On Friday his Royal Highness visited St. Paul's, the Bank of England, the Tower, and Barclay & Perkins's Brewery. On Saturday the Prince visited the Crystal Palace. On Sunday his Royal Highness attended high mass in the Roman Catholic Chapel in Farm Street, and afterwards inspected the Queen's stables at the Royal Mews, Pimlico. In the afternoon the Prince went by water to Greenwich, where he visited the chapel and hospital, and then dined at the Trafalgar. On Monday the Prince visited Aldershot, and witnessed a grand review of troops, followed by a sham fight. His Royal Highness then proceeded to the camp, where he visited the Prince Consort's library, the principal cook-house, the commissariat, and the gymnasium, and then took luncheon at the officers' mess of the Royal Dragoons. He next inspected a portion of the cavalry barracks, and returned to London in the afternoon. On Tuesday morning before breakfast the Prince paid a visit to the Knightsbridge Barracks, for the inspection of the 1st Life Guards. After breakfast his Royal Highness visited the Model Prison at Pentonville and the Army Clothing Factory at Pimlico. In the evening the Italian Minister gave a grand dinner, at which the commanding officers at Aldershot were invited to meet his Royal Highness. On Wednesday morning the Prince was engaged in paying farewell visits prior to his departure for the Continent. In the afternoon his Royal Highness took a drive with the Italian Minister. On Thursday morning his Royal Highness left town for Folkestone on his way to Boulogne.

THE GRAND DUCHESS MARIE, sister of the Emperor of Russia, accompanied by her husband the Count Stroganoff, their family and suite, left London on Sunday by the South-Eastern Railway for Dover, where she embarked for Calais on her way to Paris.

THE REVENUE.—The Globe of last evening says:—

"We have every reason to anticipate that the Revenue returns for the quarter and the four quarters ending this evening, will show no falling off in the gratifying results which it has been our pleasing duty to record on each occasion of making up the national accounts. The changes, whether of increase or decrease in the totals, will be very small, and will show that the national Revenue suffers but infinitesimally notwithstanding the very considerable remissions of taxation which we have experienced of late years."

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor went out shooting on Tuesday in the forest of Rambouillet. A Cabinet Council was held on Wednesday, the Emperor presiding. In the afternoon his Majesty visited the Grand Duchess Marie of Russia, who is staying at the Hotel Westminster. The Empress is expected to return from Schwalbach about the 2d or 3d, and the Court will soon afterwards go to Compiègne. M. Vuitry, Governor of the Bank of France, has been appointed President of the Council of State, in the room of M. Rouland, who has succeeded M. Vuitry as Governor of the Bank. The Vice-President of the Council of State is also to receive fresh functions. Queen Christina has left Paris for Spain. Earl Cowley, Baron de Budberg, and Count Goltz, the British, Russian, and Prussian Ambassadors, have returned to Paris. Prince Metternich is expected shortly. The rumour that he had been superseded is contradicted. Sir Henry Bulwer has arrived in Paris, and dined on Tuesday evening at the Ministry for Foreign Affairs. Monsignore de Mérode, the Papal Minister of War, arrived in Paris a few days since from Brussels, and left the same evening for Roche-en-Brenny on a visit to Count de Montalembert, his brother-in-law, whence he was to proceed to Marseilles on his return to Rome. An Imperial decree has been issued declaring the herring and mackerel fishery henceforward free, and suppressing the regulations hitherto in force respecting it. The Moniteur states that the Octroi question does not engage the attention of the Government at present. It is announced that M. Drouyn de Lhuys has addressed a circular note to the French official agents abroad defining the nature of the Franco-Italian Convention. The statement that Austria and Spain had protested against the Convention is formally contradicted. The Convention has been published this week. It contains only four articles:—

"Art. 1. The Government of the Emperor of the French engages to withdraw its troops from the territory of the Holy See by degrees, according as the latter shall form an army of foreign Catholics. The evacuation shall be effected within the space of two years. Art. 2. The Government of the King of Italy, on its side, engages to respect the formation of the Pontifical army, provided that it shall not become a danger to Italy. Art. 3. The Government of the King of Italy, besides, engages to respect the present territory of the Holy See, and to preserve it from all attacks from without. Art. 4. The Government of the King of Italy declares that it is ready to enter into negotiations to take to its charge the part of the Roman debt which falls to the share of the province of Emilia."

The Moniteur of Friday reprints the recent article of the Constitutionnel, together with an extract from a note of M. Drouyn de Lhuys, dated Oct. 18, 1862; and also the letter of May 20, 1862, addressed by the Emperor to M. Thouvenel on the Roman question. The Pays of Friday evening asserts that on the previous day Count de Sartiges delivered to Cardinal Antonelli a note of M. Drouyn de Lhuys, informing the Pontifical Government of the Franco-Italian convention respecting the evacuation of Rome concluded on the 15th and ratified on the 20th ult.

La France of Friday evening, in an article on the transfer of the capital of Italy to Florence, says:—

"This act, which is about to be accomplished, has another object in view than the solution alone of the Roman question. The fear and apprehension entertained by Italy arise from the attitude of Austria, and the military measures on the frontier are to provide against events that might probably follow the alliance initiated by the late interviews of the Sovereigns at Kissengen and Carlsbad. Austria might remove all fear of complications by relinquishing every ambitious afterthought in reference to Italy, even as Italy has done in reference to Rome, thus recognising an accomplished fact; and, finally, pacifically settling the Venetian question, which otherwise threatens to be a permanent source of disquiet in Europe."

The Constitutionnel of Saturday, in an article examining the Convention, shows that the Imperial Government has been faithful to its mission.

"Ever convinced that the temporal power of the Pope was not opposed to the liberty and independence of Italy, it was sufficient for the Government to know how to await the favourable moment to effect a solution which should at one and the same time put an end to the retrograde tendencies of the Roman court and the revolutionary tendencies of Italy. We ought to congratulate ourselves that time has rendered possible the combination which will accomplish this double result so necessary to the tranquillity of Europe."

The same journal of Wednesday publishes an article signed by M. Paulin Limayrac, which states that the convention assures to the Pope the independence of his army and his financial arrangements, and continues as follows:—

"The Pope could not refuse to accede to a convention without placing his enemies in the right. There is no secret understanding in the convention. Before the 15th of September a false state of things existed for all parties. Now matters have a true aspect for all: for Italy, who now sees foreigners only at Venice; for the Pope, who re-enters the normal condition of his whole power; and for France, who, faithful to herself, will not have quitted Rome before having given to the Holy See guarantees against external danger and the means of insuring its security within."

The Debats shows that the Church party is in error in supposing that a complete renunciation of all hope of Rome as the metropolis of Italy is the result of the Convention. It says:—

"Is it to be said that Italy must renounce, and that we must resign for her more complete hopes? Certainly not. The step which has just been taken leads to an object perhaps more distant than can be now believed. Can the Romans themselves avoid turning their eyes toward that Italy which surrounds and presses them on all sides, and which they are disposed to consider—inhabitants themselves of a capital without a country—as a state without a capital? On the day when the Roman Government shall have accustomed its subjects to the practice of free institutions, when the Pontifical power shall be seated in that elevated sphere, on that day Rome, nourished with hope and with liberty, will fall like ripe fruit into the lap of Italy."

The same journal in another article thus describes the manner in which the Convention has been received in foreign countries:—

"The foreign press brings us the expression of the feelings which the sudden announcement of the Convention excites in the principal Courts and nations of Europe. In England it is loudly applauded; in Austria alarm is felt; at Berlin and St. Petersburg they keep on the reserve: and, to speak the truth, appear equally disposed, according to circumstances, to be alarmed with Austria, or to rejoice against her. It would not, perhaps, be false reasoning to think that one of the first results of the Convention will be to accelerate the work of the Conference at Vienna. The Germans are certainly coming down and capitulating on the question of the division of the assets. Those who had accused Denmark of obstinacy have suddenly changed their opinions, and now say that she shows herself very accommodating."

The Temps also refers to the question of Rome.

"To believe that the Italian Government will not think of Rome, and that Italy will also forget it, is, in our opinion, a strange illusion. To think that the Roman Government will succeed in the new trial it is called on to attempt is another. Events will necessarily and inevitably develope themselves according to the true logic of things. At a period which cannot at present be foreseen the temporal power will disappear. Italy will have its definitive capital, and all those interests will gain by it—the Pope, relieved of the material cares of politics, in moral authority; Italy, grouped around its natural centre, in assurance and strength; and France herself, supported by a nation restored to its normal conditions of security."

SPAIN.—The Cortes were dissolved by Royal decree on Friday. The new elections are to take place on the 22d of November. It is expected that the Progressist party will abandon their policy of abstaining from voting. An amnesty has been granted for all offences of the press. It is stated that Senor Pacheco will be appointed Spanish Ambassador to the Court of Rome.

SWITZERLAND.—The Federal Assembly was opened at Berne on Wednesday week. On Saturday the National Council ratified the treaty of commerce between France and Switzerland by 96 against 20 votes. The Council of the States commenced the discussion of the Treaty on Monday, and passed it on Wednesday by a majority of 31 to 11. The ratification of the treaty is thus an accomplished fact. The Council of the States has unanimously rejected the appeal of the Geneva Electoral Bureau against the Federal decision confirming the election of M. Chenevière, and has accorded full powers to the Federal Council in the matter. A lengthy report has been sent by the Federal Council to the Federal Assembly concerning the recent disturbances at Geneva. After detailing the events already known, and stating the measures adopted by the Federal commissioners to restore tranquillity, the report formally contradicts the rumour that the riots were occasioned by foreign influence. It recommends the Assembly to approve the steps taken by the Federal Council for the restoration of order at Geneva; to empower the Council to allow the Commissioners and the troops in occupation to remain at Geneva so long as circumstances shall require their presence; to authorise the necessary credit for the purpose, and to request the Council to lay a further report on this matter before the Assembly during the winter session.

DENMARK.—The Czarewitch arrived at Copenhagen on Monday night, and alighted at the hotel of the Russian Embassy. His betrothal to the Princess Dagmar, the second daughter of the King of Denmark, was formally announced on Wednesday evening at the Castle of Bernstorff.

JUTLAND.—An order of the Prussian Government directs that the army of occupation, numbering about 30,000 men, shall go into winter quarters in the towns of the eastern district of Jutland between Friedrichshaven and Horsens. A proclamation, dated the 20th ult. has been issued by General Hugo von Falkenstein, the Commander-in-Chief of the allied troops in Jutland. The General states that he has received official instructions from Copenhagen simply under cover to be forwarded to the Danish employés in Jutland. He adds that neither the present Administration of Jutland nor the Danish employés have any official intercourse with the Copenhagen Government. They depend solely upon the military Government of the province, from which alone the officials are to receive orders, and all acts in contravention thereof must be punished as offences against the present Government of Jutland. An order has since been issued prohibiting the entry of all Danish papers into Jutland, with the exception of the Berlingske Tidende, the Flyreposten, and the Illustrated Journal. It is also announced that as the revenue of Jutland is insufficient to pay for the provisions served out to the army of occupation, a duty will be levied from the beginning of October next on all goods coming from Denmark.

SCHLESWIG HOLSTEIN.—Marshal von Wrangel has returned to Berlin, and General von Gablenz has arrived in Schleswig from that city. After the termination of the manœuvres Prince Frederick Charles will return to Schleswig. The head-quarters of the Prussian army will be removed to the Palace of Glücksburg, which is to be put in readiness for that purpose. From 12 to 14 gunboats, two frigates, and two corvettes will remain during the winter in the harbour of Flensburg.

PRUSSIA.—The semi-official Nord Deutsche Zeitung, referring to Count von Bismark's despatch of the 31st of August, in reply to the English notes of the 20th ult., states that the former does not enter into the details of Earl Russell's note, but merely mentions that Prussia never called in question the rights of Christian IX., and could not, therefore, demand his renunciation of those rights. With regard to the apprehensions expressed of possible disadvantages to the nationalities of North Schleswig, Count von Bismark declares that they are unfounded, and says that the events which have transpired between the close of the London Conference and the conclusion of the preliminaries of peace have induced Prussia to return to her proposal of the 28th of May. In conclusion, he expresses his satisfaction that England is now paying more attention to the wishes of the Duchies than she did at the Conference, and rejoices that in this respect at least there is an assimilation of the views of the two Cabinets. The semi-official Provinzial Correspondenz of Wednesday says:—

"The delay in the peace negotiations, which has been entirely the fault of the Danes, has compelled the Allies to adopt every means to cause Denmark to hasten the work of pacification, especially by substituting more severe action for the forbearing manner in which the conditions of the armistice have hitherto been carried out. The Commander in Jutland has already taken some measures to arouse Denmark to a consciousness of the country being occupied by an enemy. It is to be hoped that these measures will suffice, and that the victors will not be compelled to make more serious application of the regulations of the armistice with the view of obtaining real peace."

The Governments of Bavaria and Wurtemberg have signified to the Prussian Government their desire to adhere to the Zollverein treaties of the 28th of June and the 11th of July of the present year. Counsellor Meixner, from Munich, has arrived in Berlin, and on Tuesday took part in the debates on the reconstruction of the Zollverein.

AUSTRIA.—The Duke de Grammont, the French Ambassador, arrived at Vienna on Wednesday, and on the following day presented to Count Rechberg the notification of the Franco-Italian Convention. The Europa of Tuesday asserts that Austria intends to protest against the Convention, as a flagrant breach of the Treaties of Villafranca and of Zurich. The Earl of Clarendon has arrived in Vienna from London on a mission from the British Government. The Neue Freie Presse of Wednesday says:—

"The Earl of Clarendon has explained to Count Rechberg the necessity for bringing the peace negotiations to a speedy issue. He also advocated the early inauguration of the rule of the Duke of Augustenburg, who would be recognised by England. Lord Clarendon further explained that the Italian question urgently required a solution, and that should Austria form a northern alliance to oppose the latest movement of the Franco-Italian policy, England would not co-operate with her, although the latter was ready to support Austria should she lean towards the policy of the Western Powers. To these overtures the Austrian Government reserved its reply."

A telegram from Vienna states that at the fifth sitting of the Conference, on Friday last, the Plenipotentiaries approved the proposals of the Committee for the settlement of the frontier. Denmark is preparing proposals for the settlement of the question of the Duchies having a share in the State property of the kingdom. The General Correspondenz denies the assertion of some journals that France had invited Austria to take part in the negotiations respecting Rome, and that the Franco-Italian convention had been drawn up in consequence of Austria declining the invitation.

BOHEMIA.—A horrible case of murder and cannibalism is reported from Eidlitz, in Bohemia. A man of wild and rude character, nick-named Russ, well known to the police, residing at the village of Quinan, was disappointed in matrimonial overtures he made to a girl of the village, who preferred marrying some one else. Filled with vengeance of a vague kind he went on the high road early on the morning of the 8th ult. with the determination of murdering the first woman he met. An old widow lady, named Conrad, in her 60th year, was proceeding to early mass at Quinan, when she met the ruffian, who at once compelled her to go with him into a lonely part of the forest, where, after committing violence on her, he killed her by throttling her with his hands. He next stripped her to the skin, cut off various parts of her body, and carried the fragments of flesh, together with her clothes, umbrella, and five florins, to his lodging. The next day he boiled the flesh with some potatoes, and consumed the whole of it, with the exception of the fat, which he skimmed from his cannibal stew and poured into a bottle. The latter he put in his pocket, and then went coolly to his work as usual, which he pursued until his arrest three days subsequently. The widow being missed by her friends, a search was made, and the naked and mutilated body—the arms, legs, breasts, and other parts having been cut off—was found in the wood. Russ was suspected by the police, and on being charged with the crime, confessed it at once, and gave all the horrible details. He awaits his trial at the prison of Kaaben.

BAVARIA.—Great excitement has been caused in the art circles of Munich by King Louis the elder having ordered that the three statues of Venus and the well-known Torso should be removed from the Glyptothek to a lumber-room in the new Pinakothek, where they can be no longer seen by the public. The attendants at the Glyptothek are instructed to inform all inquirers for these statues that they have been sent to be embossed. On moving the statues the servants contrived to let fall the most valuable one of the three, which cost 25,000 florins, and so complete has been the destruction that it will be impossible to restore it.

WURTEMBERG.—A change has taken place in the Ministry. Herren von Hugel, von Linden, and von Sigel have resigned, and the following appointments have been made:—Herr Varnbühler, Foreign Affairs; Herr Gessler, Interior; Herr Renner (provisionally), Finance; Herr Golther, Public Worship.

RUSSIA.—The Emperor of Russia arrived at Potsdam on Saturday, and had an interview with the King of Prussia. It is stated that the Emperor and Empress go to Nice towards the middle of October, where the Empress will pass the winter. An Imperial decree has been promulgated, ordering the issuing of 6,000,000 roubles in small silver coinage, and holding out the prospect of a further issue. A second decree sanctions the extension of the term for payment of the mortgage debts of landed proprietors for a period of 37 years. Financial statements are expected to be shortly issued by the Government.

POLAND.—The National Polish Government has issued a proclamation respecting the recent insurrection. The following is an abstract of this document:—

"Fifty thousand patriots have already been put to death in the field or on the scaffold; and 150,000 have been exiled for life to Siberia. But what is this out of a nation of forty millions of people, firmly resolved to win its freedom, sword in hand, or die in the struggle? The insurrection has only failed because the movement was restricted by its immediate leaders within too narrow limits. It was made a mere party contest, an armed demonstration instead of being an universal rising of the whole Polish race. Another error was the confidence reposed in the aid of foreign Powers. The Poles should have relied upon themselves alone, and should everywhere have risen as one man against their oppressors. Forty millions of hands can never be bound in chains by any earthly Power. The present is therefore but a transitional state. The struggle is only undergoing a transformation, and will be renewed on a far greater scale than before. What is called peace by the Russians is a far worse state for the Poles than war. Russia has vowed their destruction, and will carry on her designs without halt or pause, so long as she is able, whether there is an insurrection on foot or not. In that solitude which she calls peace, should she be able to establish it, she will silently but surely prosecute her more occult but equally efficacious methods for annihilating the race and nationality of Poland, without attracting the attention of the world. But when there is a struggle for independence going on, the eyes of mankind are turned to the conflict, and their moral sense is shocked, while their sympathy is enlisted and their indignation aroused, by the barbarous measures taken to suppress it. The Poles have no middle course between freedom and independence, won at the risk of life, or inevitable slavery and death for the individual, with the speedy annihilation of their nationality. It was the Poles who alone saved Europe from the sword and the superstition of the Turk, when John Sobieski, at the head of his Crusaders, routed the Moslem hosts before the gates of Vienna. And they have now as holy a cause to maintain, and as great a deliverance to win."

ITALY.—The accounts from all parts of Italy state that the Franco-Italian Convention has been received with the greatest satisfaction, except in Turin itself; and there seems to be but one opinion—that the kingdom has made a great advance towards the long desired unity by the arrangements entered into. Of the whole Italian press only two journals, the Gazetta del Popolo, the organ of Mazzini, and the Civita Cattolica, the clerical journal, are hostile to the Convention. Great dissatisfaction, however, exists at Turin, and the inhabitants view with dismay the proposed change of the seat of Government. The idea of seeing the city that has for ages been the capital of the House of Savoy becoming a provincial town, has been industriously held up, both by the Republican and the ultra-Church party, as an abandonment of a people so long devoted to the cause of United Italy. Under the influence of these representations the disturbances were renewed on the 22d ult. Groups of people assembled and raised seditious cries, throwing stones and firing shots before the Royal Palace. The police and troops stationed on the Piazza of San Carlo fired upon the populace, killing and wounding 20 persons. Several soldiers were severely wounded, and 10, with the colonel, were killed. In consequence of these events, the Ministry declared to the King that they were ready to retire from their posts should his Majesty think such a step necessary for the pacification of the city. They added that they had not previously resigned, as they did not wish to appear to avoid the responsibility. The King thereupon formally requested the Ministry to send in their resignations, and summoned General Della Marmora to form a new Cabinet. The announcement of this change of Ministry at once produced an excellent effect, and no rioting has since occurred. The new Cabinet is not yet completed, but Signori Lanza, Petitti, Pacini, and Sella have accepted the portfolios which were offered them, and negotiations are in progress with Baron Ricasoli and several other statesmen to complete the Ministry. It is asserted that the programme of General Della Marmora will be the execution of the stipulations of the Franco-Italian Treaty, including the transfer of the capital to Florence. A Royal decree has been issued postponing the opening of the Parliament from the 5th to the 24th of October. This delay has been determined on in order to afford time for the formation of a Cabinet. A remonstrance has been addressed by the Turin municipality to the Government, which says:—

"On the first announcement of the Franco-Italian Convention the universal sentiment was one of sincere satisfaction, but on learning the condition of the transfer of the capital the people remembered the vote of the Parliament proclaiming Rome as the capital of Italy. For the Turinese, as for the inhabitants of many other towns in Italy and abroad, the transfer of the capital signifies the renunciation of Rome. The Turinese have for a long time past sacrificed their material interests for the idea of Rome as the capital."

A popular meeting has been held at Turin, at which an address was voted to the Syndic expressing identical sentiments with those of the municipal address. A letter has been published from the captain commanding the Carabineers in the Castello Square on the night of the 21st ult., which states that the troops were not ordered to fire upon the people, but that the discharge took place by accident. The Osservatore Romano contradicts the statement that Count de Sartiges, the French ambassador, had had an interview with the Pope relative to the Franco-Italian convention, and states that the convention itself has not yet reached Rome. The French papers on the other hand assert that Count de Sartiges has communicated both to the Pope and Cardinal Antonelli a note from M. Drouyn de Lhuys, announcing the Franco-Italian Convention, at the same time intimating that the Government of the Emperor renewed its offer of advice, and promised its assistance in carrying out the measures which his Holiness might deem necessary to adopt in view of the state of things which the Pontifical Government might shortly have to meet. The Pope and Cardinal Antonelli declared almost simultaneously that they were not surprised at the announcement, since they were aware that the present status quo could not be maintained for ever by the presence of the French troops, and that the Emperor had always acted loyally, and had indicated that the intervention was essentially provisional. The Pope added that he had at that moment no observation to make relative to the engagements undertaken by Italy in reference to France, and requested time for mature reflection before communicating his impression of the effects the new state of things might have upon the Papacy. Monseigneur de Bonnechose, at the ceremony of receiving the Cardinal's hat, said that France had always wished, and still wished, guarantees for the temporal power of the Pope. The Emperor Napoleon also desired them, because he knew France too well not to be aware of this sentiment, and of the necessity for union between France and the Holy See. An important public meeting took place in Naples on Wednesday, at which all shades of Liberal politics were represented. General Tupputi of the National Guard presided. The meeting approved the Franco-Italian Convention, proclaimed Rome to be the capital of Italy, and Venice free; and called upon the Government to disregard municipal interests in choosing a provisional capital, and to consider the interests of the nation in making a choice, Naples herself having forgotten her rank as the first city of Italy in order to leave liberty of choice to the Government. Cheers were given for the King. A statement that Austria had protested against the Convention, and that war was probable, was received with applause. An unanimous subscription was made for the sufferers during the disturbances at Turin. The proceedings passed off with perfect order and gave general satisfaction.

DANUBIAN PRINCIPALITIES.—Six thousand peasants have lately arrived at Rouginossa, an estate belonging to Prince Couza, to express their gratitude for the decree making them landed proprietors. The Prince recommended them to forget their past sufferings, and to live as friends with their former masters.

TUNIS.—Advices from Tunis to the 23d ult. state that the garrison of Sousse had made a sortie, which was repulsed with loss. The insurgents were buying large quantities of arms.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—The Cape Mail has arrived with news from Table Bay to the 20th ult. The Cape Parliament was prorogued on the 26th July by the Governor Sir Philip Wodehouse, who stated that its assembly for the first time in Graham's Town had proved completely successful. Just before the prorogation the Legislative Council determined to annex British Caffraria—a resolution passed, it is said, after all but two of the western and midland members had left. Public meetings have been held in King William's Town repudiating the incorporation. The Governor was to have gone to Caffraria for a short sojourn, when he would proceed to the Free State to settle a dispute with Basutoland about the boundary line. The Hon. Richard Southey has been appointed Colonial Secretary in place of the Hon. R. W. Rawson, now in England. Efforts are making at the Cape to grow rice and linseed, and to manufacture tobacco.

INDIA. — The Overland Mail from Calcutta has arrived. There is no news of political interest except the announcement that preparations are still going on for the chastisement of the Bhootanees, unless they make ample reparation for the late insult to our envoy.

CHINA.—The capture of Nankin by the Imperialists is confirmed. The Taeping rebellion has thus been brought to a close. The city fell into the hands of the Imperialists, after several days' fighting, on the 19th July, together with the principal rebel leaders. The Tien-wang, the rebel Emperor, avoided the pain of witnessing this final disaster by taking gold-leaf two days previously. When the besiegers commenced their attack the Chung-wang escaped, with the Tien-wang's young son and several others, but was retaken, and the Kan-wang, who was called the Shield King, is also a prisoner.

NEW ZEALAND. — The Wanganui Chronicle of June 29th says that the head of Captain Lloyd has been recovered and sent to Taranaki for burial. It says :—

"Mr. Charles Broughton, of this place, having learnt that Captain Lloyd's head was in a pa on the Waitotara, and being promised the assistance of two of the Waitotara natives, without whose aid he says he could not have gained his object, went out to Waitotara on Saturday last, and having taken up his quarters at a friendly native's pa about two and a half miles from Perikama (the pa where Te Ua was with the head), he sent a messenger requesting an interview with Te Ua, who, accompanied by Hapurona, of Waitara, and some of the leading Taranaki and Ngatiruanui chiefs, with a following of nearly 100 men, made his appearance next morning about daylight. They entered the pa from both ends, armed to the teeth; and while the other sat down for a 'korero' about 35 remained standing, as if on guard. Te Ua then asked Mr. Broughton what he wanted. His reply was that, having heard that he had the head of an officer, an English gentleman, he, a private individual, feeling it an insult that it should remain so close to the settlement, had come, unarmed, and of his own accord, to request him to give it up. Te Ua made a long speech, chanting 'waiatas' and 'pai marire' songs, the purport being that he was anxious to be at peace and to do no evil. Mr. Broughton declined to enter on political subjects, and again asked for the head. After some difficulty it was delivered to him, and he arrived in town with it on Sunday. The head, we understand, is almost perfect, merely wanting part of the under jaw, and is easily recognisable. Ensign Cumming will take it to Taranaki for burial."

UNITED STATES.—General M'Clellan's declaration that the Union must be preserved at all hazards, has caused a split in the Democratic party. Several members of the peace section declare that General M'Clellan has accepted the nomination without the platform; that he does not represent the sentiments of the convention, and that they will not support his election. The leading peace organ, the New York Daily News, asserts that measures are on foot to reassemble the convention and nominate a new ticket. Mr. Vallandigham, however, who at first concurred in this opposition to McClellan, delivered a speech at Dayton, Ohio, on the 16th ult., in which he declared his intention to support him. It is also said that the M'Clellan ratification meetings at New York, Washington, and throughout the North have been great successes, and that much enthusiasm was manifested in his favour. The New York World congratulates the Democrats on being free of the Peace party. The Republican Ticket has been elected in Maine. The election of Mr. Lincoln is preferred by the Southern journals to that of General M'Clellan, whether regarded from the peace or the war point of view. General Lee has been reinforced from Early's corps. According to both Federal and Confederate accounts, Grant and Lee are concentrating their forces about Petersburg, and it is believed that a great battle for the possession of the Weldon Railway is imminent. General Grant arrived in Washington on the 16th ult. for the purpose of appealing to the Government for more men, and of urging the immediate enforcement of the draft. General Sherman had previously written a letter to the same effect. Secretary Stanton accordingly ordered the draft to take place on the 19th ult. in all those States which had not supplied their full quota. General Sheridan attacked the Confederates under General Early, on the morning of the 18th ult. A furious battle ensued, which lasted throughout the day, and is said by the Northern journals to have resulted in a defeat of Early and his retreat up the Shenandoah Valley, with a loss of 2500 prisoners, five cannon, and 5000 killed and wounded, among whom were Generals Rhodes, Warton, and Shalder. The Federal loss was 3000, including General Russell among the killed. After the battle Sheridan occupied Winchester. The report from New Orleans that Admiral Farragut's Monitors had anchored within shelling range of Mobile is discredited at Washington. Official despatches from the Admiral of the 12th make no mention of it. Letters from New Orleans of the 7th state that 2500 of General Granger's troops have returned to that city from Mobile harbour, and will shortly be despatched upon an expedition in a new direction. Southern journals publish rumours that Admiral Farragut's fleet is about to attack Wilmington. On the 7th inst. Gen. Sherman pursued Gen. Hood's army to his head-quarters at the rear of Lovejoy's Station, but finding the Confederates in force and strongly entrenched he withdrew, having accomplished the great object of the campaign, the capture of Atlanta; around which his army is now encamped. General Sherman has since ordered all citizens to leave Atlanta with their moveable property, and to proceed north or south. General Hood obtained 10 days' truce for this purpose, but protested against the cruelty of the order. General Sherman, in a congratulatory order to his army on the 8th, attributes his success at Atlanta to Hood's mistake in sending the Confederate cavalry to the Federal rear beyond the reach of speedy recall, which enabled him to make his flank movement to Jonesborough without fear of being cut off from his communications. It was rumoured that Sherman with a large force was reinforcing Grant. The Confederate cavalry under General Hampton on the 16th made a raid within Grant's lines, capturing 2500 cattle, opposite Harrison's landing. One whole regiment of Grant's cavalry, which pursued them, were captured. The Confederates, under Generals Price and Shelley, are preparing another invasion of Missouri. The Democratic State Convention, assembled at Albany, has nominated Governor Seymour and Lieutenant-Governor Jones for re-election in November. The steamer Georgia, captured by the Federal steamer Niagara off Lisbon, has arrived at Fortress Monroe in a disabled condition. Thirty Confederates from Canada have captured two steamers on Lake Erie. It is supposed that they will attempt the rescue of the prisoners on Johnson Island.

MEXICO.—The latest advices state that Juarez had been driven from Monterey into Chihuahua. 5000 French attacked Cortinas at Matamoras on the 6th ult. During the engagement the Confederates on the Rio Grande, under Colonel Forde, espoused the cause of the French and attacked Cortinas. The Federal forces stationed at Bruzos de Santiago then attacked and drove Forde off. After the engagement Cortinas crossed the river and occupied Brownsville, Texas, where he hoisted the Federal flag, declared himself an American citizen, and offered the services of his troops to the Federal Government. The truth of this news is doubted in New Orleans.

ELECTION OF LORD MAYOR.—On Thursday, being Michaelmas Day, the Liverymen of the City of London met in Guildhall for the purpose of electing a Lord Mayor. The choice fell on Aldermen Hale and Phillips, the two senior aldermen below the chair. These names were sent to the Court of Aldermen, who selected Alderman Hale, who will, therefore, be Lord Mayor for the ensuing year.

THE NEW SHERIFFS.—The ceremony of administering the oaths to the sheriffs for the ensuing year, Alderman Dakin and Alderman Besley, took place on Wednesday at Guildhall. The new sheriffs commence their duties on Thursday, in presiding at the election of the new Lord Mayor.

COMMITTAL OF MULLER.—On Monday morning the prisoner Müller was brought both before the coroner's jury and the police magistrate at Bow Street. The inquest commenced first. The evidence given before the coroner was little more than a repetition of what is already known, the chief points on which corroborative testimony was produced, being that of the hat found in the railway carriage and stated to have belonged to Müller, and that of the hat found in his possession at New York, and identified as having been the property of Mr. Briggs. With regard to the former, Matthews the cabman, who had already identified it as the hat which he bought for Müller in Marylebone, was again subjected to cross-examination by Müller's legal adviser, and it is evident that an attempt will be made at the trial to discredit his evidence. With regard to the other hat it will be remembered that when Mr. Briggs's son was first called upon to identify it he expressed an opinion that while similar in other respects to the one worn by his father, it differed from it in appearing to be rather more than an inch shorter. This admission was at once fastened upon by the solicitor for the defence, who evidently thought that the admission on the part of the son would tend greatly to the benefit of the prisoner. It was now shown, however, that this fact has materially added to the strength of the case as against the prisoner. Mr. Digance, the hatter of the Royal Exchange, identified the hat as having been supplied by him to Mr. Briggs, who had been a regular customer of his for 35 years, &c. He distinctly deposed that it had been cut down an inch or more, the part cut out being close to the brim, and the hat itself having been again put together by a neat piece of sewing, an operation which would not have been performed by a hatter, who would have refastened the brim with composition. Mr. Digance added that the part cut off was that on which he usually put the name of the customer. This evidence was confirmed by that of the man who actually made the hat, and who identified it by a private mark still visible. Other witnesses proved that Mr. Brigg's hat was in the possession of Müller immediately after the 9th of July. After hearing this evidence, with other facts relating to the pawning of the watch and the medical testimony, the jury, after an absence of 20 minutes, returned the following verdict:—

"That deceased died from the effects of foul violence, inflicted on him in a first-class carriage of the North London Railway on the night of the 9th of July last, and we find that Franz Müller is the man by whom that violence was committed."

The Coroner said that this was equivalent to a verdict of wilful murder. The Foreman said that the jury also wished to append to their verdict the following:—

"The jury, while passing their verdict, take this opportunity of expressing their dissatisfaction with the present state of railway accommodation, as affording facilities for the perpetration of various crimes and offences, and earnestly desire to call the attention of the Home Government to the subject, and to the necessity of enforcing the adoption by railway companies of some more effectual system of protection to life, character, and property."

The verdict of "Wilful Murder against Franz Müller" was then recorded, and the coroner made out his warrant committing him to Newgate for trial. At the Police Court, after the new evidence in reference to the hats had been added to the depositions, the prisoner said that he had nothing to say now, and his legal adviser stated that the defence would be reserved to a future day. The names of the several witnesses were then called over, and all parties were bound over to prosecute at the next sessions at the Central Criminal Court, which will be held on the 24th October next. The prisoner was then formally committed for trial on the charge of wilful murder. The instant his committal became known there was great excitement among the hundreds who had congregated to see him taken away in the van. Throughout Bow Street there was not a window which was not crowded with people four and five deep, while the street itself was completely blocked with the sight-seers. Soon after 5 o'clock the van drove up to the door of the court, and Müller, in charge of Superintendent Durkin, was taken into the street. The moment he was seen a tremendous shouting arose. He was hurried into the van, which at once drove away, and the people gradually dispersed.

The New Ride in St. James's Park.—The arrangements for the new ride in St. James's Park, similar in many respects to that of Rotten Row in Hyde Park, are rapidly approaching completion. It appears that during the sitting of Parliament, considerable inconvenience has been felt on account of the number of vehicles and people on horseback proceeding along Birdcage Walk, and that this inconvience will be much increased when the Thames embankment is opened. The First Commissioner therefore determined to form a new route from the Houses of Parliament, along the Birdcage Walk, to Buckingham Palace; the whole interval between two rows of trees, nearly as wide as the Mall on the north side, being added to the old causeway, one portion to form a carriage thoroughfare; the other, under the shade, to be reserved for equestrians. The alterations will in no way affect the trees in the Park, which will remain as at present.

The Malta and Alexandria Telegraph.—Messrs. Glass, Elliot, & Co., have announced the re-opening of the Malta and Alexandria Telegraph, for the transmission of messages to Egypt, India, China, Australia, &c.

The Main Drainage Scheme.—At the last meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works 11 tenders for the engines of the Abbey Mills pumping station were opened. Mr. Slaughter's estimate was 112,500*l.*; Messrs. Sandys, Bedding, & Co., 87,000*l.*; Messrs. Hardy & Co., 88,700*l.*; Harvy & Co., 88,000*l.*; Mr. J. Fleming, 111,000*l.*; Messrs. G. Forrester & Co., 78,450*l.*; Messrs. James Watt & Co., 60,900*l.*; Messrs. T. Rothwell & Co., 54,570*l.*; Messrs. D. Adamson & Co., 82,590*l.*; Mr. Robert Dalgliesh, 70,560*l.*; and Messrs. Maudslay & Field, 134,228*l.* The Board accepted the tender of Messrs. T. Rothwell & Co., subject to the usual inquiries.

Statue to Sir James Outram.—The Thames Embankment Committee reported to the Metropolitan Board of Works at their last meeting, that having considered the letter from the First Commissioner of her Majesty's Works, relative to the erection of a statue of Sir James Outram on land reclaimed by the Thames Embankment, they were of opinion that the application should receive the most favourable consideration of the Board, the question of the exact site and other details being reserved for future determination. The report was unanimously agreed to.

New Roman Churches at Barnet and Waltham.—The first stone of a Roman Catholic Church at Barnet has just been laid by Bishop Morris. The church is to be Gothic in character, and the architects are Messrs. Willson & Nicholl. It will be about 50 feet long by 32 wide, and will accommodate about 200 persons. Another Roman Catholic Church was opened last Sunday at Waltham.

Fire at the City Telegraph Station. — At a late hour on Monday night a fire broke out in the Telegraph Station in Threadneedle Street, and at first assumed a most serious aspect. The fire occurred in the stationery room of the Magnetic Company and soon spread to the premises of the Submarine below. Eight engines, four of which were worked by steam, were speedily got to work, but the fire was not subdued until the premises were considerably damaged, and many of the electric machines destroyed. Mr. B. Langham, of the North British and Mercantile Fire Office, and two firemen had a narrow escape with their lives by beams falling on them, and received severe contusions. The loss will fall on the London, Liverpool, and other offices. The operations of both companies have not been interrupted by the fire.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths registered in London in the week that ended Saturday, September 24, were 1229. The average number in the corresponding week of 10 years, 1854-63, excluding the deaths from cholera in 1854 and corrected for increase of population, was 1181. The present return is therefore 48 above the average. During the week the births of 975 boys and 978 girls, in all 1953 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1881.

Provincial.

Canterbury.—A number of the ladies of Canterbury recently got up a subscription to defray the cost of placing a figure of the Dean of Canterbury in one of the new niches of the cathedral, as a tribute of the esteem entertained for him. So soon, however, as intimation of this intention was given to Dean Alford, he declined the compliment, and suggested that the figure of Edward the Black Prince should be substituted. It is understood that the dean's suggestion will be carried out.

Driffield.—The whole of the incendiaries proved and supposed to have been implicated in the disastrous series of fires in the stack-yards of the Wold district last winter are now believed to be in the hands of the police. During the imprisonment of Sherwood, the incendiary who is now with two others under penal servitude, he implicated two men known as "Lurcher Slenderman," and "Big Ben" as parties to certain of the Wold fires. Slenderman was examined before the Driffield Bench at the time, and liberated on recognisances to appear when called on, but being guilty of riotous conduct and threatening to repeat the Wold fires at Rillington a fortnight ago, he was sent to prison by the Malton Bench and is secure for six or seven months to come. Since Slenderman's committal Superintendent Young, of Driffield, has traced Big Ben, who has been wanted ever since the fires. This man was brought before the Driffield Bench last week, and the evidence against him being similar to that against Slenderman, he was liberated upon recognisances to appear when called upon. When living in the Malton district he was a notorious poacher, and a warrant has been held for his apprehension for nearly five years. He was at once taken to Norton, where he was brought before the magistrates on Saturday, charged with night poaching on Lord Middleton's estate at Grimston, in 1859, and using a net and dog to take game. After hearing the statement of the keeper, the Bench remanded the prisoner for a week. Thus the Wold farmers are relieved from another cause of apprehension.

Grantham.—A public meeting was held in the Town Hall last week, to concert measures for the restoration of the fine old parish church. Earl Brownlow occupied the chair, and stated that Mr. G. G. Scott had thoroughly examined the fabric, and prepared an elaborate report. The alterations and restorations he had recommended would cost about 14,000*l.* The subscription list now amounts to 6000*l.*

Guildford.—At the Hatch Gate, at Merrow, a mile and a half from this town, resides Elijah Wyatt, a man aged about 60, and adjoining his cottage is that of a Mrs. Keil. Between these neighbours a feud has long existed, the woman claiming a right of way through Wyatt's yard to the common well. Wyatt finding that Mrs. Keil persisted, in spite of his remonstrances, in "trespassing," as he called it, upon his premises, drove in some stakes on Thursday week, and placed a heap of wood against her back door, so as to bar her out of his yard. Upon this she remonstrated with him while he held in his hand the axe with which he had been driving in the stakes. On his threatening to do her some bodily injury, she called Mrs. Hill, an old woman 60 years of age, to her assistance, whereupon Wyatt became exasperated, and felled Mrs. Hill by a severe blow with the flat side of the axe upon her neck. He then attempted to do the same to Mrs. Keil, but she closed with him and tried to get the axe out of his hands. Some neighbours coming up the man was disarmed, and shortly afterwards given into custody. A surgeon, who examined Mrs. Hill's wounds, found them of an alarming character; and on Friday Wyatt was taken before a magistrate, and remanded for a week.

Ilminster.—The funeral of Captain Speke took place on Friday in a vault under the church of Dowlish Wake, near this town, in the presence of a large concourse of people. Captain Grant, Dr. Livingstone, and Sir Roderick Murchison were among the mourners.

Ipswich.—It is announced that in order to avoid all interference with the Bristol Church Congress, the "Congress" or "aggregate meeting" of clerical and lay members of the Church of England residing in the eastern counties, which it was proposed to hold at Ipswich in the present month, is deferred until next spring.

Kendal.—Lord Brougham completed his 86th birthday on Monday week. To commemorate the event, and as a tribute of admiration to the venerable peer, Mr. Joseph Wilkinson, of Bonscale, Ullswater, a veteran politician, who in former days took a very active part in his lordship's Westmoreland contests, has erected a stone memorial pillar on the summit of Hallen Hag, which overhangs the lake immediately above Howtown. It stands 12 feet high, and is an object conspicuous enough to be seen from Cross Fell with the aid of a good glass.

Leeds.—At a meeting of the shareholders of the Leeds Banking Company on Wednesday, the committee of investigation presented a statement showing a total liability of 1,330,308*l.*, and assets of only 826,695*l.* At the termination of the discussion it was resolved to wind up, and three liquidators were appointed to carry out the resolution. It was stated to the meeting that the committee had already taken the preliminary steps for this purpose by presenting a petition to the Court of Chancery, which will be supported by Messrs. Smith, Payne, & Co., and by other individual creditors in Leeds and the neighbourhood. The serious difficulties in which the bank is placed may be judged of by the fact that a call will have to be made of nearly 120*l.* upon each of the 7340 shares. It has also been discovered that Mr. J. W. Marsden, an ironmaster, who has absconded to America, and to whom the bank had made large advances, had by himself and his cashier forged bills to the amount of 80,000*l.* Mr. Thomas Skaife, his cashier and brother in law, was brought before the magistrates on Saturday, charged with the forgery, when he confessed the whole matter, alleging that more than one thousand entries in one book relate to bills, every one of which was forged. He was committed for trial.

Middlesborough. — On Friday afternoon, Henry Kerne, a German Jew, residing in Vine Street, in this town, murdered his son Daniel, aged five and a half years, by nearly cutting his head off with a razor. He afterwards cut his own throat, and immediately expired. It appears that he had quarrelled with his wife, who had threatened to leave him, and that he had complained bitterly of her conduct in stripping the place of its furniture. He had also for some time suffered from the loss of his eyesight, and this, with the unhappy state of his domestic arrangements, is assigned as the motive of the deed.

Milford.—The natural advantages of this harbour are at last about to be turned to some practical account, and, as a first step in that direction, the foundation stone of the Hubberston Docks has been laid, and the works are already in progress. The new Milford Docks are also to be commenced without delay, and there is every probability that the Newton Noyes Ocean Pier will be carried out as well. A line of railway is proposed to Fishguard and Cardigan, which will place the port in direct communication with the great narrow gauge systems of the country.

Newcastle on Tyne.—A Protestant monastery, which promises to rival that of Brother Ignatius at Norwich, has been established in this town, with a view to the education of the poor, the visitation of the sick, the propagation of the doctrines of the Church of England, and preaching. The chief of the new fraternity, to which is to be assigned the title of the "English Order of Mercy," is the Rev. Brother Paul, of Bloomfield Terrace, Grosvenor Road, London. The brothers will live in community, and their habit is a black serge cassock and belt, with a sombrielto for the head. The rules are that all shall rise at 6 every morning, when prayer, meditation, and other matters occupy the time till breakfast. Their duties will then commence and last till 12, when dinner is served. Recreation is allowed till 2. Duties again till 5. Tea at 7; and office and chapel till 10, when all retire to rest. The superior states that none will be allowed to join the order unless they can produce good testimonials as to their efficiency and good living. The novitiate lasts for six months, at the expiration of which the vows of poverty, chastity, and implicit obedience are taken. The order is very poor, and the superior is appealing to the public for help, as the establishment is to be opened this month.

Oxford.—The Archbishop of Canterbury, as Visitor of All Souls' College, has given judgment in the case of "Watson and Freemantle (Appellants) v. the Warden and Fellows of All Souls' College, Oxford (Respondents). His Grace confirms the report of his assessors, Sir John T. Coleridge and Dr. Travers Twiss, and in conformity with their recommendation, advises that on the day of election, after the service in the chapel, the business of the election shall take precedence of all other, and, until that be concluded, none other shall be entered upon. In regard to costs, his Grace suggests to the warden and fellows that, if their costs be paid out of a common college fund, those of the appellants should also be paid out of the same fund.—Mr. Benjamin Waters, for many years the faithful servant of Dr. Stanley, Dean of Westminster, died at the Deanery on the 21st ult., after having in the previous week lost two children, aged five and seven years. He was buried on Monday at the Holywell Cemetery in this city. Dr. Stanley, who travelled many miles for the purpose of performing the last services of the Church over the body of a devoted and affectionate domestic, was much affected during the ceremony. Lady Augusta Stanley, to mark her respect for the deceased, attended in company with Dr. Jacobson, Regius Professor of Divinity, as one of the mourners.

RIPON.—At the annual dinner of the Ripon and Clare Agricultural Society on Friday, Earl de Grey and Ripon, in replying to the toast of "The Ministry," spoke as follows on the subject of war and taxation :—

"He remembered that on one occasion when the Premier had to return thanks for the same toast in an assembly containing men of all parties, he assured those who differed from him that they might most conscientiously and honestly drink the health of her Majesty's Ministers, inasmuch as the best thing which could possibly happen to their physical health would be their being turned out of office. But he did not now feel it necessary to give a similar assurance, as he hoped that those present did not disapprove the main principles which had guided the general conduct of her Majesty's Government in the administration of the affairs of the country. The task which they had had before them during the past twelve months had been one of no ordinary difficulty, and one which it would be easily believed had caused them no ordinary anxiety. They saw going on in Europe an attempt, which they held to be unjustifiable and violent, to invade the rights of a small nation on the part of certain great Powers for objects of which they could not approve, and in a cause with which they could feel no sympathy. They were entitled to lift up their voice in common with the other great Powers of Europe who were not belligerents in the quarrel, and freely to express their opinions upon the questions at issue. They did so, but they were not bound—this country was not bound—by any treaty engagement which rendered it a point of honour with them to engage in the quarrel on the part of Denmark. If that had been the case her Majesty's present Government would not have hesitated for a moment—no Government that could exist in this country would have hesitated at once to draw the sword in any quarrel in which the honour and good faith of England was engaged. But the treaty to which England was a party was one to which other great Powers of Europe were parties also, and it was right, it was wise, he thought, on the part of prudent men that they should endeavour to go hand in hand with those other Powers. They were not called upon by any special obligation to engage single-handed in a contest in which others were as much interested as the English Government; and although they made known their sympathies—although they did not hesitate to assure the other great Powers that they were prepared to co-operate with them in any measures they might mutually agree upon—yet they did not feel they should be justified in involving this country in the enormous evils of war when they found France and Russia unprepared to drive matters to that extremity, and unwilling to follow them in that path. He believed that in the course the Government then took—that was to say, in the efforts they made for the preservation of peace, and in their determination not to bring war upon this country—they were supported by the great body of the people of every shade of opinion. The maintenance of peace was of the first importance to the agriculture, industry, and commerce of this country; but that could only be done by the outlay of money for naval and military purposes. If they desired to see the flag of England maintained untarnished, and its reputation unsullied, they must be prepared to pay for it. But he believed—and the story of the last few years was there to prove it—that there were few, it may, men in this country who were not prepared to pay the price of national honour and national security. Her Majesty's Government under his noble friend Lord Palmerston, whose name would go down to posterity connected more than any other man with the national defence of England—had shown their determination to place those defences on a satisfactory footing. But, on the other hand, this he could say, that her Majesty's Government were as anxious as any men in the country to bring the expenditure of the country within the narrowest limits consistently with the requirements of the public service; and by that means to effect every reduction of taxation that might be legitimately possible. Although the Chancellor of the Exchequer would have the money which was needed for the public service, there was no man in the country, he would undertake to say, who was more zealous than he in the cause of financial reform. But it must be borne in mind that we had a vast empire extending into every quarter of the globe, and that our ships were in every port, and our commerce was upon every sea, and if he did not misinterpret the feelings of this country, though sometimes there was grumbling at the cost of colonial expenditure and of naval armaments, they were not prepared to abandon their colonies, or give up their commerce. If they were not prepared for that, and if they wished to remain a great nation, spreading their arms unto every part of the world, and enfolding the globe within them, they must be prepared to bear the various burdens and discharge the various duties of that great position."

ROMFORD.—A shocking murder was committed at Chadwell Heath, near this town, on Saturday. A woman named Blunt had for some time cohabited with Francis Wane, a man of irregular habits and occupation. They had separated, however, and she was about to be married on Sunday to another man. On Saturday the father of the intended husband found her dead with her throat cut in three places. Suspicion fell upon Wane, and pursuit being made, a man answering his description was captured with stains of blood upon his clothes. He was examined on Thursday at the Stratford Police Court, when the principal evidence against him was his having been near the cottage at the time of the murder, and the footmarks observed going to and from the place, which corresponded with some peculiar malformation of the prisoner's feet. He was remanded for a week. At the inquest on Wednesday several witnesses swore to the fact that the prisoner had threatened on various occasions to take the life of the murdered woman. The policeman proved that the boots worn by the prisoner corresponded with the footmarks seen near the cottage; and two of the inmates of Ilford Gaol, who were brought up in custody, deposed that when the prisoner was lodged there on Monday, he told them that he had committed the murder. The jury immediately returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the prisoner.

RUGBY.—The Rev. T. N. Hutchinson, M.A., Second Master of King Edward's School, Birmingham, has been appointed by Dr. Temple to take charge of the scientific department of Rugby School, in order to carry out the suggestions of the Royal Commissioners with regard to the more systematic teaching of natural and experimental science in public schools.

STOCKPORT.—On Monday, at the borough police court, a man named John Ridgway was committed to take his trial at the ensuing sessions upon several charges of obtaining goods by false pretences. The facts disclosed in the course of an inquiry, which has occupied a considerable time, show that the prisoner was a member of the "long firm." He was first charged with obtaining a number of Cochin China fowls from Mrs. Seddon, of Arborfield, Reading. In August last Mrs. Seddon advertised in the Field newspaper that she had several fowls of that description to dispose of, and, in the course of a few days, received a letter signed "W. B. Lloyd," with a reference to the Union Bank, Manchester, asking her to send the fowls to the Stockport station, promising to transmit the money (4*l.*) in due course. The fowls were sent as requested, and arrived at their destination; but in the meantime inquiries had been set on foot as to the identity of "W. B. Lloyd, Esq.," with John Ridgway, the prisoner, and when he appeared at the station to fetch the fowls he was detained. It could not at first be ascertained by whom the fowls had been sent, and the inquiries set on foot for that purpose revealed extensive transactions of a suspicious character in which the prisoner had been engaged. Mr. Hays, house agent, near Manchester, in one of whose houses the prisoner and his wife had lived for some months, in the name of Greenhalgh, described an enormous quantity of articles he had seen arrive at the house, addressed to "Horace G. Gladstone." Among these were nine barrels of soft soap, two dozen of clocks, and a large case of leather. Recently a London firm, who had supplied the prisoner with 200*l.* worth of jewellery, sent down two clerks to inquire into his respectability, as he had written for a fresh supply. Mr. John Price, station-master at the Chelford station on the London and North-Western Railway, told the Court that in April last he had delivered to the prisoner, who said his name was Gladstone, two thorough-bred Alderney bulls and six Alderney heifers, worth about 130*l.*, which had been forwarded by Mr. J. Stubbs, farmer, of Upmarden, Suffolk; and a police officer named Rogers, who had known the prisoner for several years, during which time he was working at an iron foundry in Gorton, Lancashire, also described a few of his dealings. While living at Gorton, packages and parcels used to arrive almost daily, among the articles enumerated by the witness being cases of wine, six barrels of ale from Glasgow, perambulators, stone bottles of liquor, cases of jet ornaments, &c. On one occasion he obtained a gun worth 30*l.* from a clergyman in Cheshire, and on the following day a warrant was issued for the apprehension of the prisoner, but when the officer went to execute it it was found that he had left the neighbourhood about an hour before. There are several other charges against the prisoner, most of which will doubtless be entered into at the sessions; among them that of having received from Portsmouth a white-nosed monkey, valued at 3*l.*; a peacock and hen, from the same locality; and a gun valued at 10*l.*, from Mr. James Shakespeare, Cotton Hill, Shrewsbury.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—A meeting of coal masters was held in this town last week, when a deputation was appointed to confer with the Earl of Lichfield as Lord Lieutenant of the County, and the magistrates of the district as to the means to be adopted to put a stop to the illegal assemblages which are now meeting daily in various parts of the district for the purpose of intimidation, and preventing the continuing at work of those colliers who are not mixed up with the strike in the Dudley district. The masters expressed their strong determination not to give way in the matter of the wages; and it was shown that although they have not been brought before the public, very gross cases of intimidation have been practised. Eighteen thousand miners are now on strike in the Black Country, and the number is rapidly increasing. The offered mediation of the Mayor of Birmingham and a committee of gentlemen has been declined by both parties.

VENTNOR.—A drinking fountain has been erected at Black Gang, at the back of the Isle of Wight, dedicated in an inscription "to the memory of Shakespeare." The fountain has been erected by Mr. Letts, a gentleman residing at Black Gang.

YORK.—The eighth annual meeting of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science commenced in this city on the 22d ult., when Lord Brougham, the President, delivered his inaugural address. This address, which was of great length, touched upon almost every subject of interest which has occupied public attention during the year, including extradition treaties, colonial policy, the American war, the plan for abridging the labours of Parliamentary Committees, Mr. Gladstone's scheme of Government insurance, the Lord Chancellor's County Courts Bill, the compilation of judicial statistics, the sewerage problem, the security of railway passengers, the present position of the convict system, the establishment of cooking depôts for the working classes, Mr. Lawson's Permissive Bill, the policy of foreign Governments, including the conduct of Prussia towards Denmark, the emancipation of the serfs in Russia, the oppression of Poland, the development of public instruction in France, the changes in the French code of bankruptcy, and the continuance of restrictions on liberty and the doctrines of Duke de Persigny. On the 23d, Sir J. P. Wilde, the President of the Jurisprudence Department, delivered an introductory address on land reform, after which the business of the several departments was regularly commenced. These departments were four in number—viz., Jurisprudence, Education, Health, and Economy and Trade. To the Jurisprudence Department was annexed a Reformatory Section, to deal with the special subject of the treatment of criminals, and a General Average Section, for the discussion of the draught of a code prepared by the International General Average Committee. An Agricultural Section was added to the department of Economy and Trade, to which were referred the subjects of statute history, the sale and transport of cattle, &c. The important department of Education was presided over by the Archbishop of York, who delivered an opening address of great interest on the subject of public schools and middle-class education. In the department of Health Sir Charles Hastings on Tuesday delivered an address of great importance on the subject of the public health, and on Wednesday Mr. E. Chadwick delivered the inaugural address in the department of Economy and Trade. Among the subjects discussed in the different sections were the Law of Real Property, the Legal Profession, Insanity, Prison Discipline, Public Schools and Grammar Schools, Juvenile Labour, the Utilisation of Town Sewage, the Patent Laws, the Laws of Maritime Warfare and their effect on Commerce, Government Security for Small Investments, the Social Condition of the Cotton Districts, the Co-operative Movement, &c. Delegates attended from Antwerp, Amsterdam, Bremen, Boston, Hamburg, Lübeck, Copenhagen, Russia, and other places abroad, to hear the discussions on the subject of marine insurance and general average—a matter of much importance to the merchants and shipowners of all nations. A grand banquet took place on Saturday, and a conversazione on Tuesday, and the proceedings terminated on Thursday the 29th.

LORD DONEGAL AND THE MASONIC BODY.—A reply has been received from the Marquis of Donegal to the official communication recently addressed to him by the Grand Lodge of Ireland, requiring an explanation of the violation of one of the standing orders of Masonry in the introduction of subjects having a political character at the recent Masonic Festival in Belfast. In his reply Lord Donegal candidly admits his error, and expresses his regret at having selected that occasion to make observations whose tendency and character the Masonic Body had reason to complain of. His lordship's reply will be laid before the Grand Lodge on Thursday next, and will then be fully considered.

MURDER IN KILKENNY.—The Kilkenny Moderator gives an account of the discovery of a murder under singular circumstances. A Mr. Maher, a farmer, was overtaken by the rain in a lonely locality near Freshford on Sunday week, and with a view to sheltering himself made his way to a small disused culvert. The roof being quite low, he found it necessary to crouch on his hands and knees in order to get in. On stooping to enter, he was surprised to see the passage at the further end obstructed by what was evidently the body of a man in a recumbent position. Thinking that some wayfarer had fallen asleep, he asked if he was asleep. Receiving no reply, he scrutinised the object with care, and observing that stones were placed on various parts of the body, became suspicious that some foul deed had been committed. The deceased, with the exception of the hat, had all his clothes on, and the pockets were not disturbed. Around the throat was found a red handkerchief, bound so tightly as to leave deep indentations in the neck. There were also scratches, as if caused by the nails of a person's fingers, down the neck at either side, and from the rigid state of the body it was evident the unfortunate man must have been dead from 20 to 24 hours. At the inquest held on the body the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against some person or persons unknown.

SHARKS IN THE FORTH.—On Monday morning, while Mr. Barland, druggist, of Edinburgh, and some other gentlemen were bathing outside the eastern breakwater at Granton, a shark suddenly rose and seized him by the leg, biting him in three places. Fortunately, Mr. Barland was near the bulwarks; and notwithstanding the severe nature of the injuries he had sustained, he was able to get out of the water. The shark was afterwards seen by the other bathers, who estimated it at about three feet in length.

ACCIDENT TO AN EXPRESS TRAIN.—On Monday morning, as the down morning express boat train on the London, Chatham, and Dover line was passing over the embankment at Penge, the engine left the rails, and after running for 200 yards over the sleepers and permanent way, fell upon its side down the embankment, dragging with it a second-class carriage containing three or four passengers, including one of the company's workmen, whose leg was broken. The first-class carriages not having left the line, all the passengers, of whom there were about 30, escaped uninexcept one, an Engineer officer stationed at Chatham, whose shin was grazed. The driver and stoker of the engine stuck to their posts, and were both slightly hurt; but the guard was able to proceed to Dover with most of the passengers in a special train which was sent down from Victoria immediately upon telegraphic notice of the accident reaching London.

Collision on the Great Eastern.—On Tuesday morning at an early hour a goods train from Norwich on reaching the Thetford Station ran into a train of empty cattle trucks, with a third-class carriage attached. This carriage was fortunately empty, or there would have been a great loss of life, as the carriage was completely smashed, as were several of the cattle trucks. The engine of the goods train sustained some damage, but the driver and stoker escaped without serious injury. The collision caused a great wreck of plant, and the up-line was blocked for some hours.

Collision near Bradford.—About midnight on the 14th ult., on the arrival of the Doncaster express at the Laister Dyke Station on the Leeds, Bradford, and Halifax Junction, the porters in charge detached from it two carriages for the Bradford branch, while the rest of the train went on to Halifax. The two carriages, in which were 30 or 40 passengers, were left standing, without any red signal lamp attached to them, on the main line. Meanwhile an empty train of carriages came up in the direction of Bradford, and the man at the signals not being aware that the carriages were standing on the down line, gave no signal. The result was that the train of empty carriages ran into the two carriages, one of which, a first-class, was broken, and the passengers in it were all more or less injured; while in the other all the passengers were severely stunned and shaken. Mr. F. Hurst from Bradford had four ribs broken, and was otherwise severely injured. Mr. Jacob Newboult of Kirkdale had one rib broken. Mr. John Laycock of Ivegate, and Mr. H. Nicholson of Westgate received severe internal injury.

Railway Refreshment Rooms.—A coroner's inquest was held at Enfield on Saturday on the body of Mr. Henry Leggatt, the well-known printseller of Cornhill. It appeared that during a recent journey to Manchester, he bought a bason of soup at the Rugby station and swallowed a nail with it. The agony he suffered appears to have been intense. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death." It is stated that the deceased had just effected an insurance against accidents of all kinds with the Railway Passengers Assurance Company, of which his family will reap the benefit under these circumstances.

The Great Prize Fight for 1000*l*.—The whole of the stakes, 500*l*. a side, are now deposited in the hands of the stakeholder for the fight between Coburn and Mace; the former will fight at 11 st. 7 lb. and Mace at 11 st. 5 lb., and both men are fully confident of success. The fight is fixed to come off next Tuesday, Oct. 4, and the only hitch in the matter is as to the locality for the battle. Coburn, who is an Irishman by birth, adheres to the terms of agreement, viz.—"That the fight shall take place within 20 and not exceeding 100 miles of Dublin;" but there is reason to know that active measures in official quarters are being made to prevent a fight in Ireland, and that unless an alteration (but which Coburn peremptorily refuses) can be effected, a postponement of the fight or "a draw" must be the consequence.

Obituary.

Lady Louisa Tollemache Brooke, youngest sister of the Earl of Fife, died on the 23d ult. in the prime of life. She was the youngest daughter of General the Hon. Sir Alex. Duff, second son of the third Earl of Fife, and married in 1848, Mr. Richard Brooke, eldest son of Sir Richard Brooke, Bart., of Norton Priory, Cheshire.

Sir George Frederick Edmonstone, K.C.B., died on the 24th ult. at Effingham Hill, in his 51st year, after a long illness. He entered the civil service of the East India Company in 1830, and after filling the office of Foreign Secretary to the India Government, was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces of Bengal, which he was at length compelled to relinquish from impaired health. He was made a Knight Commander of the Bath last year, in recognition of his public services.

Major-General Vicars, R.E., died on the 8th ult. He served with Lord John Hay on the north coast of Spain, and received a brevet majority, the Cross of Bilbao, and the Orders of St. Ferdinand and Isabel II. of Spain, for distinguished gallantry in the action before San Sebastian in October, 1836. Before the outbreak of hostilities with Russia in 1854, he was selected for special duty with the fleet under Admiral Dundas, and on his way out was attacked by paralysis at Lisbon, from which he never entirely recovered, but retired on full pay after 32 years' service.

Commander Colby, one of the captains of Greenwich Hospital, died on the 21st ult., in his 83d year. He served in Lord Duncan's action off Camperdown; in the defeat of the French squadron in Donegal Bay; in the repulse of Linois' squadron, in Vizagapatam Roads; in Sir R. Calder's action at Trafalgar; at the defence of Gaeta, the forcing of the Dardanelles, and the destruction of the Turkish squadron at Point Pesquies, where he was wounded. He co-operated with the army in Egypt in the attack upon Rosetta, in 1807; and in 1809 he cut out an armed transport in Quiberon Bay, and was present at the reduction of Genoa, in 1814. He was made a commander in 1814; and was appointed to Greenwich Hospital for his services in 1850.

Mr. Walter Savage Landor died at Florence on the 17th ult., in his 90th year. He was born in 1775, and had obtained celebrity as a scholar and a poet before the end of the last century. His "Imaginary Conversations" have rendered his name familiar to all readers of English literature. He was the son of the late Mr. Walter Landor, of Ipsley Court, Warwickshire, and Llanthony Abbey, Monmouthshire, by his second marriage with the daughter and co-heiress of Mr. Charles Savage, of Tachbrooke, and was born in 1775. He was educated at Rugby and Trinity College, Oxford, but quitted the University without a degree, and travelled for some time. After selling his estate in Monmouthshire he raised at his own expense, in 1808, a body of troops in aid of the Spanish patriots. He was created a colonel in the Spanish army, but resigned his commission on the extinction of the constitution. After his marriage in 1811 to a French lady, he resided for many years abroad, first at Tours and then at Florence. On his return to England he settled at Bath. Latterly, he had been compelled to reside permanently abroad to escape the heavy costs which he had been ordered to pay on being convicted of aspersing the character of a lady in that city in a manner which cast an indelible stigma on his reputation.

Mr. Joshua Bates, partner in the eminent house of Baring Brothers & Co., died on Saturday at New Lodge, Windsor Forest, the seat of M. van de Weyer, the Belgian Minister, who married his only daughter.

Earthquake in the North of England.—On Monday morning, between 12 and 1 o'clock, there was a shock of an earthquake in the North of England. At Leeds, Rochdale, Manchester, and other places, people were awoke by the shock, and various descriptions of the phenomenon are given, some comparing it to thunder felt but not heard, others to shaking and rocking. At Skipton and other places in the Craven district the shock was preceded by a rushing noise, not unlike that produced by the machinery of a mill during working hours. Many persons were awakened from their sleep, either by the noise or the shaking of the beds; and some describe the effect experienced by them as being similar to an electric shock. At Rochdale and its suburbs, watches and clocks were stopped, houses were violently shaken, doors and windows rattled, bells tinkled, dogs set barking and howling, and policemen on their beats frightened. The night porter at the railway station, seated in his cabin, was alarmed by the rattling of the signal wires, and by a noise similar to that of an engine passing over an archway. At Manchester, Broughton, Pendlebury, Hebden Bridge, and Clitheroe, the shock produced the sensation of the bed having been lifted in some cases, while in others the houses were shaken. The earthquake, which was accompanied by a low rumbling noise, lasted about two seconds, and seemed to pass from north-east to south-west. At Bacup the shock set the pots and pans violently rattling, and was felt through the town and suburbs. At Todmorden Road and Brickfield the motion felt was not so much that of a vibration as a sharp, sudden shock, as if some giant power had seized the houses and given them a violent, momentary shock.

Post-office Savings Banks.—An official document has been issued showing that at the end of March upwards of four millions had been deposited with the National Debt Commissioners on account of the Post-office Savings Banks, and that 372,955 accounts had been opened by depositors. This sum is about a tenth of the deposits in the old savings-banks, but in numbers the depositors in the Post-office banks are more than a fifth of the number who have accounts with the old banks, the average amount of the deposits in the Post-office banks being less than half the average for the old banks, and not reaching 11*l*., even including the deposits of friendly and other societies. It seems, therefore, to be more especially the small savings-bank depositors who avail themselves of the Post-office banks. The chief business of these banks is in England. The deposits in Ireland are but 160,756*l*., in Scotland 107,931*l*., in the Channel Islands 7598*l*., in Wales 121,029*l*. In England there were in March last 327,346 depositors, and 3,700,176*l*. due to them, and in November last England had 1,283,795 depositors in the old savings-banks, with 34,516,825*l*. due to them. The counties in which Post-office banks have the largest deposits are Middlesex with 741,383*l*., and Warwickshire with 526,098*l*. After Middlesex and Warwickshire comes Surrey, with 277,599*l*.; Kent, with 238,919*l*.; Lancashire, with 193,226*l*.; Staffordshire, with 171,641*l*.; Southampton, with 148,578*l*.; Essex, with 120,502*l*.; and Yorkshire, with 118,566*l*. The remaining English counties had accumulated less than 100,000*l*. each; the amount due to depositors in Bedfordshire being 15,652*l*.; Berkshire, 26,458*l*.; Buckinghamshire, 27,694*l*.; Cambridgeshire, 31,353*l*.; Cheshire, 60,651*l*.; Cornwall, 26,735*l*.; Cumberland, 15,661*l*.; Derbyshire, 27,401*l*.; Devonshire, 45,072*l*.; Dorsetshire, 17,448*l*.; Durham, 64,815*l*.; Gloucestershire, 92,295*l*.; Herefordshire, 10,763*l*.; Herttordshire, 81,011*l*.; Huntingdonshire, 14,935*l*.; Leicestershire, 21,504*l*.; Lincolnshire, 40,180*l*.; Monmouthshire, 26,257*l*.; Norfolk, 43,645*l*.; Northamptonshire, 29,931*l*.; Northumberland, 31,593*l*.; Nottinghamshire, 68,050*l*.; Oxfordshire, 32,230*l*.; Rutlandshire, 2553*l*.; Shropshire, 26,963*l*.; Somersetshire, 64,630*l*.; Suffolk, 35,906*l*.; Sussex, 97,772*l*.; Westmoreland, 11,017*l*.; Wiltshire, 30,309*l*.; and Worcestershire, 43,196*l*. At Birmingham the deposits amount to 367,535*l*. The expenses of the Post-office savings-banks for their two-and-a-half years of existence (a large proportion of them, however, of much more recent establishment) appear from this return to have been about 62,000*l*., and the return shows a surplus of assets over habilities, after paying interest and all expenses. Time will show whether there is as great a liability as in the old savings-banks to losses by sales of stock having to be made when the price is low in order to meet an unusual number of withdrawals when money is in demand. There has been loss amounting to 1093*l*. by defalcation of a postmaster at Beverley, but that sum will be reduced to the extent of the amount recovered from his sureties. It is of interest to observe that although the deposits in the Post-office banks amount to 4,097,492*l*., the deposits in the old savings-banks were, when the accounts were made up in November last, only about 600,000*l*. less than at the time when the Post-office banks were started.

Markets.

COVENT GARDEN, Oct. 1.

Supplies of most things continue abundant, especially those of Grapes and Melons. Apples, Plums, and Peaches are likewise sufficient for the demand, and there is also a fair supply of Louise Bonne of Jersey Pear, a good kind at this season, and also of Marie Louise and Gansel's Bergamot. Kent Filberts and Cobs fetch from 70s. to 80s. per 100 lbs. New Walnuts are very plentiful, and Oranges begin to make their appearance. For Potatos there is a heavy sale, and prices for them have a downward tendency. Flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Heaths, Asters, Fuchsias, Pinks, Mignonette, and Roses.

BRITISH WOOLS.—LONDON, Sept. 29.

Our prices are merely nominal, as the present state of the money market precludes business, and as our stocks are low there is no possibility of replacing if a reduction to any extent were submitted to. There are large capitalists disposed to make purchases for their own consumption should holders give way in prices considerably, but they are only able to obtain a very small supply.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Sept. 26.

There are a few more Beasts than on Monday last, but choice qualities are by no means plentiful. Prices are not much altered on the average. Inferior kinds met with a dull sale, and are rather lower. There is a considerable increase in the number of Sheep; trade is consequently dull, and on the average prices are lower. Calves are selling about the same as on Thursday. From Germany and Holland there are 3290 Beasts, 10,130 Sheep, 373 Calves, and 220 Pigs; from Spain, 60 Beasts; from Ireland, 570; and 2760 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Sept. 29.

The number of Beasts is not so large as of late. Choice qualities continue to be very scarce, and command high rates. The supply of Sheep is about the same as on Thursday last, but the demand is smaller, and it is difficult to realise Monday's quotations. There is no alteration in the trade for Calves. Our foreign supply consists of 680 Beasts, 4560 Sheep, 490 Calves, and 165 Pigs.

HOPS.—BOROUGH MARKET, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report a continued active demand for descriptions of the new growth, fine samples of which are very scarce and meet with a ready sale, at the late advance in prices; low and middling sorts are a little easier.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Sept. 26.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was moderate, and met a slow sale at a decline of 1s. to 2s. per qr. upon the prices of this day se'nnight, some quantity remaining unsold towards the close of the market; the attendance of buyers was very small, and foreign Wheat was taken in retail only at a reduction of 1s. per qr. Barley was neglected and almost unsaleable, with the exception of the finest quality of Malting. Beans were 1s. per qr. cheaper, and Peas unaltered in value. The Oat trade was dull, and to effect sales it was necessary to submit to a decline of 6d. per qr, The little business done in Flour was at about late rates.

FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

Since the 23d inst. the weather has been warm and very fine. The late depression in the value of Wheat has continued this week, and a further fall of fully 1s. per qr. is quoted in the majority of markets throughout the kingdom. Barley is rather cheaper, and very unsaleable. Oats have also been difficult of disposal and generally lower, the depression here having been caused by large arrivals, chiefly of Russian qualities. Little alteration has occurred in the value of Beans and Peas. Flour is neglected, and in several of the principal markets it is quoted 6d. per barrel lower. Since Friday last 19 vessels have been reported off the coast. A fair business has been done during the week in floating cargoes; the prices of Wheat and Maize are recovering a trifle, and other descriptions of grain have remained unaltered. Paris, Sept. 29.—Flour has declined about 1s. per 280 lb. since this day week, and continues very slow of sale. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. 6d. per 280 lb. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 27,500 cwt. Wheat prices gave way yesterday 1s. 6d. per 480 lb., but no sales can be effected to-day unless at a further reduction. The arrivals of English Wheat and Barley are good, and also foreign Wheat; of English and foreign Oats and foreign Barley considerable. The attendance at to-day's market was small, and the little business transacted in Wheat, either English or foreign, was at about Monday's prices. Spring Corn of all descriptions was slow of sale. Oats were 6d. cheaper.

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 27.—Our market has been well attended to-day, and we have to report a more healthy demand for Wheat than we have had of late, but without any improvement in value. Flour dull at Friday's rates. Indian Corn less depressed, and meets a much better sale at our last quotations. Oats and Oatmeal difficult to move. Beans nominal. Peas and Barley fair sale at late rates. The market closes with some degree of firmness.

News of the Week.

The Revenue Returns which were published on Saturday again afford a remarkable proof of the elasticity of the national resources. Notwithstanding the late remissions of taxation, the deficiency on the year is only 120,438*l.*, while the returns of the half year show an increase of 164,981*l.*, and those of the quarter show an increase of no less than 380,295*l.* The principal sources of prosperity are the Excise, the Stamps, and the Post Office.

The Emperor of the French has directed M. Drouyn de Lhuys, his Minister for Foreign Affairs, to address to his Ambassador at Rome a letter on the subject of the Convention between France and Italy. In this important document M. Drouyn de Lhuys states that the French occupation of Rome has never been regarded otherwise than as a temporary and abnormal expedient, and that France has heartily desired the moment when she might be able to withdraw her troops without compromising the internal tranquillity of the country and the authority of the Pontifical Government. In 1859 and again in 1860 the withdrawal was contemplated, but given up from exceptional circumstances. France, he says, had many reasons for wishing that the occupation should not be indefinitely prolonged. In the first place it constituted an act of intervention contrary to one of the fundamental principles of her public law, and one the more difficult for her to justify, as her object in lending her armed support to Piedmont was to liberate Italy from foreign intervention. It also brought two distinct Sovereignties face to face on the same ground. The nature of things had been stronger than the good intentions of man. The French Commander had been repeatedly changed, but the same difficulties had always recurred. Then there was the difference of "political considerations." The two Governments did not obey the same inspirations or act upon the same principles. The conscience of France led her often to give counsels which the conscience of the Pope led him to disregard. If France insisted she appeared to abuse her position; if she took part in acts inconsistent with her social state and with the maxims of her legislation she hardly escaped the responsibility of a policy she was unable to approve. The Holy See, from its very nature, had particular codes and laws in opposition to the ideas of the age; and thus the relations of the two Governments were made more delicate and their reciprocal susceptibilities were brought into greater relief by the presence of the French in Rome. He proceeds to say that circumstances have now occurred which enable France to withdraw her troops without danger. The revolutionary party has been put down, Italy has ceased to claim Rome as a capital, and has herself proposed to transfer the metropolis to another city. Italy will also guarantee the Holy See against foreign attacks, and the finances of the Pope will be reinvigorated by relieving him from the debt which he at present bears, thereby enabling him to raise an army sufficiently well organised and numerous to make his authority respected at home. M. Drouyn de Lhuys concludes by expressing the conviction that the Holy See, like France, must sincerely desire that moment when the protection of French arms will be no longer necessary for its security, and when it will be able, without peril to the great interests which it represents, to return to the normal situation of an independent Government.

The new Italian Ministry has formally notified its acceptance of the Convention with France, and of the conditions under which the evacuation of Rome is to take place. It has also announced its intention to propose to Parliament to alleviate the losses which Turin will have sustained, and has paid a just tribute of admiration to the patriotic services of that city to the cause of Italian independence. Accounts from Rome state that the Pope considers the Convention merely as a guarantee of the revolution against his sovereign rights which will be brought about by Piedmont, and that he has ordered public prayers and processions to be used daily in view of the gravity of the present state of things. The Roman Committee has issued a manifesto stating that the Convention has been well received by the Roman population, and is considered an application of the principle of non-intervention to Rome. A public meeting has been held in Milan, at which a resolution was adopted declaring the Convention to be a sign of progress and of the resurrection of Italy, and especially on the ground that it presents the means of realising the national programme, which cannot be accomplished without Rome for a capital.

From the United States we learn, that after the battle near Winchester on the 18th ult., General Sheridan pursued the Confederates under General Early as far as Fisher's Hill, in the Shenandoah Valley. He there found the Confederate force strongly entrenched, but after a desperate engagement, which lasted until dark, he succeeded in completely routing them, with a loss of 16 guns. The Confederates had eight generals killed and wounded, and at the latest dates were retreating in disorder directly towards Richmond, leaving the road to Lynchburg unobstructed, while General Lee was said to be unable to spare another army of sufficient strength to oppose the progress of General Sheridan. The news of this victory has caused the greatest rejoicing throughout the North, and a salute of 10 shotted guns from each battery along General Grant's entire line was fired on the 23d in honour of the achievement. The Confederate General Price has commenced an invasion of Missouri, supported by General Shelby. Generals Fremont and Cochrane have withdrawn from the Presidential contest, and Mr. Lincoln and General M'Clellan are now the only candidates. The latter is finally assured of the support of the Democratic party. It is reported that General Sherman has proposed an informal peace conference with Governor Brown, of Georgia, and Vice-President Stephens; and numerous other peace rumours are current at New York.

The death of Mr. David Morris has caused a vacancy in the Carmarthen Boroughs. Foreign.

France.—By order of the Emperor the French Minister for Foreign Affairs has addressed the following despatch to Count de Sartiges, ambassador of France at Rome:—

"Paris, Sept. 12, 1864.

"M. le Comte,—The position we occupy at Rome has long been the subject of the most serious pre-occupations on the part of the Emperor's Government. Circumstances have seemed to us favourable to examine anew the real position of affairs, and we believe it useful to communicate to the Holy See the result of our reflections. I have no occasion to recall the considerations which have led the flag of France to Rome, and which have hitherto determined us to retain it there. We were resolved not to abandon this post of honour as long as the object of the occupation should not be attained. Yet we have never thought that this situation ought to be permanent; we have always considered it as abnormal and temporary. It is in these terms that the first plenipotentiary of the Emperor characterised it eight years ago. He added, conformably to his Majesty's orders, that we heartily desired the moment when we should be able to withdraw our troops from Rome without comprising the internal tranquillity of the country and the authority of the Pontifical Government. We have renewed the same declarations upon every occasion. At the commencement of 1859 the Holy Father had made upon his part the proposition to fix the evacuation of the territory guarded by our troops for the end of that year. The war which then broke out in Italy having decided the Emperor to renounce their recall, the same idea was again taken up as soon as events appeared to authorise the hope that the Pontifical Government would be in a position to provide for its security with its own forces. Thence arose the agreement established in 1860, in virtue of which the departure of the French troops was to be carried out in the month of August. The agitations which ensued at that same period again prevented the execution of a measure which the Holy See desired as we did. But the Emperor's Government has none the less continued to see an exceptional and transitory fact in the presence of our troops at Rome, to which, in mutual interest, we ought to put a stop as soon as the security and independence of the Holy See should be placed out of reach of new perils. How many reasons, indeed, had we not to wish that the occupation should not be indefinitely prolonged. It constitutes an act of intervention contrary to one of the fundamental principles of our public law, and one so much the more difficult for us to justify as our object in lending to Piedmont the support of our arms has been to liberate Italy from foreign intervention. This situation has, besides, the consequence of placing two distinct sovereignties face to face upon the same ground, and of thus being a frequent cause of grave difficulties. The nature of things is here stronger than the goodwill of men. Numerous changes have taken place in the chief command of the French army, and the same disagreements, the same conflicts of jurisdiction, have been reproduced, at every period, between our generals in chief—whose first duty is clearly to watch over the safety of their army, and the representatives of the Pontifical authority, jealous of maintaining the independence of the territorial Sovereign in acts of internal administration. To these inevitable inconveniences, which the French agents most sincerely devoted to the Holy See have not succeeded in removing, were joined those which fatally result from the difference of political points of view. The two Governments do not obey the same inspiration, and do not proceed according to the same principles. Our conscience too often compels us to give advice which the conscience of the Court of Rome too often also believes itself forced to decline. If our persistence took too marked a character we should seem to abuse the strength of our position, and in that case the Pontifical Government would lose in public opinion the merit of the wisest resolutions. Upon the other hand, in assisting at acts in discord with our social condition and with the maxims of our legislation, we can hardly escape the responsibility of a policy we are unable to approve. The Holy See, by reason of its own nature, has its particular codes and law, which upon many occasions are in unfortunate opposition to the ideas of the present day. Distant from Rome, we should still certainly regret to see it apply them rigorously, and, guided by filial devotion, we should undoubtedly not believe ourselves able to keep silence when similar facts should happen to give pretexts to the accusations of its adversaries; but our presence at Rome, which creates for us more imperious obligations in this respect, also, under the circumstances, renders the relations of the two Governments more delicate, and brings their reciprocal susceptibilities the more in conflict. Manifest as these inconveniences might be, we were careful not to allow ourselves to be diverted from the mission we had accepted. The Holy Father had no army to protect his authority in the interior against the projects of the revolutionary party. On the other hand, the most unquiet disposition prevailed in the peninsula on the subject of the possession of Rome, which the Italian Government itself, by the mouth of its Ministers in parliament, as well as by diplomatic communications, claimed as the capital of Italy. So long as the Cabinet of Turin was possess d with these views we could not but fear that if our troops were recalled the territory of the Holy See would be exposed to attacks which the Pontifical Government would not have been in a position to repel. We desired to afford it our armed support until the danger of these unreflecting movements appeared to have passed away. We are now impressed, M. le Comte, by the many changes manifest in this regard in the general condition of the peninsula. The Italian Government has exerted itself for the last two years to disperse the last relics of those formidable associations which, favoured by circumstances, were formed beyond its action, and whose projects were principally directed against Rome. After contending with them openly, it has succeeded in dissolving them, and each time they have essayed to effect a reconstruction has easily defeated their plots. That Government has not confined itself to preventing the organisation of any irregular force on its territory for attacking the provinces under Pontifical sovereignty; it has given its policy towards the Holy See a tendency more in harmony with its international duties. It has ceased to put before the Chambers the absolute programme which proclaimed Rome as the capital of Italy, and to address to us peremptory declarations on the subject, formerly so frequent. Other ideas have made their way in the best minds, and tend to prevail more and more. Renouncing the pursuit by force of a project which we were determined to oppose, and being unable, on the other hand, to maintain at Turin the seat of an authority whose presence is necessary at a more central point of the new state, the Turin Cabinet itself intended to transfer its capital to another city. To us, M. le Comte, this eventuality is of the highest importance for the Holy See as for the Emperor's Government, for, when realised, it would constitute a new state of things no longer offering the same dangers. After having obtained from Italy the guarantees we should feel bound to stipulate in favour of the Holy See against foreign attacks, it would only remain for us to aid the Pontifical Government in forming an army sufficiently well organised and numerous enough to make its authority respected at home. It would find us disposed to second the recruiting of this army by every means in our power. Its present resources, we are aware, would not enable it to support the maintenance of a considerable effective, but certain arrangements in view would acquit the Holy See of a portion of the debt, the interest of which it considered its dignity required it to meet. Being thus placed in possession of important sums—defended at home by a devoted army—protected without its territory by the engagements we should have demanded from Italy, the Pontifical Government would be placed in a situation which, in ensuring its independence and security, would enable us to assign a term to the presence of our troops in the Roman States. Thus would be verified the words addressed by the Emperor to the King of Italy in a letter dated July 12, 1861:—'I shall leave my troops at Rome so long as your Majesty shall not be reconciled with the Pope, or that the Holy Father shall be menaced with seeing the States remaining to him invaded by a regular or irregular force.' Such, M. le Comte, are the observations suggested by an attentive and conscientious study of present circumstances, and which the Emperor's Government deems expedient to communicate to the Court of Rome. The Holy See, as we ourselves, certainly most sincerely desires that moment when the protection of our arms will be no longer necessary for its security, and when it will be able without peril to the great interests which it represents to return to the normal situation of an independent Government. We are confident, therefore, that it will render full justice to he sentiments which guide us, and it is with this persuasion that I authorise you to draw the attention of Cardinal Antonelli to the considerations I have just laid before you. You will read this dispatch to his eminence.—Receive, &c.,

"DROUYN DE LHUYS."

The Paris papers publish the text of the Convention, consisting of the four articles which we published last week. It is asserted that the ratification has been delayed, and will only take place after the transfer of the capital of Italy to Florence. The Constitutionnel of Tuesday, replying to an article of a Turin journal on the Roman question, says:—

"The French Government was determined to enter into negotiations respecting the evacuation of the Pontifical territory on account of the declaration of the Turin Cabinet that from political, administrative, and strategic considerations, it had resolved upon transferring the capital to Florence. This transfer being the deciding motive of the negotiations and the principal condition of the recall of the army of occupation, it must precede, not follow, the recall of the army."

The Empress of the French left Schwalbach on Monday for Baden, where she arrived on Tuesday morning. The Grand Duke and Duchess of Baden and the King of Prussia went to meet her Majesty, who proceeded to the residence of the Duchess of Hamilton. The Empress left Baden on Wednesday morning, and arrived at St. Cloud in the evening. The Emperor went as far as Meaux to meet her Majesty. Prince Humbert arrived in Paris on the 29th ult. and was received by the Emperor on Friday at St. Cloud. On Tuesday his Royal Highness paid a farewell visit to the Emperor, and left on Wednesday for Turin. Chevalier di Nigra, the Italian Minister, arrived in Paris on Saturday morning. Count von Bismark, the Prussian Prime Minister, arrived in Paris on Wednesday, and left on Thursday morning for Biarritz. The nomination of Prince Talleyrand as French Ambassador at St. Petersburg is considered certain. It is said that M. Mercier, the French Ambassador at Washington, will replace M. Barrot at Madrid. The Minister of Public Instruction has addressed a circular to the Rectors of the Faculties, expressing the desire that the professors should give voluntary courses in the populous cities within the district of their academy, as will be done this winter at the Sorbonne in Paris. The negotiations which have been in progress for several weeks past in Paris between the Commissioners of England, France, Holland, and Belgium, with the view of assimilating and equalising the drawback on refined sugars in these countries, were brought to a satisfactory conclusion on Wednesday, when a provisional convention was signed by the commissioners at the French Ministry of Commerce, subject, however, to ratification by their respective Governments. The Mexican packet has brought a draught of 2,500,000f. of the Mexican Government upon its Minister of Finance, in execution of the Convention of Miramar. The Lyons journals give particulars of a horseflesh banquet that has just taken place in that city. A large number of amateurs assembled in the dining-room of one of the principal restaurants, and to them were served up no less than 11 dishes, all of horse beef. These were two soups, bouilli, horse à la mode, truffled sausages, fried brains, lion à l'Italienne, cauliflower au jus de cheval, cold horse pie, and other chevaline delicacies. The fare was generally approved. Among the guests were merchants, manufacturers, professional men, journalists, veterinary surgeons, and physicians; but the last, it is added, were not numerous.

SPAIN.—Queen Christina arrived in Madrid from Paris on Friday evening. Her Majesty was well received by the crowd assembled to witness her return. Senor Mon has been appointed Spanish ambassador at Paris, and Senor Pacheco ambassador at Rome. General Prim arrived at Madrid on Wednesday. He is now convalescent. It is expected that the Progressista party will abandon their policy of abstaining from voting at the new elections. The Clamor Publico is in favour of settling the San Domingo question by preserving only the towns of San Domingo, Samorna, and Puerto Plata, abandoning the rest of the island, and terminating the war.

DENMARK.—The Berlingske Tidende of Thursday in its weekly review says:—

"Denmark never obstructed the peace negotiations. She represented to the allied Powers that her interests demanded that North Schleswig should remain with Denmark. Financial difficulties induced the allies to make demands which are not in conformity with the preliminaries of peace, since Denmark did not recognise the principle of a partition of the State property."

The neutral Powers have made representations to Austria and Prussia relative to the proceedings of General Falkenstein in Jutland.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.—Accounts from Kiel state that Herren Samwer and Franke, the present councillors of the Duke of Augustenburg, have expressed to him the wish to be relieved of their functions. It is further stated that the Duke has determined to accept their resignation, and that he wishes to surround himself with advisers favourable to an intimate connection of the Duchies with Prussia.

PRUSSIA.—Count von Bismark left Berlin on Saturday evening to join the King at Baden-Baden, and left that place on Tuesday for Biarritz for the benefit of sea-bathing. The King is expected to return to Berlin on the 14th inst. After the baptism of the Royal infant on the 18th, the Crown Prince, Crown Princess, and family will go to Nice, where they will reside for two months. The Emperor of Russia is not expected to be present at the christening. The semi-official Provinzial Correspondenz of Wednesday says—

"The firm attitude of the great German Powers is said to have caused the Danish Government to come to the determination of making advances for a peaceful settlement of the pending financial difficulties. We hope that the work of peace will soon be brought to a successful issue. The convocation of the Prussian Diet can hardly be expected to take place before the first fortnight in December. Councillor Ahlefeldt, the representative of the Duke of Augustenburg, has had an interview with Herr von Bismark, which may have resulted in clearly defining the position of the Duke, especially with regard to Prussia. The Duke has hitherto been frequently induced to follow a mistaken course."

AUSTRIA.—The Princess Maria Theresa, daughter of the Archduke Albert, was betrothed on Thursday to the Duke of Würtemberg, grandson of Louis Philippe. The Neue Freie Presse of Monday states that in Friday's sitting of the Conference the Danish proposition to settle by arbitration the question of liquidating that portion of the public property of Denmark to be given up to the Duchies was declared on the part of Germany to be inadmissible, and a demand was made by the German Plenipotentiaries that Denmark should give a definitive answer on this point. The Danish Plenipotentiaries replied that they would telegraph to their Government for instructions. At the sitting of Wednesday the Danish Plenipotentiaries are said to have made certain concessions in the boundary and financial questions, but they insist that the Duchies should have no part of the indemnity paid for the redemption of the Sound dues, and finally made a fresh proposition for the settlement of the question. Herr von Balan, recently arrived from Berlin, was present at the Conference. The disputed question of the boundary line between Schleswig and Jutland relates to the small town of Christiansfeld in Schleswig, which is claimed by Denmark. Count Schöller, of the Danish service, has arrived at Copenhagen from Vienna to discuss the point with the Danish Minister of Schleswig.—Herr von Hasenbach, the Prussian representative at the Conference held in Prague for the purpose of bringing about an understanding between Austria and Prussia in reference to the future position of the former towards the Zollverein, has returned to Berlin, and has been received by the Minister of Finance. Herr von Hye, the Austrian representative, has also left for Vienna, but will return to Prague after receiving verbal instructions from his Government. It is stated on reliable authority that the negotiations have only been postponed, and not broken off.

BAVARIA.—Herr von Schrenk, the President of the Council and Minister for Foreign Affairs, has, at his own request, been relieved of his functions, and for the present has retired into private life. Herr von Neumayr has been temporarily appointed Minister for Foreign Affairs, and Herr Pfeufer Minister of Commerce.

RUSSIA.—The betrothal of the Crown Prince of Russia with the Princess Dagmar of Denmark has been officially announced in St. Petersburg. A salute of 101 guns was fired in honour of the event. The semi-official Petersburger Zeitung of Tuesday publishes an article which concludes thus:—

"The Encyclical Letter of the Pope on Polish affairs is the work of the Jesuits, who are afraid they may lose their power by the newly-awakened civilisation of the people. In other respects Russia is indifferent to the Encyclical Letter."

A portion of the great powder mill of Ochta, a suburb of St. Petersburg, exploded last week. About 30 buildings were destroyed: a large number set on fire, and about 80 injured. Six workmen were killed, more than 50 wounded, and no trace whatever can be found of three others. The country around suffered severely from the shock, and all the windows of the Convent of Smolnos, on the other side of the Neva, were destroyed.

ITALY.—The Queen of Holland arrived at Turin on Wednesday evening, and has set out again for Venice. The new Cabinet is now definitively formed, and Baron Ricasoli has assisted, with all his influence, in its formation. The following is the official list of the new administration:—General della Marmora, President of the Council, Minister for Foreign Affairs, and ad interim Minister of Marine; Signor Lanza, Interior; Signor Tacini, Public Works; Signor Petitti, War; Signor Selza, Finance; Signor Torelli, Commerce; Signor Natoli, Public Instruction; Signor Vacca, Justice. The official Gazette of Friday evening says:—

"The new Ministry, in assuming the reins of government, finds it necessary to make known its intentions respecting the political question. The Ministry accepts the convention stipulated with France, and, at the same time, the condition of the transfer of the capital to another locality. It will submit a Bill on this subject to Parliament, and will also propose gradual measures of a nature to lighten the loss which will be sustained by Turin, without postponing the period fixed by the convention for the evacuation of Pontifical territory by the French troops. The Ministry further expresses confidence in the patriotic devotion of the city of Turin and the whole Italian populations."

Baron Ricasoli has returned to Florence. Before leaving Turin he held a Conference with his political friends, and urged them to support the Ministry. A decree has been issued convoking the Italian Parliament for the 24th inst. This decree is accompanied by a report, dated Sept. 19, addressed to the King by the late Ministry, which says:—

"At the moment we assumed the reins of Government the Roman question was in such a condition that it would have been unworthy and useless to immediately commence fresh negotiations. The Government waited an opportunity, and hastened to take advantage of it when it considered the general state of affairs in Europe to be favourable. After the decree tions of Parliament, which were to guide the Government, the Roman question could only be solved by moral means. To obtain the application of the principle of non-intervention it was necessary to proceed in accord with France. The Emperor of the French has always desired to be able to withdraw his troops from Rome, not only from this not being in conformity with the principles and public rights whereon the Empire and its policy are based, but also because the resurrection of Italy will be one of the principal glories of his reign. But the Emperor considered that he could not, by suddenly withdrawing his troops in a body, abandon the Power that he had protected during 15 years with his arms. In order to reassure the Catholic sentiment, the Italian Government could not but promise not to attack the Pontifical territory, and to prevent any attack being made by irregular bands from the frontiers of the Italian kingdom. This promise, loyally given and firmly kept, neither destroys nor diminishes the rights or the aspirations of the nation, but rather confirms the necessity of operating solely by moral force to obtain the triumph of the national ideas. Nevertheless, while the Government was engaged with the Roman question it did not forget the Venetian question. Austria occupied in Venetia might become a menace under circumstances to be foreseen. The principal idea of the King was always the organisation of a system of defence necessitating the transfer of the seat of Government to a locality more favourably situated than the present capital. Military considerations caused Florence to be selected. This transfer, although essentially a home question, is connected with the French occupation, [illegible] facilitated, from having been regarded by France as a guarantee that Italy had renounced the use of violent measures towards the Papacy. The report then proceeds to speak of the sacrifices made by Turin, and acknowledges its merits; and in conclusion, it expresses confidence that Turin will follow the example of its King, who has devoted himself entirely to Italy.

The Europe of Thursday publishes a lengthy analysis of a despatch addressed by M. Drouyn de Lhuys on the 23d ult. to the French Minister at Turin. This despatch explains the resistance which France was obliged to offer to the first demands of the Italian Government. It declares that the latter had not protected the interests of the Holy Father, and did not consider the conditions which had been laid down at the outset for conciliating the two opposing interests. M. Drouyn de Lhuys points out the new policy adopted by the Cabinet of Turin, based upon the important resolution to choose another capital than Rome—a circumstance calculated to appease the extreme party in Italy, and showing conciliatory dispositions. In conclusion, M. Drouyn de Lhuys says that the best and surest guarantee for the Papacy is in the loyal and scrupulous execution of the Convention, and its scrupulous execution cannot be doubted, since it bears the signature of France. The official Kreuz Zeitung of Thursday publishes a correspondence from Rome, dated the 25th ult., giving an account of the French Minister's notification of the Franco-Italian Convention to Cardinal Antonelli. It says that the Cardinal, in a despatch subsequently addressed to Monsignore Chigi, the Papal Nuncio at Paris, on the subject, complains of the French Government having left the Holy See in ignorance of the convention. His Eminence says:—

"The Pope can at any moment replace the French by a garrison sent by another Power, since the Pope's own military force is inadequate to maintain the independence of the Holy See. His Holiness thinks that, although Piedmont had renounced making open attacks against the Pope, it would nevertheless continue the war. The Pope considers the convention merely as a guarantee of the revolution which will be brought about by Piedmont. If the Pope continues to be disturbed in the exercise of his sovereign rights, and if his right to establish his means of defence as he may think fit be contested, he will be compelled to protest against such a misuse of power, and to assume the attitude which his duty as a Sovereign will necessitate."

The Pope has ordered public prayers and daily processions in view of the gravity of the present state of things. Several persons were arrested on the 29th ult. for having been concerned in a popular demonstration, at which seditious cries were raised, but they have since been set at liberty. The Roman Committee has issued a manifesto, stating that the convention is well received by the Roman population, and is considered an application of the principle of non-intervention. The Gazzetta del Popolo publishes an address to the Italians, issued by the Society of "The United Committees of Turin," in which an explanation is given of the events of the 21st and 22d of September. The municipalities of several towns in Piedmont have passed resolutions expressing sympathy for the municipality of Turin. Signor Villamarina, Prefect of Milan, in a letter to the Society of Sciences in that city, announces that he has received a visit from an orderly officer of the King, charged by his Majesty to congratulate Milan on its dignified and expressive attitude, and to assure him that the convention will be fully carried out. A political meeting was held at Milan on Sunday, at which a resolution was passed expressing the conviction that the Franco-Italian Convention was a sign of great progress and of the resurrection of Italy. The convention was also considered to present the means of realizing the national programme, which cannot be accomplished out of Rome.

Greece.—Advices from Athens state that the Austrian Minister has presented his credentials to the King, and that Herr von Schmidthels, the Prussian Plenipotentiary at Athens, has also presented to King George a communication from the Prussian Government recognising the new dynasty.

Turkey.—The Duke and Duchess d'Aumale, the Prince and Princess de Joinville, the Prince de Condé, and Duc de Guise returned to Constantinople on the 23d ult. from an excursion to Broussa and the Trojan Olympus, and left on the following day for Smyrna and the Ionian Islands. Prince Murat arrived on the 23d ult. in the French paddle-sloop Cacique, and took up his quarters at the French Embassy.

Danubian Principalities.—The Roumân journals strongly attack the Journal des Débats on account of its articles against the rural law, pointing out their prejudice and the grave errors they contain. Prince Couza has issued a decree, introducing the decimal system of weights and measures into Roumania. The apportionment of the lands destined for the peasants is being peacefully carried out. The Prince has visited Jassy, and has been enthusiastically received by the population.

India.—Mr. Alexander Lawrence, nephew of the Viceroy, has been killed by the fall of a bridge.

United States.—The latest accounts from the Shenandoah prove the first report of Sheridan's success to have been greatly exaggerated. General Early's entire loss, it is now stated, did not exceed 6000 men, while that of the Federals in killed and wounded alone was upwards of 4500. At one time the Federals, mowed down by the Confederate artillery and musketry fire, were thrown into confusion, and were on the point of giving way, when, by a desperate charge of all his cavalry, Sheridan turned Early's right flank, and compelled him to retire. Early continued to fall back during the 20th, followed by Sheridan, and on the 21st made a stand at Fisher's Hill, two and a half miles south of Strasburg. Sheridan attacked him in the evening, but was repulsed. On the 22d, at 4 P.M., Sheridan renewed the attack, and after a severe conflict, lasting until dark, forced Early to evacuate the position with the loss of 16 cannon. The Federals state that the darkness only saved Early's army from destruction. The losses in killed and wounded on either side are not stated. Among the killed and wounded were the Confederate Generals Rhodes, Ransom, Gordon, Terry, Goodwin, Bradley, Johnson, and Fitzhugh Lee. Early is believed to be retreating in disorder direct towards Richmond, and it is said that General Lee, in the face of Grant's army, cannot detach a sufficient force to oppose General Sheridan's pursuit. The news of this victory has caused intense rejoicing in the North, and General Grant's army fired a salute of shotted guns in honour of the achievement. The Richmond papers publish an order from the Confederate War Department for the enrolment of all white males between 17 and 50 not actually serving with the Confederate armies in the field. There is no news of the expected conflict between the opposing forces of Grant and Lee on the Weldon Railway. Despatches from Macon, Georgia, of the 17th, state that General Sherman had invited Governor Brown, of that State, and Vice-President Stephens to Atlanta, to confer on the subject of peace. Sherman and Hood have concluded the exchange of 2000 prisoners upon either side, captured in the recent battles at Atlanta and Jonesborough. The truce for the removal of the Atlanta inhabitants, which expired on the 22d, has been extended. New Orleans letters of the 15th announce that, with the exception of the garrisons left in Forts Morgan and Gaines, General Grainger's forces, lately co-operating with Admiral Farragut in Mobile, have returned to that city. St. Louis despatches of the 22d state that General Price, with 25,000 Confederate troops, has crossed Arkansas river, and is going northward for an invasion of Missouri. Two steamers on Lake Erie were captured and destroyed near Bass Island on the 19th ult. by Confederates, passengers on board. By the admission of a Confederate officer arrested in disguise at Sandusky City on the 18th, it appears that the object of the Confederates in seizing and destroying these steamers was at the outset the capture of the Federal steamer Michigan and the liberation of the Johnstown Island prisoners. The arrest of the officer prevented the necessary co-operation from the land, and compelled the abandonment of the enterprise. The report that two Confederate armed steamers had appeared on the Lake was untrue. Postmaster-General Blair, at the request of Mr. Lincoln, has resigned office. Ex-Governor Dennison, of Ohio, succeeds him. General Fremont and General Cochrane have formally withdrawn from the Presidential contest.

Canada.—The meeting of the representatives of the maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward's Island, to deliberate upon the expediency of forming a union, took place on the 1st ult. Delegates were present from Canada East and West, and the question of a general confederacy of all the provinces was fully discussed. The desirableness of such a confederacy was affirmed by the conference, and it was agreed that they should reassemble at Halifax in about a fortnight, and that subsequently a general conference should be held in Quebec. The most serious opposition is in Canada East, where the French element is dominant, and where the dream of a new Franco-American nationality is indulged in.

West Indies.—Advices from Bermuda report that yellow fever was on the increase. Seven of the military surgeons who recently left the North American Provinces to render assistance, were at the last accounts ill with the fever. Drs. Ewell and Mellery had died, and Dr. Lloyd was not expected to recover. Captain Lockhart, of the Royal Engineers, Dr. Harrison, of the Royal Artillery, and several officers of the Queen's Royals and others, have also fallen victims to the disease.

San Domingo.—Advices from San Domingo announce that the Spanish General completely defeated the insurgents in an engagement on the 31st of August. The insurgents lost six cannon, and their general, Martinez, was killed. General Gandara, after this victory, returned to Monte Christi, and sent Senor Figuerra to Spain to explain to the Government the state of affairs.

Mexico.—Advices from Matamoras to the 9th ult. confirm the news of the occupation of Brownsville by Cortinas. They also announce several successes on the part of the Imperialists. On the 1st of August Colonel Turre and the Zouaves under his command forced a passage through the Mexican defences at Candelaria, defeating Ugalde, who defended the position with 300 men, of whom he lost 150 in the engagement. This brilliant feat of arms determined the Mexicans to abandon the formidable defences of Huejustla.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

DREADFUL EXPLOSION AT ERITH.—On Saturday morning, at 20 minutes to 7, the powder magazines of Messrs. Hall & Son, and of the Low-wood Company at Belvedere, exploded with disastrous results both to life and property. The scene of the catastrophe was in the Erith Marshes, between Plumstead and Erith, on the banks of the Thames. At this spot, about a mile or a mile and a quarter from the Belvidere station of the North Kent Railway, and between the latter and Erith Church, and closely abutting on the banks of the river, at the end of Erith Reach, were two large magazines, the property of Messrs. Hall & Son, of the Dartford Powder Mills and Lombard Street, and of the Low-wood Company, of Tranmere, Lancashire. The plot of land on which these magazines stood, and which is surrounded by ditches to render them isolated, is about 25 acres in extent. The distance between the two magazines was between 50 and 60 yards. The only buildings near these were the residences of the managers of the works and their families, and one or two cottages for the workmen. At the north-western extremity of the marshes, from a quarter to half a mile away, stands a building used as a magazine for gunpowder by the Government. This is about midway between the site of the magazines which exploded and the new building erected at Crossness Point by the Metropolitan Board of Works for the southern outfall and pumping station of the main drainage of London. It appears that two barges left the powder mills of Messrs. Hall & Son, at Dartford, on Friday night, and proceeded up the river, both completely laden with casks of gunpowder, for the purpose of depositing them in the magazine. They were then known to have each two men and a boy on board, but whether there were any others has not been ascertained. It appears certain, however, that the explosion, which took place at precisely 20 minutes before 7 o'clock, first occurred on board one of the barges, that it was succeeded instantly by a second, and subsequently by a third and more violent one. It is supposed that the explosion was caused by a man on board one of the barges, whilst smoking, dropping some lighted tobacco from his pipe and igniting the powder, although this is but a surmise. In an instant both the barges were blown to atoms, and the two magazines instantly followed. The owners state that there were 750 barrels in the large magazine, and 200 in the barges. Each barrel contained about 100 lb. of powder; so that there would be 95,000 lb. of powder in the large magazine and the barges alone. The amount in the smaller magazine is said by the agents not to have exceeded 90 barrels; so that the whole amount was about 104,000 lbs. Not only were the buildings razed to the ground, nothing whatever being left but their foundations, but the very earth itself, for the space of hundreds of yards, was turned up in huge masses or blocks of a ton weight and upwards in all directions. Of the house of Mr. Rayner, the storekeeper, nothing remains but a few feet of one of the western walls, while the residence of Mr. Silver, the Low-wood storekeeper, has the parlour and the flooring of the first floor hanging downward in a slanting position over it, the whole of the upper part being gone. The débris of bricks and materials lie scattered about for many hundred yards, and heavy beams of timber, some weighing over half a ton, are lying in the adjoining fields. A large portion of the Belvedere Station, upwards of a mile distant, was carried away; and the bricks of a new building in course of erection at the station completely covered the line, and formed a pile for a considerable distance in the centre of the "six-foot" of the railway. In the districts of Erith, Belvedere, and Plumstead there was havoc in every direction. At Erith, not only were the windows, but the window sashes, and even the shutters blown out; and there was scarcely a house that did not suffer more or less. At Belvedere the Hotel had all its lower windows crushed in. To the westward, up the hill, nearly all the windows were smashed; and two shops had the whole of their fronts broken in, as if a coal waggon had dashed through them. Some of the villa residences had their walls split and their ceilings cracked, and their furniture injured and broken. Woolwich also suffered immensely; the barrack windows on the Common were smashed in every direction; and so great was the shock that the inhabitants thought it was the Arsenal that had exploded, and it was not until some portions of books of Messrs. Hall & Co. descended into the streets that the truth developed itself. In the metropolis the shock was supposed to be that of an earthquake; doors and windows rattled, shutters were thrown down, and people shaken in their beds, over its whole extent, particularly in the higher ground. For at least 50 miles round London the shock was distinctly felt. The amount of window-glass smashed and other injuries inflicted on house property down the river is something fabulous; but the most imminent danger arose from the destruction of the river embankment. The Thames at that part is only kept from inundating the surrounding country by means of embankments, in which the explosion produced a gap of 100 yards in width. It was happily low tide, or the results would have been disastrous. The embankment at Dagenham on the other side of the river was broken through about a century ago, and it was many months before the water was got off the country again. There was just time in the present case to repair the embankment sufficiently before high tide. This result was only achieved, however, by immense exertions, and the highest praise is deserved by all who were concerned in the operation. Mr. Moore, the engineer on the spot, immediately realised the danger and telegraphed for the navvies from the Crossness station of the Metropolitan Board of Works, and General Warde, the commandant of Woolwich, at once sent 1500 Sappers and Miners and Artillery to the spot. They were followed speedily by the 5th Fusiliers, who kept the ground from intrusion, and later in the day by the Marines, both from the garrison at Woolwich. Before the troops arrived, the navvies had wheeled large masses of clay in front of the breach, while others puddled it into a solid bottom, by which means the subsequent military operations were greatly facilitated. Fortunately the river was low, and before the tide rose the large detachments of soldiers and navvies had raised another embankment with clay and sand bags, sufficient to prevent the low lands in the vicinity from being drowned. Meanwhile the South Eastern Railway Company had sent down a special train to bring up the wounded to Guy's Hospital. Seven persons are now lying in that institution more or less injured, and two others died soon after their admission. Nine or 10 are known to have been killed, including Mr. Rayner, Messrs. Hall's storekeeper, Mr. Wright, the under storekeeper, and the four men belonging to the barges. How the explosion originated appears unknown, and it is feared, as is usual in such cases, that all who could throw light on the matter have perished in the catastrophe. On Sunday thousands upon thousands of people visited the scene of the explosion, travelling mostly by the North Kent Railway, and it required the aid of a strong body of police at the Erith and Belvedere Stations to maintain order and prevent accident. On Monday also several thousand persons visited the scene of the catastrophe and approached as near the spot as the guards stationed round it would allow. During the whole day the navvies of the Metropolitan Board of Works were hard at work strengthening the river embankment, and their efforts, with those of the military on the previous day, were crowned with complete success. On Monday there was the highest tide of the month, and though the flood rose to a great height, and a strong north-easterly wind beat dead against it, nothing beyond the wash of the higher waves went over the embankment. The excitement of the populace on Sunday night led to a shocking accident. There was an immense crowd of persons at the little side station of Belvedere, and the most frantic efforts were made to get into the carriages as they arrived. The railway authorities at London Bridge despatched extra trains one after another as fast as they could do so with safety, to bring up the people, but in spite of all their efforts there was great delay, and the last up-train did not leave the Belvedere station until 3 o'clock on Monday morning. At intervals during the night, whenever a train stopped, either there or at Erith, a frightful rush was made at it, and the people crowded the carriages almost to suffocation, in spite of the efforts of the police and the railway company's servants to restrain them. Many clambered upon the tops of the carriages, others took possession of the engine tender, and some even bestrode the buffers until they were pulled off by main force by the police. During this confusion a young Italian called Morandi fell between the carriages, and was so dreadfully mangled that he died in less than an hour after his removal to the hospital. The coroner's inquest on the bodies of three of the persons killed by the explosion was opened on Tuesday at the village of Belvedere. It was stated that the persons now in hospital, and who may be expected to give some evidence on the subject, will not be in a condition to be examined for some weeks to come. The proceedings, which were mainly confined to the identification of the bodies, were adjourned for a week. The inquest on the two persons who died in Guy's Hospital, and also on the Italian who was killed by falling under the carriages of a train at the Erith platform on Sunday night, took place on Wednesday, when the jury in both cases returned verdicts of Accidental Death, appending to the former case their opinion that there was no evidence to show how the explosion was caused, and that the practice of allowing stoves or lights of any description on board gunpowder barges should be discontinued. On Monday evening a public meeting on the subject of the explosion was held at the Pier Hotel, Erith. Archdeacon Smith, vicar of the parish, took the chair, and said that the object of the meeting was to make representations to Government or the proper authorities against the erection or re-erection of gunpowder factories in proximity to populous towns and, secondly, to form an approximate statement for the claims for compensation. Several gentlemen having addressed the meeting, it was unanimously resolved that the recent disaster proved clearly the impropriety of large quantities of gunpowder and explosive matter being allowed to be manufactured or stored in the vicinity of populous places, and that communications be made to the Home Office and to the local magistrates, pointing out the danger attending the establishment of powder magazines and warehouses in such places, and urging the discontinuance of existing licences and the refusal to grant new licences for the same purpose in future. A committee was appointed to carry out the resolution, and it was decided that it be an instruction to the committee to consider the present mode of carrying powder in barges, and to make proper representations to Government on the subject. The meeting was then adjourned until after the inquest, in order to obtain some idea of the amount of claims for compensation. A meeting with a similar object was held on Thursday at Belvedere.

METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS.—The Metropolitan Board of Works are required by their Act to keep their account with the Bank of England, and as they have 200,000*l.* to place out at interest for three months, the Bank under the circumstances have agreed to treat this case as an exceptional one, and to allow 5 per cent. interest on the deposit.

NEW MAGISTRATES.—The Lord Chancellor, on the recommendation of the Marquis of Salisbury, as lord-lieutenant of the county, has placed the names of Alderman and Sheriff Dakin and Mr. Henry Lowman Taylor, a leading member of the Court of Common Council and of the Metropolitan Board of Works, upon the commission of the peace for Middlesex; and has also appointed them magistrates for the city of Westminster.

TESTIMONIAL TO SIR MOSES MONTEFIORE.—On Thursday the thanks of the Common Council of the City of London were publicly presented to Sir Moses Montefiore for the distinguished services which he has rendered to the cause of suffering humanity all over the world, without distinction of class or creed. The Lord Mayor in a short speech, expressed the feeling of the Court, and Sir Moses made a suitable reply.

PROPOSED OPENING OF SOUTHWARK BRIDGE.—At the Court of Common Council on Thursday a proposal to open Southwark Bridge free to the public for six months as an experiment was presented by the Bridge House Estates Committee, and ordered to be printed and circulated among the members, for further consideration.

DEMOLITION OF THE EXHIBITION OF 1862 BUILDING.—Two of the great features of the building—the brick arches—disappeared on Saturday last and on the preceding Saturday. The eastern arch was first demolished. A party of Royal Engineers from Chatham was employed for some days previously in lodging charges of powder to demolish the large arch which supported the eastern gable end of the nave. The arch was of brickwork, in Portland cement, semicircular in form, with a span of 59 feet. It was built on three bands, each about 2 feet 6 inches deep, so that the total depth of the arch was 7 feet 6 inches, the width of the top band being 6 feet, and that of the lower one 3 feet. To have demolished this arch in the ordinary way would have necessitated the use of extensive scaffolding, and would have involved considerable labour. It was therefore suggested that it would form a good experiment for the Royal Engineers. Mr. Freake, who has bought the material of the building, and is pulling it down, willingly agreed to the proposal, and the Sappers accordingly commenced work by boring four holes in each haunch of the arch to receive small charges of powder. This method was adopted as being safer than the more expeditious plan of using a single large charge at each haunch, which would probably have caused some of the bricks to fly in a dangerous way. The total amount of powder used was 19 lb. Half-past 12 on Saturday the 24th having been fixed upon as the time for the explosion, and the part of the Exhibition Road in front of the arch having been cleared by the police in case of accident, the officer in charge of the party fired the charges simultaneously by means of an electric battery. The effect was very satisfactory, the haunches of the arch were broken and slightly pushed out, the crown opened, and the parts fell together, separating into several pieces in their fall. The demolition of the western arch took place on Saturday evening in the same manner.

SCHOOL OF NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.—The Committee of Council on Education, after communication with the Admiralty and the Institute of Naval Architects, have determined to open at South Kensington a Royal school of naval architecture and marine engineering. The school is for the instruction not only of Admiralty pupils from the dockyards and officers of the navy, but also of naval architects and shipbuilders in wood and iron, marine engineers, foremen of works, shipwrights, &c. The Admiralty have deposited their collection of naval models at the South Kensington Museum, and the Committee of Council trust that private shipbuilders will give their assistance in rendering the collection more complete. The school will have a yearly session at South Kensington of six months, from November to April. It will open early in November next. When the school is not open arrangements will be made, if possible, for study in the Royal dockyards and in private yards. Four free studentships will be given in competition if qualified candidates come up, and to the best two of these scholarships of 50*l.* per annum. The competition this year will take place early in November, at a time to be hereafter announced. Diplomas will be given to all persons, whether they have received their instructions at the school or not, who pass the final examinations of the school, provided they give satisfactory evidence of having gone through the course of practical work recommended by the Council of the Institute of Naval Architects. These diplomas will be of two grades, according to the success of the candidate in the examination, the title of the higher grade being Fellow, and of the lower Graduate of the Royal Society of Naval Architecture. Certificates for success in special subjects and prizes also will be given to the students at the end of the session. The Rev. J. Woolley, LL.D., has been appointed Director, Mr. C. W. Merrifield, F.R.S., Principal, and Mr. Purkiss, the Senior Wrangler of the present year, Vice Principal of the new school.

Union of City Benefices.—The first union under the Bishop of London's Bill is on the point of being carried into effect. It is that of the parish of Allhallows, Lombard Street, with the parishes of St. Benet, Gracechurch, and St. Leonard, Eastcheap. In 1801 these parishes contained together a population of 1412 souls. The population has gone on gradually decreasing, and in 1861 had diminished to 805. The rector of Allhallows has enjoyed an income of 396*l.* per annum, and the rector of St. Benet with St. Leonard an income of 302*l.* per annum. Neither of them resided on their benefices. The consent of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, of the vestries of the respective parishes, and of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners has been obtained by the Bishop to the intended union, and the scheme now only awaits ratification by her Majesty in Council. The Rev. Thomas Jones, who had been rector of Allhallows since 1853, died within the last few weeks, so that the provisions of the scheme will, after the order is gazetted, be brought into immediate operation. The provisions are of the most simple description. The surviving rector (the Rev. Charles Mackenzie, M.A.) is to be rector of the united parishes with the united endowments; the Church of Allhallows, Lombard Street, which will afford room for all the parishioners, is to be the church of the united parishes, and a parsonage for the rector is to be at once provided so as to secure his actual residence. The Church of St. Benet, at the corner of Fenchurch Street, is to be taken down, and the site offered to the Commissioners of Sewers for public improvements, at a price to be agreed upon, subject to the consent of the Lord Mayor and the Bishop of London. With part of the proceeds of this sale a new church is to be built, and a new parish formed in a densely-peopled and destitute part of Stepney, to be called "St. Benet's, Stepney," and endowed with at least 300*l.* a year. It is also understood that as the rectory of St. Clement's, Eastcheap, has become vacant by the death of the Rev. W. Johnson, advantage will be taken of this event to unite that benefice to those of St. Mary Abchurch, and St. Lawrence Pountney.

Improvement of Ludgate Hill.—At the last meeting of the City Commission of Sewers, Mr. Haywood, the engineer, laid before them a plan for effecting a great improvement at Ludgate Hill, west of the new railway bridge now constructing by the London Chatham and Dover Railway Company. By this plan it is proposed to form a circus, 160 feet in diameter, at the junction of Ludgate Hill, Bridge Street, Fleet Street, and Farringdon Street; to make a resting place in the centre of the circus, and thus to cause the traffic going in any direction to travel round it to get to the opposite side. The obelisks are to be set back, resting places are to be formed round them, so as to facilitate the crossing of foot passengers, and further to regulate the carriage traffic. As the whole of the property on the Ludgate Hill side of the circus is to be removed, the commission will only have to acquire such vacant ground as may be requisite, and one-half of the circus can be carried out very shortly. It will be in itself a great easement to the traffic, even if the other side be not completed. To complete the western half of the circus three houses only would have to be taken down; these the commission can acquire under the powers of its Act, should it approve of the plan and be able to obtain the funds to carry it out. In answer to a question, Mr. Haywood said he had every reason to believe that the London Chatham and Dover Company would be disposed to assist in carrying out the improvement. Several of the Commissioners considered the subject to be one of great public importance, and it was resolved to refer the plan to the Improvement Committee to consider and report.

Holborn Valley Improvement.—The following provisions of the Act authorising the Corporation to raise the Holborn Valley will be read with interest:—The plans, sections, and books of reference will remain in the respective offices in which they are deposited for inspection until the completion of the works, 1*s.* being charged for each inspection. The Act provides for, 1. a viaduct, or high-level street, commenced at Ely Court, Holborn Hill, and terminating in Skinner Street, at the Old Bailey; 2. a new street commencing at the junction of Hatton Garden with Holborn Hill, and terminating in the Farringdon Road, nearly opposite the spot where the new line of street from the Metropolitan Meat Market will join Farringdon Road; 3. a street commencing at St. Sepulchre's Church, on the north side of Skinner Street, and terminating in Farringdon Road, about 50 yards to the north of Snow Hill; 4. the widening of Shoe Lane, and the raising of that lane so as to form a junction with the roadway of the viaduct. The west side of Farringdon Road between Holborn Hill and the junction of the new street No. 2 is to be widened, and the levels of Farringdon Street and Farringdon Road are to be altered, commencing at Newcastle Street and terminating about 230 feet north of New Charles Street, beyond the Metropolitan Railway Station. Snow Hill, Field Lane, and Great Saffron Hill, between Holborn Hill and Charles Street, are to be stopped up and otherwise appropriated, as are also the present roadway of Skinner Street and Holborn Hill and the south end of King Street and Ely Place. If the Corporation do not purchase the property scheduled within five years after the passing of the Act, their compulsory powers to make such purchase are to cease. Should the viaduct, or raised way, and new lines of street be not completed within five years, viz., by 1869, the powers given by the Act to the Corporation are to cease, except as to so much of it as may then be completed.

William Roupell, the ex-M.P.—The Porchester, transport vessel, which has left Deptford this week with 300 convicts for Gibraltar, was to have taken out with them William Roupell, the ex-M.P. for Lambeth, but it was found that his stay in England is necessary in connection with the property affected by his forgeries. He is at present employed in the Extension Works at Chatham, and may be seen daily as a common labourer, dressed in a grey coarse convict suit, using a spade or pick-axe, getting stone, or yoked with other convicts to a cart on the works in progress for the enlargement of Chatham Dockyard.

Fatal Accident on Board her Majesty's Ship Phaeton.—On the 19th of August, on the passage of the Phaeton from Fortress Monroe to Jamaica, the main topsail tye was carried away, and Lieutenant Charles A. F. Paget, being officer of the watch, was struck on the head by the fly-block, which fractured his skull. He remained insensible, and died in 10 minutes. He was buried the next day with the usual honours, deeply regretted by his messmates. This promising young officer was the third son of Lord William Paget and grandson of the late Marquis of Anglesea.

The Mysterious Death on the Metropolitan Railway.—On Monday afternoon, the adjourned inquest on the woman who was unknown at the previous sitting on the 14th ult., but who has since been identified as Emma Jane Gollop, aged 31, a married woman, who was killed at the Portland Road Station of the Metropolitan Railway on Sunday, the 11th ult., was resumed at the Board Room of Marylebone Workhouse. The man Powell, in whose company she was proved to have been up to the moment of the starting of the train from the platform, was in attendance. Mr. Charles Prichard, of 3, Crescent Street, Euston Square, identified the body as that of his daughter, and said she was the wife of a chairmaker named Henry Gollop. He last saw her alive between 8 and 9 o'clock on the evening of her death with her husband at a public-house in the Euston Road. She was then quite sober. Henry Gollop, of 15, Earl Street, Lisson Grove, said that deceased was his wife. He last saw her alive standing with Powell on the platform of the Portland Road Station, shortly after midnight. He was then in the train into which he had got at the Gower Street Station a few minutes before. She had been with him and Powell drinking at the public-house, and left there about 10 o'clock to get some tea and sugar. Francis Powell said that he resided at No. 1, Clarendon Street, Somers Town, and was an organ builder in the employ of Messrs. Hill & Son. He had been acquainted with the deceased and her family about nine years. On Saturday night the 10th ult. he had been drinking with her and her husband at a public-house, and after he had left them deceased met him in the road and asked him for more drink. They then went into three other publichouses, where they had gin-and-water. She then wanted him to see her home, but he said it was too far. She then asked him to go as far as the station, and he did so. On arrival there deceased said she would not go unless he went too, saying, "Don't be afraid; I have money for the tickets." He then took two tickets, and followed her to the platform. When she got towards the end of the train it began to move slowly, and on his looking in that direction he saw her falling apparently on her hands and knees. Knowing that she was tipsy he ran away and left her, fearing she would get him as well as herself into trouble. He got out of the station as soon as he could. He ran partly up one staircase, and, finding a barrier, he then went up the other, where there was an official taking tickets, and, as he could not find one, he paid him 2*d.* and passed, and went away home. He believed he gave deceased the tickets. He did not know anything had happened to her till the Wednesday afternoon following. The solicitor for the Railway Company said he was in a position to produce positive evidence that one of the two tickets issued to this witness and deceased was used that night and delivered up at the Edgware Road Station by some one, and it could not have been deceased. The coroner, in summing up the evidence, said he did not think that any criminal charge had been established against Powell, but it became a question as to whether proper precautions were taken by the company for the safety of passagers. The jury ultimately returned a verdict. "That the deceased was killed while attempting to get into a train on the Metropolitan Railway on the morning of the 11th September, and that her death was accidental." They, however, appended the following resolution to their verdict:—

"The jury empanelled on the 14th September, and adjourned to the 3d October, 1864, at the St. Marylebone Workhouse, on the body of Emma Jane Gollop, who came by her death on the Metropolitan Railway on the 11th September last, having returned a verdict of Accidental Death, are of opinion that on the arrival of the train at the Portland Road Station, where the accident happened, there was not a proper complement of officials to secure the safety of the passengers, and recommended to the attention of the Metropolitan Railway Company greater caution on this point in future."

Case of Shooting in Epping Forest.—An inquest was held at the London Hospital last week on the body of a boy named Jamieson, who was shot in Epping Forest by another boy named Mordaunt. It seemed that Mordaunt, who is only about 15 years of age, had been entrusted with a gun, and was using it in bravado about Epping Forest. Some angry words passed between him and a group of other boys, among whom was the deceased, when he levelled the gun at deceased and fired at him. The inquest was adjourned to Monday last, when the jury returned a verdict of death from accident and misadventure. The father of the deceased expressed himself dissatisfied with the verdict, and at the Ilford Petty Sessions on Saturday the magistrates, in remanding the case for a week, intimated their intention to send the prisoner for trial, but admitted him to bail.

Supposed Child Murder at Acton.—At the Hammersmith police court on Saturday, two women named Campbell and Harris, well dressed persons, who had been living at Argyll Lodge, Mill Hill Road, Acton, were charged with having concealed the birth of two children. A woman employed by them as a sempstress and their servant, while sweeping out a room found the bodies of two children in a box. Information was given to the police, and the prisoners were taken into custody. The surgeon who had examined the bodies expressed an opinion that the children had been born two years ago. The prisoners were remanded for further inquiry, but admitted to bail in two sureties of 100*l.* each.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths registered in London in the week that ended on Saturday, October 1, were 1284. The deaths in the corresponding week of the 10 years 1854-63, deducting the deaths from epidemic cholera in the 39th week of 1854, and corrected for increase of population, were 1252. The present return is therefore 32 above the average. During the week the births of 1062 boys and 961 girls, in all 2023 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1900.

Provincial.

Bilston.—A meeting of colliers on strike was held in this town on Tuesday. There were upwards of 2000 men present, but the proceedings were of a very orderly character. It was resolved to continue the strike until the masters give the men the wages they demand. A second request that the men would consent to have the dispute settled by the arbitration of the Lord-Lieutenants of Staffordshire and Worcestershire and the Mayor of Birmingham was resolutely refused. The men said that they would play for another 13 weeks before they would give in. It was also resolved to send a delegate into Lancashire to the miners there, in order to prevail upon them to strike, and thus prevent 10,000 tons of coal a day from coming into South Staffordshire. On Thursday a conference took place between Lord Leigh and the coal masters, in which his lordship urged them to make concessions to the men, but they declined to do so; and the proposed mediation has consequently been rejected by both parties.

Burton-on-Trent.—An investigation of great interest has just taken place in Thor's Cave, the magnificent cavern which has its opening in the face of a limestone cliff, at the height of about 250 feet above the level of the river Manifold, above the Wetton and Butterton Road. Several attempts have been made to ascertain the archæological treasures that might reasonably be supposed to be contained on the floor of the cave, but all researches until the present time have proved fruitless. Impressed by the favourable position of the cavern, its main entrance facing almost due north, Mr. Edwin Brown of this town has long been under the impression that there was a great probability of discovering in the mud of the cave both bones and teeth of some of those extinct animals which inhabited this country during the glacial epoch, the northerly currents of which period conveyed the mud into the cave; or, failing geological discoveries, that there might be found traces of the ancient tribes of the human race having inhabited the precincts of the cave, which traces had escaped the partial attempts of previous explorers to detect. To the end that an efficient search should be made, a small grant of money was lately obtained from the Midland Scientific Association; the permission of the Duke of Devonshire was freely granted, and the services of Mr. Samuel Carrington, of Wetton, as superintendent of the works, were enlisted. Operations were commenced systematically a few days ago. Men were employed carefully to remove the floor of the cave layer by layer, and, after submitting it to the practised eye of Mr. Carrington, to throw it through a cleft of the rock down the western declivity of the hill. Many hours had not elapsed before articles of Celtic manufacture presented themselves. The cave had evidently been occupied at various times and for long periods by the wild tribes of our island, who, levelling spaces in the floor in some out-of-the-way nook of the cavern, made their fires and carried on all the operations of ordinary life. Layers of charcoal, burnt to the state of soot, were found more than a foot in thickness, together with numerous fragments of pottery of the Celtic and Romano-Celtic periods, and bones of animals that had been used as food. In one place, near the stone known as the "Druids' altar," and about 5 feet from the surface, an ancient interment was discovered. The skeleton was placed in the contracted form common to the most ancient burials, but, being unprotected by any cist, the bones were much crushed. It was accompanied by a bone instrument, made apparently from the brow antler of the red deer, perforated in two different directions, and with a hole also at the base. Probably it had been used with strings as a fastening to the skin cloak of the deceased, but as no similar article has ever been discovered in the many barrows that have been opened by Mr. Carrington, or by the late Mr. Bateman and others, in Staffordshire or Derbyshire, the use is at present problematical. It is a singular circumstance that several other similar articles were found in different parts of the cave. The collection of antiquities so far brought to light comprises bones carved in several peculiar ways, fragments of gritstone querns, an armilla and a fine fibula of the harp pattern, both of bronze; several bronze articles of very peculiar construction, more or less highly ornamented, and of which the uses cannot at present be even guessed; whetstones of two kinds, one of them perforated to suspend to the dress; a stone curiously shaped and pierced, possibly used to attach to a fishing net; iron knives of ancient pattern; also a spear-head, an arrow-head, and an adze of unusual shape, all of iron; a large Y-shaped piece of iron, use unknown, and other articles too numerous or too obscure to be catalogued. The discovery cannot fail to be of great interest to all who have studied the history of our barbarous British tribes. It is, however, singular that so far no discovery has been made of flint instruments, nor of bones of extinct animals, but the researches which are being continued may yet bring both to light, as the operations now in progress promise the discovery shortly of the passage by which the cavern is continued into the heart of the hill.

Devonport.—Miss Julia Genevra St. Aubyn, eldest daughter of the Rev. W. J. St. Aubyn, rector of Stoke Damarel, and niece of the lord of the manor of this town, died last week from the result of an accident by fire. The evidence at the inquest showed that she had purposed going with her father to dine with the Bishop of Jamaica at the house of Mr. Samuel Triscott, on the evening of Saturday, the 17th ult., and had nearly completed her toilet for the occasion, when in stooping she brought her arm too near a lighted candle, and one of the sleeves of her dress became ignited. The flames rapidly spread to other portions of her clothes, and she ran to her father, who was in an adjoining room. He immediately extinguished the fire, but, unfortunately, such severe burns had already been received that she died from their effects. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

Driffield.—Just 12 months ago a series of incendiary fires took place upon the Yorkshire Wolds and in the North of Lincolnshire, in which not less than 30,000*l.* value of grain and property was destroyed. The last of the supposed incendiaries among those men known as "the Wold rangers," was committed to prison by the Norton bench on Saturday last on a charge of poaching, and on the same day the mania for firing stackyards seems to have broken out afresh. Since Saturday fires of an alarming nature have occurred upon the old ground, and the Wold country is just now in as great a state of alarm and anxiety as it was during the disasters of last winter. Scarcely a prisoner who has been committed but has uttered threats of vengeance during the present winter, and it would really seem that these threats have more meaning in them than has been generally thought. The incendiary fire of Saturday took place at Scawby, a village south of the Humber, where cattlesheds and the produce of 19 acres of Barley and 12 of Wheat formed one immense fire, visible for many miles. On the same day Mr. Denison's stacks at Minsthorpe were found to be on fire. In this case about 400*l.* damage was sustained, but it is thought that children playing with lucifers may have caused this fire. Throughout Monday night the inhabitants of the whole Wold district were alarmed by one of the largest conflagrations that has yet occurred, and which illumined the sky to such an extent that it seemed as if the whole range of the Wolds had been set on fire, in fulfilment of the threats of some of the incendiaries. This conflagration was also south of the Humber, at Warren, near Barton, but it was distinctly seen for 50 miles, and it totally destroyed the produce of 500 acres of land in corn and hay. The total loss in buildings and produce is stated to be 4000*l.*, but the owner, Mr. John Stephenson, is believed to be insured. On Tuesday another fire, just off the Wold district, at Hull Bridge, near Beverley, broke out, the origin of which is also far from clear.

Falmouth.—On Saturday a fine specimen of the diodon, or basking shark, weighing nearly 7 cwt., was captured at Newquay, in this county, about a mile from the shore. On Tuesday the captain of a smack lying in Porthleven harbour, observed near the shore a strange fish, covered with scales, and eventually effected its capture. It proved to be an albicore, a fish generally found in the tropics, about 3½ feet long, and weighed three quarters of a cwt.

Ironbridge.—A fatal accident, causing the loss of nine lives, occurred in the Madeley Wood Pit on Tuesday, the 27th ult. The last relay of workmen were ascending the pit, having left off work for the day, when some part of the machinery gave way, and three men and six boys were precipitated to the bottom and killed on the spot. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

Liverpool.—On Sunday the 25th ult. a man called Ellis Green, a pavior, aged 47, while in a state of drunkenness, made a brutal attack on his wife's sister, Elizabeth Lowe, aged 34, who lived with them and their children. He first struck her a heavy blow between the eyes, which brought her to the ground on her back. He then stood on a box, 2 or 3 feet high, and jumped from it on her breast with his heavy boots on. The deceased managed to get up, and her sister, Mrs. Green, helped her into the court. Her face was covered with blood, she spat blood, and was so seriously injured internally that she died on Sunday last. At the inquest on Monday the medical evidence proved that the frontal bone was fractured into small pieces, which had been driven into the skull, the brain being completely covered with matter, produced by the detached pieces of bones. The jury returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against Green; and he was committed for trial under the coroner's warrant. It appears that no information was given to the police authorities, and it was only by accident that on Sunday they heard of the case.

Newcastle-under-Lyne.—On Saturday last Richard Fielder, a sergeant of the 3d Staffordshire Militia, attempted to murder his wife in the barracks of this town. They had both been drinking, and the wife, whose drunken habits had led to a notice that they must leave the barracks, took some money out of her husband's pocket, which so enraged him that he deliberately loaded his rifle and shot her. Fortunately the bullet did not hit any vital part, but passed up her arm from the wrist to the elbow-joint and lodged in the wall behind. The husband, who complained bitterly that his wife had disgraced him, was taken into custody, and on Monday was committed for trial at the next Staffordshire Assizes on the charge of attempting to commit murder.

Oxford.—The site of the old workhouse in this city has been purchased for the Roman Catholics, who are about to erect upon it a college on a grand and extensive scale. Father Newman, formerly Fellow of Oriel College, previous to his going over to the Church of Rome, is spoken of as the first head of this new collegiate establishment. Some time ago the Roman Catholic nobility and gentry expressed their willingness to send their sons to the University of Oxford, and it is anticipated that many will avail themselves of this opportunity of doing so.

Portsmouth.—At a meeting of the Town Council, acting as the local Board of Health under the provisions of the Local Government Act recently adopted in this borough, a report was read from the Drainage Committee, recommending that the plan for the complete drainage of the town proposed by Mr. Lewis Angell, C.E., the engineer to the Board, and approved by Mr. Hawkshaw, C.E., should be carried out without delay. The motion for the adoption of the report was carried with only three dissentients. The estimated cost is 100,000*l.*, but the actual cost will in all probability considerably exceed that amount.

Preston.—The inquest on the body of Mary Barry, who was murdered in this town by her husband, William Barry, on the 13th ult., was resumed in the police court on Friday. After the evidence previously given had been read over, about a dozen witnesses were examined in regard to the state of the prisoner's mind, and to his conduct anterior and subsequent to the tragedy. At the conclusion of the evidence the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the prisoner, who was committed to Lancaster Assizes for trial.

Salthill.—At the annual dinner of the Royal South Buckinghamshire Agricultural Association, on Wednesday, Mr. Tromper, in giving the toast of the "County Members," remarked that Mr. Disraeli, in his speech the other day at Aylesbury, had described farmers and farming in a too roseate hue. The returns from wheat, the staple article of their produce, were most unsatisfactory, and this year their Turnip fields were in a miserable condition. He was told that one effect of the right hon. gentleman's speech was that wheat fell 2*s.*, but he was sure that was a result which the right hon. gentleman did not wish. At this moment the food of beasts, were producing a higher price than the great article of human consumption. He dissented from the proposal of the right hon. gentleman to cross Downs with Cotswolds. Mr. Disraeli, he said:—

"Mr. Tromper has thought fit—and no man from his experience was more entitled to do so—to make some remarks about observations which I recently made before a party of my constituents in another part of the county. I am sure you will allow me very briefly to notice these observations as I am apt to think, upon reflection, that you will be inclined to think that my views are not so ill-founded as Mr. Tromper would lead you to suppose with regard to the character of the present harvest—a very grave question, upon which no one ought to speak with levity or thoughtlessness. I certainly formed my opinion from information which reached me from various parts of the country. From that information I formed an opinion that we had a very fine harvest: and, as regards that part of England in which I am most interested, namely, the county which I represent, I had some individual means of some personal opportunities of obtaining information. I had listened and observed in the Chiltern Hill, in my own immediate neighbourhood, and from what I learned and observed, I thought the harvest had realised the expectations which it had received in the greater part of the country. I did not mean to say that all crops had succeeded. I cannot recall a harvest in which some result has occurred, but I thought that the general results of the harvest were highly satisfactory. I visited the northern part of our county, and our celebrated Vale, and all my opportunities of observation led me to think that the ordinary character which was given to the crops was sound, and that it was abundant and successful. I made, however, I made one mistake. I was remiss in not visiting the extreme south of the county, but the reason was that I found that all the parties agreed that the cereal crops were most abundant, and knowing what they were in the county which I lived, and learning what they were in the vale of Aylesbury, it never occurred to me that in the extreme south where there is a piece of corn land inferior to few in England, laid out most conveniently in ample and admirable farms, cultivated by some of the most skilful farmers in the country, I say it never occurred to me that in the land of the Tyrells, the Nashes, the Aldridges, and the Pullens, there was such a complete and absolute failure. There I confess I made a great mistake. I have learned again what I have often learned before, that you should never take anything for granted; but such was my confidence in the soil—such were my recollections of Chippenham farmers, and such my knowledge of the men whom I had always met with confidence as my constituents, that in the presence of abundance of cereal crops I believed that the south would produce results equal to that of any other part of the county. And from what I have seen since I cannot believe—even after the Demosthenic vigour of Mr. Tromper—that this favoured part of the county of Buckingham has been struck with that barrenness to which he has alluded. Indeed, when I listened with attention to the speech of my friend, I discovered towards the end that it was not so much low production as low prices that he complained of. Gentlemen, I honestly admit that I cannot share high prices. I once supported a system—as did the majority of the gentlemen connected with the cultivation of land in this country—which might have had the effect that has been now universally given up by the country. I don't think that I shall be called upon to secure high prices that way by the skilful farmers of Buckingham. Mr. Disraeli stated that at this moment food for men commands a better price than food for beasts, and asked, 'What are we to do?' I will tell you what to do—produce food for beasts. Our business as traders is to get a good return for the employment of your capital; and although I regret that the admirable cereal productions of this part of the country do not command a price which can remunerate the grower, still if you consider that what is only intended for beasts will give you a larger price, as commercial men we have only one line to take under the circumstances. I must refer to the statement, which if I cannot contradict, must cost me the honour of representing you, namely, that the unhappy observations which I made to your fellow-citizens at Aylesbury absolutely lowered the price of wheat. My friend Mr. Tromper, who is a cautious man, said that he had heard it, but he had an ardent supporter behind me who stated that it was quite true. I have rarely seen so serious a charge made, and I do not know upon what authority the portentous conclusion has been arrived at. Now, I satisfied myself that the result of my observations at Aylesbury, if I had any intention upon the subject, must have had a contrary tendency. If any person of authority, who is supposed to have the confidence of some part of the country, announces that the harvest has been so prolific and so abundant that it has seldom been equalled, the foreign importer will begin to pause, and ask what was the use of sending his produce to an island where he was told there was such a harvest. I should therefore say that if I had not made that speech the price of Wheat would have sunk 4*s.* instead of 2*s.* The third charge against me is that I recommended the farmers at Aylesbury to cross their Downs with Cotswolds. What have we heard against that proposition? An immense deal of declamation; but no facts, no data are placed before you which should make you for a moment give up your own opinion. An hon. friend of mine who represents a Cotswold county—who generally, when I have made some after-dinner remarks, follows me with some very grave observations—has made some reference to the views which I offered upon that occasion. Mr. Walter, above all men that I know, has the happy art of making the most oracular observations in the most oracular manner. He has doubts—he has doubts, of the justness of my observation, and his only answer is an à priori one. Everybody takes it for granted that if the Downs of this county are crossed by a Cotswold ram, then immediately the meat will grow coarse and inferior. But has any one proved that? I have asked gentlemen, and I believe there are gentlemen in this room who have tried that experiment, and I have been told by them that the result is very different from that which is announced without any proof whatever. If you cross a flock of Southdowns with a Cotswold ram, the effect upon the meat is not of a considerable character; but what is the effect upon the fleece? I suppose you get 5*s.* more for each fleece that you produce, and that your flock amounts to 300, then in those days of agricultural desolation described by my friend, you will find that at the end of the year a profit of 5*s.* on 300 fleeces is an item not to be despised. Nobody supposes that you are going to cross like as many cousins intermarrying. You cross with discretion, and you will find that a fine black nose will never propagate coarse meat. I can't have gone over the Salthill indictment, and I appeal to your confidence whether I have not replied to those charges that have been brought forward. I feel confident that in a short time you will be all of my opinion, that it has been a good harvest. My test of a good harvest is this—Why is there not a great importation of corn? If there were a great importation of corn at the present moment it is impossible to describe the disastrous effects that it would have upon the public credit, and consequently upon the public property of the country. It ought to be some consolation to the farmers of the country that by their skill, under Divine Providence, they have produced such abundant cereal crops; that at the moment when the credit of the country was in a most delicate state, and when it was strained to its utmost, they have saved us from a commercial collapse, the effects of which would have been of a most deleterious and dangerous character. (A Voice, 'What thanks do they get for it?' Our farmers may be proud of their position, and ought to feel a great satisfaction that the crops which have been produced under their skill have preserved the country from one of the most severe and serious panics that probably ever could have occurred in England."

SUNDERLAND.—The French frigate Danae and the corvette l'Expeditive are now paying a visit to this port. The mayor and officials of the borough have entertained the officers at a public dinner and ball, and the Naval Reserve men have also given a public dinner to the crew.

WINDSOR.—A shocking tragedy was discovered on Sunday afternoon in the village of old Windsor. A man named Cook, who was formerly in business as a barber at Eton, had resided for four years in the village. About eight months ago his wife died, leaving him with five young children. It was known that his family was in distress, and various parties in the neighbourhood had given them relief. On Sunday afternoon suspicion was excited by the circumstance that neither he nor any of his children were seen about the place. On a forcible entrance being made it was found that three of his little girls were lying, side by side, dead in one room. In another room a girl about 12 years of age was found suffering from the effects of poison, but still living; and in another room was the man himself and a girl about eight years of age, each with their throats cut, but still alive. The father, however, died in the course of the evening. It is supposed that his mind had become affected by his poverty, aggravated by the recent death of his wife. One of the two children who were found living when the house was entered, died on Tuesday, but the other still survives, and hopes are entertained of her recovery. At the inquest on Wednesday the jury returned a verdict that the father destroyed himself and his children by poison, but that there was no satisfactory evidence to show the state of his mind at the time.

YORK.—A melancholy accident occurred on the 28th ult, at an hotel in this city. A box containing a loaded revolver was found under the pillow in one of the bedrooms, and was taken into the bar with a view to find out the owner. Mr. Sams Parke, of Manchester, who was staying in the hotel, was in the act of examining it, when the pistol went off and the ball lodged in the temple of Miss Kilvington, the barmaid, causing death in a few hours. At the inquest it was proved that the pistol, every barrel of which was loaded with ball, had been left in the hotel by Mr. Wright, innkeeper, of Hull. The evidence showed clearly that the explosion was the result of an accident, and that its effect on the mind of Mr. Parke himself had been such that the medical men considered it would be dangerous to remove him to be present at the inquest. The coroner, in summing up, exonerated Mr. Parke from blame, but threw it upon Mr. Wright, for the careless manner in which he had left so dangerous a weapon within the reach of others. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

Ireland.

THE VICEROYALTY.—The announcement that the Earl of Carlisle's health has compelled him to resign the Lord-Lieutenancy, and that Lord Wodehouse, Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, has been appointed his successor, has not diminished the general desire to have the Prince of Wales as Viceroy of Ireland. A recent correspondence in the Times has powerfully influenced the movement on this subject. At the dinner of the Ballinasloe Society the Earl of Clancarty stated that he would wish to see the Prince occupying the viceregal position in Dublin, where they would have an opportunity of knowing and valuing their future Sovereign. The Princess was one who would be an ornament to the throne, and who, if she were in Dublin, would be looked upon as the loveliest of the lovely. Major Darcey also expressed a wish that the Prince would go to Ireland, and that the Queen should occasionally hold her Court in Dublin. It would make them feel less like a colony of Great Britain under a Governor, and more like a part and parcel of the empire.

STATUE OF FATHER MATHEW.—The bronze statue of the late Father Mathew, by Mr. Foley, will be inaugurated in Cork on the 10th inst., the anniversary of the birthday of the "Apostle of Temperance." The site selected is at the north-end of Patrick Street, near Patrick's Bridge. The figure appears in the dress commonly worn by Father Mathew, who is represented in the act of administering the "pledge," the right arm and hand extended in an attitude of benediction, while the left holds a temperance medal.

A SHERIFF'S OFFICER SHOT DEAD BY A BARRISTER.—On Thursday, the 29th ult., bailiffs went to distrain from Mr. William Odell, barrister, and clerk to the School of Art, Royal Dublin Society, at Rathmines. Mr. Odell cautioned them against proceeding, and on their persisting, shot one through the head. The man died immediately. Mr. Odell was arrested on Friday and committed for trial on the charge of Wilful Murder.

Railways.

THE BLACKFRIARS RAILWAY BRIDGE.—On Thursday the directors of the London Chatham and Dover Railway, with a number of their friends, passed over the new railway bridge at Blackfriars, in a train consisting of several carriages. The rails were found to allow of easy and steady locomotion, and there was no oscillation on the bridge. A number of persons had assembled on the temporary bridge at Blackfriars to witness the experiment, and the train as it passed was loudly cheered. It is understood that the line is in readiness to be opened to the City side of the river as soon as the Government inspector has given his sanction.

Sporting.

THE EXPECTED PRIZE FIGHT.—The battle between Mace and Coburn, which was appointed to take place on Tuesday in Ireland, did not come off. It was, according to Coburn's nomination on Friday, to take place between Gooldis Cross station and Cashel, but the representatives of the men disagreed on Monday about the selection of a referee, and those acting for Mace stated that they would return to England that evening. Coburn's agent declared that his man was anxious for a fight, and would appear at the proper hour at the ringside. Neither Mace nor any of the pugilists who visited Dublin went down by any of the trains on Monday or Tuesday. Coburn was stopping at a farmhouse near Gooldis Cross. The police searched for him, but he escaped. The match, therefore, is believed to be off. On all the stations from Kildare to Limerick Junction the police were on the alert, and several persons mistaken for Mace and Coburn were arrested on the line. The Limerick Chronicle states that Coburn, accompanied by his friends, faced the spot intended for the fight, amid tremendous shouts from an immense multitude assembled. It is understood that both parties claim the stakes.

Miscellaneous.

BEGGING LETTER WRITERS.—The Messager du Midi states that Baron Rothschild possesses the most voluminous collection of begging letters that any financier ever received. They form a complete series. Among the number is one lately addressed to the baron, containing the very tempting proposition that for the bagatelle of 50,000f. the writer would engage to show how he could prolong his life to the age of 150 years. The following is the baron's reply:—"Sir,—It has frequently happened to me to be threatened with death if I did not give a sum of money. You are certainly the first that has ever asked me for it in proposing to prolong my life. Your proposition is, without doubt, far better and more humane. But my religion teaches me that we are all under the hand of God, and I will not do anything to withdraw myself from His decrees. My refusal, moreover, does not in any way attack your discovery, from which you will not fail, I hope, to profit yourself. Regretting that I cannot accede to your proposal, I sincerely congratulate you on the 150 years which you are called on to live in this world.—Accept, &c., J. DE ROTHSCHILD."

Obituary.

GENERAL REEVE, Colonel of the 61st Regiment of Foot, died on Sunday morning at his seat in Lincolnshire, at an advanced age, having survived his wife, Lady Susan, youngest daughter of the fifth Earl of Harborough, only a few weeks, her ladyship having died on the 3d of last month. General Reeve entered the army exactly 64 years ago, as ensign in the Grenadier Guards. He served with that regiment in Sicily in 1806 and 1807, in Sir John Moore's campaign in 1808 and 1809, including the battle of Corunna; and in the expedition to Walcheren in 1809. He went to Cadiz in 1811, and remained in the Peninsula until the beginning of 1814. He was present at the passage of Bidassoa, the battles of the Nivelle and Nive, and served in the campaign of 1815, including the battles of Quatre Bras and Waterloo, the storming of Peronne and capture of Paris, remaining with the army of occupation until its return to England in 1818. He had received the war medal with three clasps. He attained the rank of Major General in 1841, Lieut.-General in 1851, and General in 1859. He was appointed Colonel of the 61st Regiment in 1852.

MR DAVID MORRIS, M.P for the Carmarthen burghs, died on Friday morning, in his 78th year. He was elected member for Carmarthen in 1837, and continued to represent the constituency in Parliament from that time uninterruptedly until his death, a period of 27 years. He was a liberal in politics, being a supporter of the ballot, abolition of church-rates, extension of the franchise, &c. He was the principal in the old-established banking firm of Messrs. David Morris & Sons, Carmarthen.

MR COMMISSIONER FANE, one of the Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy, died suddenly on Tuesday at Weymouth in his 69th year. He had been connected with the Court in different capacities for 38 years, and had filled the office of Commissioner since the year 1852. For some time past he has been in a feeble state of health, and unable from that cause to attend to his public duties.

MR. WILLIAM TAIT, formerly well-known as a publisher in Edinburgh, died on Tuesday at his house in Walker Street, in that city, in his 72d year. He was the son of an opulent builder, and has died unmarried, his nearest relative being his sister, the wife of Mr Adam Black, the publisher. In 1832 he established "Tait's Edinburgh Magazine," which became one of the organs of the ultra radical party, and was one of the precursors of cheap periodicals. About 16 years ago he retired from business, and purchased the house and property of Prior Bank, near Melrose, where he has chiefly resided ever since, though still retaining his house in Edinburgh. His naturally vigorous frame and temperate habits ensured him good health until last January, when a severe influenza was followed by a slight attack of a paralytic nature, from which he never quite rallied.

MR. MONTAGU GORE, who died a few days ago, was one of the family of the Gores of Barrow Court, and was born in 1811. He was well known in the literary world, and was a contributor to the newspaper press. He was never married. He sat in Parliament for Devizes in 1834, and for Barnstaple in 1841, and was an effective speaker in the House of Commons. He took considerable interest in the management of the National Life-boat Institution, and travelled a great deal to promote the establishment of sailors' homes.

BRITISH WOOLS.—London, Oct. 6.

Our quotations are still nominal, as the stock of fleeces is low for the season of the year, and no disposition exists to force it into the market, and a demand for any quantity would immediately restore the prices to their former position.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

Monday, Oct. 3.

The number of Beasts is nearly as large as on Monday last. Choice qualities are very scarce, and make higher prices; other kinds are selling about the same as of late. Sheep are not quite so plentiful, yet there are enough for the demand. Trade is slow, but quotations are still high. Trade is dull for Calves at rather lower rates. From Germany and Holland there are 3490 Beasts, 10,260 Sheep, 396 Calves, and 260 Pigs; from Ireland, 630 Beasts; and 2450 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

Thursday, Oct. 6.

The number of Beasts is smaller than for many weeks past and choice qualities are very scarce; consequently trade is active, at Monday's quotations. The supply of sheep is also small, but the demand is by no means large. Trade is slow at Monday's prices. Good Calves are not so plentiful as of late, and prices are higher. Our foreign supply consists of 530 Beasts, 1670 Sheep, and 310 Calves.

HOPS.—Borough Market, Friday, Oct. 7.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report an active demand for the new growth, a large proportion of which has already passed into the hands of the consumers. Choice samples are not plentiful, and command rather higher rates.

MARK LANE.—Monday, Oct. 3.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and met a slow sale at the prices of this day se'nnight. There was a moderate attendance, and foreign Wheat was neglected, but we do not alter our quotations. Malting Barley brought last week's rates. Grinding was 6d. to 1s. per qr. cheaper. Beans and Peas were unaltered in value. The arrivals of foreign Oats, consisting principally of Russian, are very large, and to effect sales it was necessary to submit to a decline of 1s. per qr., at which reduction a considerable quantity was sold. Flour was steady in value, without much decline.

Friday, Oct. 7.

The weather since the 30th ult. has been fine, with a clear atmosphere and lower temperature. The supplies of English Wheat having diminished, the trade throughout the kingdom has evinced a somewhat firmer tone, and previous prices have been fully established, in a few markets slightly exceeded. Malting Barley begins to attract rather more attention, particularly the finest quality, but grinding qualities continue to be depressed in value. Oats have been generally disposed of on rather lower terms, and in several important markets are quoted 6d. to 1s. per qr. cheaper. We observe little alteration in the value of Beans, but Peas are the turn lower. Flour has not changed in price. Since Friday last only one cargo of Maize has been reported off the coast, and the number of cargoes left on sale is reduced to five. In the absence of a supply, buyers hold back, and the transactions have been only trifling; the prices of all descriptions of grain must be quoted nominally unaltered. Paris, Oct. 6.—Flour continues difficult of sale at declining rates; Wheat, too, is neglected, and a further reduction of about 9d. per 480 lb. has been established. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 28,000 cwt. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. 6d. per 280 lb. The arrivals of foreign Barley are good, all other grain both English and foreign large, of foreign moderate. The attendance at this morning's market was again very small, and Wheat, both English and foreign, was offered at Monday's prices without attracting much attention; its value is consequently nominal. Spring Corn of all descriptions was unaltered in value, with the exception of Russian Oats, which met a better inquiry at a little over Monday's prices.

Liverpool, Oct. 4.—With a good attendance of millers and dealers at to-day's market we have to report a very healthy consumptive demand for Wheat at an improvement of 1d. per cental on fine ambers, and at previous rates for all other qualities. Flour steady, but no better to sell. Indian Corn finds an extended inquiry, and we have to quote round yellow fully 3d. per quarter dearer than on Friday; no change, however, has occurred in American. Oats and Oatmell very dull, and rather cheaper. Beans, Peas, and Barley have each a fair retail sale at former prices. Market closes with firmness.

Friday, Oct. 7.—Market moderately attended, but the business doing is dull, and prices would have improved but for the failures which have taken place of late, and which naturally cause much distrust.

News of the Week.

A telegram was received at the Foreign Office on Wednesday from General Cameron, announcing the welcome news that the war in New Zealand is at an end. General Cameron states that a meeting had taken place between the Governor of the colony and the natives of Tauranga, at which the Maoris submitted unconditionally to the Queen's authority, and placed their lands at the Governor's disposal. The despatch adds that they have been permitted to return to their lands, of which only a small portion will be forfeited.

By the Overland Mail we learn that the Viceroy was about to visit Lahore to hold a Durbar for the reception of all the Punjaub chiefs, after which he intended to hold a Durbar at Delhi, and then return to Calcutta and open the legislative session. It is stated that Sir Charles Trevelyan will return from India in April, and that no successor with the title of Finance Minister will be appointed. Accounts from Japan state that affairs in that country were becoming more and more complicated, and preparations were making for a commencement of hostilities.

A telegram from Vienna announces that the French Ambassador on Tuesday communicated to the Austrian Government a despatch from M. Drouyn de Lhuys, stating that the recent Convention between France and Italy has affected no Austrian interest, and that the French Government cannot presuppose that it has excited any irritation on the part of the Cabinet of Vienna, as such a feeling between two friendly Cabinets only appears intelligible when the course pursued by one affects any interest of the other. It says that the French Cabinet would rather hope that on a closer examination of the text of the Convention, the Austrian Government will be of opinion that the step taken by France deserves the thanks of Austria and of the whole of Europe, its main object being to set aside an obstacle by which European peace is permanently threatened, and by this means to lighten the heavy burdens which weigh upon all the Great Powers. Simultaneously with the announcement of this despatch, the Constitutionnel has published an article signed by its principal editor, for the purpose of allaying the disquieting rumours concerning Austria. After stating that the convention solely affects Rome, and in no way alters the position of the other parts of Italy, it says that all sensible men must understand that France has no desire to complicate the Roman question by the question of Venice, and to kindle in the north of the peninsula what she seeks to extinguish in the south.

The official journals of Vienna announce the immediate reduction of the Austrian army, and state that in Venetia alone the reduction will amount to 15,000 men.

A telegram from Copenhagen states that there is a prospect of the peace negotiations at Vienna being soon brought to a conclusion. Denmark, it is said, has agreed to the proportion which the Duchies are to have in the public property of the kingdom. The sum named is nine millions of rigsdalers.

Accounts from the United States inform us that after his victory at Fisher's Hill, General Sheridan pursued the Confederates to Broom's Gap, where he again attacked General Early, and was repulsed. General Early then assumed the offensive and drove Sheridan back six miles to Port Republic, and, it was believed, across the Shenandoah River at that point. The successes of the Confederates in Missouri are fully confirmed. General Price has captured Farmington, Potosi, and other towns, and is moving on St. Louis, which is in a state of great agitation. General Grant has resumed operations on the north side of the James River, and reports various successful movements against the Confederate lines. The position of General Sherman at Atlanta is threatened by General Forrest, who is operating in his rear with great success, while General Rousseau, who had been sent to oppose him, is retiring. General HOOD was advancing towards the Alabama line to support these operations.

From Quebec we learn that the GOVERNOR-GENERAL of Canada has summoned the colonial governors to a conference, to be held on the 10th inst. in that city, for the purpose of arranging the confederation of the British provinces.

Their Royal Highnesses proceeded to Glückstadt by special train, and are now staying at Fredensborg with the King and Queen of Denmark. It is understood that the infant Prince will return immediately to Scotland, by way of Lübeck, Hamburg, and Hull, in order to avoid the long sea journey; and that the Osborne, after landing his Royal Highness at Lübeck, will return to Copenhagen, to await the decision of the Prince and Princess as to their route homewards. Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Duke de Montebello, M. Adolphe Barrot, Monseigneur Darboy, Archbishop of Paris, MM. Boinvilliers, Godelle, Salignac-Fénelon, Chabrier, and Nieuwerkerke have been appointed Senators. The following diplomatic appointments have been made:—M. Benedetti as Ambassador to Berlin, Baron de Talleyrand to St. Petersburg, M. Mercier to Madrid, M. Châteaurenard to Washington, M. Reculot to Frankfort, Count Massignac to Teheran, M. Bourée to Lisbon, M. Gobineau to Athens, and M. Bondy to Hesse. The Mediterranean squadron returned to Toulon on Sunday morning. The Pays mentions, under reserve, a rumour of differences in the British Cabinet, which may bring about a modification in the Ministry. The Constitutionnel of Monday, in an article signed by M. Limayrac, opposes the views of extreme parties, who see in the Convention the fall of the temporal power and the abandonment of Rome. It says that the Convention "will be executed in letter and spirit. Thinking otherwise, the ultra-Italian press grievously insults the King of Italy, as do the clerical press the Pope." The same journal of Wednesday has an article, also signed by M. Limayrac, relative to the disquieting rumours concerning Austria. It says:—

"The Convention solely affects Rome, and in no way modifies the position of other parts of Italy. Without doubt agitators may continue to work in Venetia, and committees may issue proclamations speaking of an offensive and defensive alliance and of war in the spring. But this is not a new state of things, and is one for which the Convention is not responsible. All sensible men must understand that France has no desire to complicate the Roman question by the question of Venice, and to kindle in the north of the peninsula what she seeks to extinguish in the south."

The France and Patrie of Tuesday affirm that conciliatory ideas are beginning to prevail at Rome, and that an arrangement of the financial questions is not considered impossible. The same journals declare that a formal contradiction has been given to the statement that the Pope will refuse to reorganise his army. The speech which the Duke de Persigny delivered some time back at St. Etienne having been the object of many attacks, the Duke has recently addressed a letter to one of his friends, in which he replies to the objections of his critics. The following are the principal passages of the answer:—

"When comparing the organisation of English society with ours, I said that since, in France, the functions of authority were not confided to the electoral body itself as in England, but to an administrative hierarchy constituted apart from that body, it was impossible to establish amongst us the forms of English liberty without rendering authority subordinate to liberty, and thus ruining one by the other; and this all-important consideration imposed on us the obligation of founding our institutions on the separation of authority and liberty, instead of uniting them in the same hands as in England. This was the substance of my speech. As the liberty founded by the Empire is, after all, only an application of the theories propounded by Locke and Montesquieu, it would have been curious to see professors of liberalism assail the leading doctrine of these two great chiefs of modern liberalism. Nothing could have been more piquant than the refutation, by the Liberal school, of the famous chapter of the Esprit des Lois which treats of the condition of liberty among all nations. When the illustrious philosopher so strikingly demonstrated that liberty resides in the separation of the three great powers which exist in every kind of society—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial—and that as they happen to be more or less united, in the hands of one man or one assembly, or more or less separated and independent, so despotism or liberty prevails, he little thought that the day would come when his faithless disciples, more occupied with particular aims than with liberty itself, would abjure his doctrines. What do I say? They have not ventured to deny the doctrines; but, finding it more prudent to ignore them, they have passed by without seeing them. Do you know, in fact, in what light they consider the thesis of my speech? Sometimes as the glorification of administrative centralisation in opposition to the liberal principles of the Government, and sometimes as the exposition of a political régime which would exclude any change in the present state, by condemning beforehand all the progress of which liberty is capable. The last of those two charges appears to me to be puerile. How, in fact, admit that a nation which disposes in a sovereign manner of the legislative power by means of universal suffrage, can be deprived, against its will, of the progress which it may wish to be accomplished? In what can the principle and form of the institutions of France be an obstacle to the manifestation of her will? From the moment that the country is rendered the master of its destinies, its liberty is founded, for it has the means of realising, whenever it pleases, all the developments which it may consider to be required. To itself, therefore, still more than to the founder of liberty, belongs the power of accelerating or retarding, according to circumstances, the progress of its institutions. If rendered prudent by the experience of the former disorders of France, it shows itself to be less impatient than certain minds to favour all the aspirations of liberty, that act is a disposition of public opinion which may be approved of or regretted, but which can in no way affect the theory of the liberty of the Empire."

Jacques Jasmin, the celebrated hairdresser and troubadour of Agen, died on the 6th inst. His fame was very great, not only in the south of France, but throughout the whole country. He commenced his poetic career in 1825, and received numerous presents in the course of his life from the towns of Southern France, to which he was invited to recite his poetry. He also received local academical prizes and the Cross of the Legion of Honour, under the Ministry of M. de Salvandy. His most celebrated work is "Les Papilotas de Jasmin." The journals also announce the death of Rear-Admiral de Hell and of the well-known lithotritic doctor, Baron de Heurteloup. It is said that M. Renan is about to leave for Asia, to visit the places where the greater part of the life of St. Paul was passed, previous to the publication of his new work on the preaching of the Apostles. M. Jules Gerard, the celebrated traveller, better known under the name of the "lion-killer," is said to have been drowned in the river Jong, 120 miles from Sierra Leone. The Duke of Somerset and the Lords of the Admiralty passed through Toulon a few days since on their way to Malta.

ALGERIA.—On the 21 inst. Lacroix's column defeated the insurgents of Bon Stada; and the Aumale subdivision, under General Folivet, on the 30th ult. repulsed an attack of 1500 insurgents, commanded by the uncle of Bon Hamza. The loss of the Arabs was 400 killed and 400 wounded; that of the French is estimated at 80 killed and 27 wounded. Gen. Deligny commenced operations on the 2d. It is asserted that the insurrection of the tribes is spreading among the natives, who appear to obey a real summons to a holy war.

SPAIN.—On Monday, being the Queen's birthday, a reception was held at the Palace, and a review took place. All the officers of the army and navy were promoted a step. It is asserted that at a Council of Ministers held on the 6th inst., the recall of Admiral Pinzon was decided upon. Measures were also adopted for the future command and reinforcement of the Pacific squadron. The Minister of Finance is unable to effect any credit operation under the conditions voted by Congress, and will therefore await the deliberations of the new Chambers. The Central Committee of the Progressista party have sent in their resignation, on account of their abstinence from politics in the approaching elections no longer appearing necessary. A general meeting of the Progressista party will take place on the 16th inst. The Politica asserts that the Democrats will demand permission to hold public meetings. Señor Mon has accepted the post of Ambassador to France. Queen Christina has left for the Asturias. Señor Calderon Collantes died on Sunday.

PORTUGAL.—The mortal remains of the Infante Don Juan, hitherto unburied, have been transferred in solemn procession from the church of the Jeronimites to the Royal mausoleum at San Vicente.

DENMARK.—It is stated that a commission has been formed at St. Petersburg for the purpose of preparing the Princess Dagmar for the reception of the [illegible] baptism according to the form in use in the [illegible] Church. The Emperor has presented her with a [illegible] necklace valued at 12,000*l*, and the Empress presented her with a pair of diamond bracelets. The marriage will not take place for about 18 months, when her Royal Highness will be approaching the completion of her 19th year. The Princess will visit St. Petersburg in the course of next summer. Captain Schindler has returned to Vienna. He is stated to be the bearer of the Danish Government's approval of the settlement of the frontier question proposed at the Vienna Conference. The Faedrelandet of Monday says:—

"The conclusion of peace is near at hand, Denmark has consented to fix at a round sum of 9,000,000 rigsdalers the share which the Duchies are to have in the public debt of Denmark. This amount is consequently to be deducted from the portion of the Danish public debt which, when arranged should fall to the charge of the Duchies."

PRUSSIA.—The Crown Prince and Princess have abandoned their intention of visiting Nice. Their Royal Highnesses will proceed to Switzerland, and will return to Berlin by the 22d of December. Count von Bismarck is expected to return from Biarritz on the 28th. Baron Budberg arrived at Berlin on Sunday evening and proceeded on Monday to Darmstadt to join the Emperor of Russia. On his return to Berlin the King of Prussia will meet the Emperor and Empress of Russia at Darmstadt. The Emperor of Russia will visit Berlin on his return to St. Petersburg at the commencement of November. The treaties by which Bavaria, Würtemberg, Hesse-Darmstadt, and Nassau join the reconstituted Zollverein were signed on Wednesday.

AUSTRIA.—The Oesterreichische Zeitung of Sunday says that the reduction of the Austrian army is a positive fact. In Venetia alone the reductions will amount to 15,000 men. All soldiers on furlough will be to leave Venetia at latest on the 15th inst. At Vienna the sitting of the Conference a compromise was effected on the financial question. On Wednesday none but secondary questions were discussed. There now only remains the drawing up of the treaty of peace. The Duke de Gramont on Thursday communicated to Count Rechberg a despatch addressed to him by M. Drouyn de Lhuys on the position of Austria with regard to the Franco-Italian Convention. The despatch contains the official notification of the Convention, and is said to be to the following effect:—

M. Drouyn de Lhuys very courteously, but also very firmly states that no necessity exists to forward a special notification of the conclusion of the Convention to foreign Powers. The stability upon the part of the Cabinet of Vienna at the present moment of the French Government is the less to be presupposed as such a feeling between two friendly Cabinets would be unintelligible when the course pursued by one affects any interest of the other. The text of the Convention has now been published, from which it is apparent that no Austrian interest is affected thereby. The French Cabinet would therefore hope that upon closer examination of the text of the Convention the Austrian Government would be of opinion that the policy inaugurated by France deserved the thanks of Austria and of the whole of Europe, being mainly calculated to set aside the obstacle by which European peace is permanently and seriously threatened, and by this means to lighten the heavy responsibility weighing upon all the great Powers.

The reports of a Ministerial crisis are considered premature, the Emperor being absent from Vienna. It is, nevertheless, believed that Count Rechberg will tender his resignation, on account of the complicated state of foreign policy. Accounts from Prague say that the Zollverein negotiations have only been postponed, and not broken off; and that the conference will shortly continue its deliberations, in which both Saxon and Bavarian Plenipotentiaries will take part.

RUSSIA.—A letter from St. Petersburg states that the Russian Government had given its adhesion to the French policy in the Roman question. It is said to be certain that the Emperor will accompany the Empress to Nice. The Journal de St. Petersbourg of yesterday states that the recent article published by the Deutsche Petersburger Zeitung, with respect to the encyclical letter of the Pope concerning the Poles, is only to be regarded as of secondary importance, and is devoid of all semi-official character.

ITALY.—The Official Gazette of Friday publishes the text of the Convention. It is asserted that the Minister of the Interior has annulled the deliberations of the provincial Council of Turin of the 23d September protesting against the Convention. Signor Scialoja has resigned the Presidency of the Senate, and Signor Mamiani has been appointed his successor. The Marquis Pepoli has tendered his resignation as Ambassador at St. Petersburg. Baron Ricasoli has arrived at Florence. Letters from Rome state that at all the meetings held by the Cardinals since the 20th ult. ecclesiastical affairs only have been discussed, and that all statements to the contrary are erroneous. It is stated, however, that the Pope has declared in the presence of visitors that prudence was necessary, but that it were idle to hope that the Holy See will ever treat with the Kingdom of Italy. A rumour was current on Sunday that a demonstration had been projected, but the requisite precautions having been taken by the French troops, tranquillity was maintained. The Austrian Ambassador was expected at Rome on the 15th inst. The Correspondencia di Roma publishes a semi-official article on the strategical position of Florence as the capital of Italy. The same paper declares itself authorised to treat as apocryphal the pretended allocution of the Pope, published by the official Dziennick of Warsaw, in which his Holiness is made to blame the Polish clergy for their [illegible] conduct. Signor Meglea has proceeded to Paris on his way to Mexico.

Greece.—The Vienna journals publish advices from Athens, stating that Earl Russell has addressed a note to the Greek Cabinet, declaring that England recognises no factions in Greece, and condemns anarchical demonstrations. Earl Russell further states that in case of necessity England will, in conjunction with France and Russia, take measures for the maintenance of order and the strengthening of the reigning dynasty.

Turkey.—A telegram from Constantinople of the 5th states that a financial crisis prevailed in the Turkish capital. Interest had risen to 14 per cent., and it was impossible to obtain money even at that rate. Prince Murat had embarked for Syria.

Morocco.—The Government of Morocco has ordered the Tangier Custom House to pay the indemnity of 125,000 francs claimed by France for the assassination of a French subject.

India.—By the overland mail we have news from Bombay to the 8th ult. The Viceroy was about to visit Lahore for the purpose of holding a Durbar to receive all the chiefs of the Punjab Province. His Excellency will then hold a Durbar at Delhi, the first held there since the rebellion, and afterwards return to Calcutta to open the Legislative Session, which is expected to be an important one. It is stated that Sir C. Trevelyan will retire from India in April next, and that no successor with the title of Finance Minister will be appointed. The manager of the finances will be a secretary merely. Sir Alexander Lawrence, son of the late Sir Henry, and nephew of the Viceroy, met with instantaneous death by a bridge over a precipice in the Thibet road having given way under his horse. Accounts from Cabul state that Mohammed Khan has assumed the government of Turkistan, and that Sirdah Afzul Khan has been treacherously thrown into prison by his brother, the Ameer of Cabul, and his fortune, amounting to 2,500,000 f., confiscated. An embassy has arrived in Cashmere from Kokand, an independent sovereignty in Central Asia, on its way to the Viceroy, to procure the advice and assistance of the British in reference to the attempts of the Russians to make a high-road for troops through that kingdom. They state that the object of these aggressions on the part of Russia is to be in readiness to attack India in case of a war with England. Colonel Eden, the Political Agent in Mewar, has again been mobbed by rioters, who attacked his house and tried to seize him, with the intention of killing him. He was saved by the young Rajah, who fortunately came to his assistance in time to prevent his being torn to pieces by the mob. The Government of India have been for some time watching the conduct of the Nawab of Kotah, who has been building a strong fort in his province; and they have now insisted on his immediately demolishing it. The inhabitants of the Kubhoo Valley, in Munipoor (Burmah), which was restored to Ava on the conclusion of the treaty with Burmah, have petitioned the Government to be again taken under its care, in consequence of the oppressive character of their own Government. Sir W. Denison, the Governor of Madras, has refused to carry out Sir Charles Wood's instructions relative to the officers of the Indian army, on the ground that they are a flagrant violation of the guarantee granted by the Imperial Parliament to the officers of the late Company on being transferred to the service of the Crown. The Judicial Commissioner of the Punjab has confirmed the judgment of Sir H. Edwardes in the case of the Umballah conspirators, all of whom are to be transported for life.

Japan.—According to the latest intelligence received at Shanghai from Japan, the state of affairs had become more complicated. There was a prospect of hostilities in the Straits of Shimonosaki. An attack on Prince Nagato's fortifications was expected.

New Zealand.—The following telegram from Lieut.-General Cameron, dated Tauranga, Aug. 6, reached Cairo on Monday:—"A meeting took place on the 5th and 6th of August between his Excellency the Governor of New Zealand and the natives of Tauranga, at which the latter submitted unconditionally to the Queen's authority, and placed their lands at the Governor's disposal. They have been permitted to return to their lands, a small portion only of which will be forfeited."

United States.—General Sheridan on the 24th ult. reported that there never was an army so badly routed as that of General Early, whom he had driven from Mount Jackson without bringing on an engagement, the Confederates rapidly retreating. On the 29th ult. he reported that he had pursued Early to Fort Republic; and that his cavalry had destroyed much property at Staunton and Waynesboro'. The Southern papers on the other hand report that Sheridan attacked Early on the 26th at Broom's Gap, and was repulsed, whereupon Early assumed the offensive, and drove Sheridan back six miles to Fort Republic, and it was believed across the Shenandoah River at that point. General Grant reports from the Army of the Potomac that Ord's corps advanced on the 29th ult., and carried the strong fortifications of Chapin's farm, capturing 15 guns and 200 prisoners. Ord was wounded. General Birney advanced simultaneously from Deep Bottom, and carried the Newmarket road and entrenchments, scattering the enemy and taking a few prisoners. General Burnham was killed, and one division of the 18th corps suffered severely. Birney then marched towards Richmond, and has arrived within five miles of it. The Newmarket and Richmond roads and the whole country were full of field fortifications. In a subsequent report General Grant states that Warren on the 30th carried the Confederate line on the right, and was following up his success. General Meade has moved from the left, and carried the Confederate lines near Poplar Grove. Butler has repulsed an attack on his line. All the operations on the north side of the James River have therefore been successful, Fort Morgan, Chapin's Bluff, and six other strong earthworks, together with 16 guns and 500 prisoners, being captured. Despatches from Louisville state that Governor Brown, of Georgia, had submitted propositions for peace to General Sherman. These propositions were forwarded to Mr. Lincoln, and were said to have been under consideration on the 26th. The papers contradict the latter statement, but Louisville telegrams re-affirm the former, and add that General Sherman had despatched Commissioners into the Confederate lines to discuss the proposition personally with Governor Brown and Vice-President Stephens. It is now rumoured that the Georgia State authorities referred the question of a peaceable settlement to the Confederate Government. Sherman and Hood have concluded the exchange of 2000 prisoners upon either side, captured in the recent battles at Atlanta and Jonesborough. The truce for the removal of the Atlanta inhabitants, which expired on the 22d, has been extended. Sherman reports Hood to be moving towards the Alabama line. Forrest, with 8000 men and 10 guns, is operating in Sherman's rear. He has captured Athens, with the garrison, and destroyed the railroad between Decatur and Athens, and all the bridges between Athens and Pulaski for 30 miles. He is now moving his whole force to Chattanooga Railroad. Rousseau has taken the field against Forrest. Southern papers state that General Beauregard had received the command of the Confederate armies in Georgia. The Confederate General Price has entered Missouri with 30,000 men, and it is supposed that he will march into a central part in the State. A large force under Generals Kirby Smith and Shelly is co-operating with him. The Federals evacuated Pilotknob, and retreated to Mineral Point. Price advanced 20 miles to the north east of Pilotknob, and has since captured Farmington and Potosi. General Rosencranz has issued an appeal calling the people to arms. Business at St. Louis was suspended, and preparations were making for the defence of the city. It is believed that Admiral Farragut will be transferred to the North Atlantic fleet, when it is expected he will attack Wilmington. Admiral Lee will command in Mobile Bay. President Davis, in a speech made at Salisbury, North Carolina, referred to the recent reverses of the Confederate arms, and stated that though there was a temporary gloom, yet the spirit of the Confederacy was unbroken, and peace and independence would be wrung from the hated foe. He urged all absent soldiers to return to the army. The Richmond papers admit the defeat in the first day's fighting in the Shenandoah Valley, and estimate the Confederate loss at 2500 men, and that of the Federals at 6000 men. Secretary Stanton urges the people to encourage enlistments to enable General Sherman to hold Atlanta and advance still further. A mass meeting in favour of Mr. Lincoln has been held at New York. Mayor Gunther, of New York, had vetoed the resolution of the aldermen to illuminate the streets of the city in honour of recent victories. The mayor, in his message, says the victories are not considered "Union" triumphs by the President, but abolition ones, and he is unable to rejoice over victories which are not Union victories.

Canada.—The Governor of Canada has summoned the Governors of the British North American Colonies to a conference, to be held in Quebec on the 10th inst., for the purpose of arranging the confederation of the British provinces.

San Domingo.—The latest news from St. Domingo states that the chiefs of the revolution have retired to Hayti, and are making proposals to the Spanish generals for a termination of the war.

who has perished in the catastrophe. Of these the bodies of five have been found and identified, and six are missing—namely, the four bargemen and two labourers employed about the magazine of Messrs. Hall. The inquest on the persons killed by the explosion was resumed at Erith on Tuesday. Several additional witnesses were examined, whose evidence, although failing to prove the actual cause of the explosion, detailed a variety of circumstances which amply explained its occurrence. After confirming what was already well understood, that the first explosion took place on board one of the barges, it was clearly proved that it was impossible to prevent the men from smoking or from having fires on board for the purpose of cooking; that the regulations of the Trinity House make it necessary for the barges to exhibit two lights when sailing at night, and three when at anchor; and moreover that while they are lying off the wharfs discharging their powder, they are constantly exposed to the sparks of passing steamers. It was further shown that chemical works, and a glue factory, with a steam-engine and chimney, are close to one of the magazines still standing in the marshes; and one of the Government officials at Woolwich deposed that, having been present, three years ago, when a magazine belonging to the Messrs. Hall was being emptied, he found it full of nails and iron, and told the deceased storekeeper, Mr. Rayner, that he never was in a more dangerous place in his life; when Rayner replied, "Oh, you Government people are too particular!" It was also proved that a letter had been found in the handwriting of Mr. Rayner, complaining to the manager of Messrs. Hall's mills at Dartford that the casks in which the powder was packed were so badly made that the powder was constantly falling out from the looseness of the hoops. This letter, however, was not dated, and the managers of the Dartford mills stated that it must have referred to a period long past when the casks were made by contract, whereas at present all the casks were manufactured on the premises. The inquest was again adjourned. On Wednesday another inquest was opened at Guy's Hospital on the body of the girl Osborn, and adjourned for the production of Mr. Rayner's letter, and also to enable the Coroner to apply to the Board of Trade for the appointment of some competent person to make an examination into the state of the casks in Messrs. Hall's warehouse. At a meeting of the Woolwich Local Board of Health on Tuesday, a discussion took place respecting the existence of powder magazines near populous districts, and it was stated that the inhabitants of Woolwich had stores of powder much nearer than those at Erith, and that the stores at Purfleet should be removed at least as far down the Thames as Foulness. The thanks of the Board were unanimously voted to General Warde and the officers and men under his command, and also to Mr. Webster, Mr. Houghton, and the men employed under their direction, for their active and laborious exertions in reinstating the river wall, and thereby averting the devastating effects which must have resulted to the district from the overflowing of the Thames. The Board also expressed their approval of the police arrangements upon the occasion.

GUNPOWDER STORES.—The Home Office has instituted inquiries as to the quantity of gunpowder in store in all the localities where it is kept to any large amount. The law already provides a limitation on the quantity kept where the manufacture is conducted, and on the amount kept on hand by the licensed retailers of the article. There are also stringent regulations for the protection of the Government stores by sea and land. But it is in the large warehouses of the manufacturers and wholesale dealers that the greatest quantities are to be found, and it is to these that the new legislation on the subject will be specially directed. The War Department has also issued an official order by which lucifer and congreve matches or any similar means of obtaining fire, as well as smoking, are absolutely interdicted on board all Government vessels taking in or delivering gunpowder to any of the national magazines. A code of regulations has been issued, limiting the leave accorded to the crews of vessels lying alongside a magazine for the reception or delivery of gunpowder. Under no circumstances is such a vessel to be wholly deserted; and, in the case of a steamer, an engineer, a stoker, a master or mate, and a boy are to constitute the minimum crew to be left on board.

THE INSURANCE OFFICES AND THE LATE EXPLOSION.—A legal point has arisen which is likely to give rise to considerable trouble unless the parties interested enter into a compromise. A large amount of the injury done by the Erith explosion occurred in houses which had been insured in various fire insurance companies. Application having been made to some of these offices for compensation, on the ground that the policies insured them from accidents from fire and water, a meeting of the "Associated Fire Offices" has been held at the Sun Office, at which it was determined not to pay a single claim arising out of the explosion, but at once to repudiate any liability for injuries to property caused by it. A large body of the parties insured will not, it is said, submit to this decision. They contend that the accident could not have occurred but through fire, and therefore that the property of the parties insured is clearly covered by their policies. The same question was raised at Liverpool a short time ago, when the explosion occurred on board the Lottie Sleigh. All the companies except the Royal at first refused to make compensation in that case, but after a short time they held a meeting, and came to the conclusion that their wisest and best course was to follow the example of the Royal and pay the claims. A dissentient shareholder of the Royal applied to the Court of Chancery for an injunction to restrain the company from paying these claims, but the motion was refused, and the applicant condemned in the costs of the proceedings. As the Royal has now concurred in the determination of the offices represented at the Sun meeting, it is believed that the course adopted will be to select a case for trial, upon the issue of which all the others may be determined.

THE PEACE ADDRESS TO AMERICA.—Sir Henry de Hoghton, Bart., transmitted to the Governor of New York by the mail steamer of Saturday the following address, signed within three weeks by about 350,000 persons, comprising every class of the community, and the clergy of all denominations, especially the Catholic priesthood of Ireland, from which country more than 130,000 signatures were obtained. The signatures extended over 700 yards of canvas in four parallel columns, which, if taken consecutively, would stretch beyond a mile and a half in length:—

"FOR PEACE IN AMERICA.

"The People of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, to the People of the United States of America.

"We are of the same race, and many of you are our brothers. We, therefore, come to you as peacemakers, and address you in plain language as friends and as fellow men. We ask you, has there not been enough of strife and bloodshed, of misery and suffering; and is it not time to cease the cruel war in which you are engaged? There is not a Christian man or woman among us whose heart does not respond affirmatively to this question. We have admired your free institutions, and have gladly witnessed your rise as a people to eminence in wealth and political power. You promised to become one mighty nation, famed for the liberties of its citizens, the triumphs of peace, and the conquests of commerce. When this unfortunate war began, our hearts were more inclined towards you than towards your sister States, because we believed with you that the action of the South was but the work of a faction. When you asserted that Secession was the work of disappointed ambition, and promised to quell it within 60 days, we accepted your assurance in good faith, looking for the speedy restoration of peace, for we did not wish to see the American Union broken up. But so far from this promise being fulfilled (and your efforts to accomplish it have been unprecedented in the annals of history), peace and the restoration of the Union are apparently as distant as ever. The events of the struggle have convinced us that a more united people never rose up in defence of their rights than those of the Southern States. Surely there must be many now among you who share with us the conviction that it has become utterly impossible to subdue the South, or to restore the American Union, as it existed in the past days of the Republic. You have tried sufficiently, and found the gulf between you and the seceded States to widen with each effort that is made to subdue them. We believe that it is now time for you to pause, and after calmly reviewing all that you have accomplished, the distance which you have travelled from your well-known landmarks, and the difficulties and dangers that are certainly before you, to take counsel together as to the best means of restoring peace. We cannot forget that the question of peace or war was never submitted for your consideration before hostilities had actually commenced: that they came upon you little by little; that both Government and people found themselves plunged into this fearful contest almost unawares, and that you have never been permitted as yet an opportunity of consulting together in general convention for the purpose of making known your opinions and wishes about the war, or any of the vast issues growing out of it. We believe that the war has changed (for the present at least) the character of your Government. It has swept away your freedom of speech, your free press, and the inestimable right of habeas corpus. We believe that the Southern people are only following the precepts and example taught and practised by your fathers and theirs, when they withdrew their allegiance from the mother country, and that the Declaration of Independence, which you hallow and celebrate every 4th day of July, asserts, as self-evident, the right of the Southern people to set up a Government of their own. We believe that should you, at the end of another three and a half years' war, succeed in subduing the South and restoring the Union by force of arms, you will find out, when it is too late, that those pillars upon which rests your Republican form of Government have been violently torn down, and that your own liberties have been buried in the ruins. We ask you to compare the course pursued by the South now and the Colonies in 1776, with that adopted by the North now, and the mother country then, and we think you will discover many striking resemblances. It is in your hands to give peace to the American continent. The Southern States have appealed to you for peace, and to be let alone. We appeal to you to recognise the duty which attaches to your high privilege, and to make peace with the Southern States; and we make this appeal in the name of religion, humanity, civilisation, and common justice."

THE ALLEGED CHILD MURDER AT ACTON.—On Saturday the two sisters Mrs. Campbell and Miss Harris, who were apprehended on the charge of murdering the two children found in a box in their bedroom at Acton, were again examined before the magistrate at Hammersmith. There was no evidence directly connecting either of the sisters with the children, nor could it be ascertained from the bodies of the children, which were dried to mummies, whether they had been born alive. Under these circumstances the magistrate discharged the prisoners, stating that the police could apprehend them again if any fresh evidence were obtained.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths registered in London in the week that ended Saturday October 8th were 1263. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 years 1854-63, excluding the deaths from cholera in 1854, and corrected for increase of population, was 1193. The present return is therefore 70 above the average. During the week the births of 997 boys and 899 girls, in all 1896 children, were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1798.

BILSTON.—On Monday the largest meeting that has been yet held of the colliers on strike in South Staffordshire, took place in this town. Detachments of men marched into the town from Wednesbury, Great Bridge, Tipton, Dudley, Oldbury, and Brierley Hill, each headed by bands of music and men carrying mottoed banners. They were followed by a force of policemen, until by the time the meeting commenced the policemen in the town numbered 150 men. Major M'Knight, the deputy chief constable of Staffordshire, had refused to allow the bands to play on the high road, near to collieries where miners are at work, such movements by the men who are out being intended to draw out the men who have resumed work. At the meeting there were, perhaps, 8000 persons, nearly all of them miners. The speakers complained of the interference of Major M'Knight and the police authorities, and said they should bring such interference before the constituted authorities, for the men on strike were peaceable and loyal subjects of her Majesty, and would allow no one to tempt them to break the peace. Lord Leigh's offers of mediation were severely handled, and clergymen and others who had counselled return to work on masters' terms were censured as friends only of the wealthy. Efforts made on the previous night by individual employers to secure some arrangement between themselves and the leaders of the strike were described, and the determination repeated that henceforth no communication with such an object in view shall take place between the representatives of the two contending sides. It was asserted that the masters were quite able to give the rise, and that they were only contending for the subjection of the men. Central points in the district were announced at which bands of men were to meet on the next day to beat the drums at half-past 4 in the morning, to "turn out the black-legs." The chairman announced that pecuniary help and expressions of sympathy had been received from Birmingham, and that the sympathy of different branches of artisans was very strong in their favour, and this sympathy, if they were true to themselves, would enable them to win this struggle, which was characterised as of the last importance to the collier; for if he should lose, his "day of hope" was designated as "gone." At the close of the meeting a resolution was unanimously come to that the strike should be continued till the masters gave them "the wages." The 80 Lancers who are in barracks at Birmingham have for some time been kept "saddled" and ready to ride into the Black Country at a moment's notice, and a number of the Volunteers have been kept under arms in Bingley Hall ready for any emergency which the strike may give rise in Birmingham, where there is a strong sympathy with the colliers among all classes, and where a rumour had got abroad that the colliers intended to march into the town in vast numbers with anything but a peaceable intent. During the whole of the strike the Earl of Dudley has had one colliery at Himley at work by men who have accepted the reduced wages; but they have been daily subjected to much taunting and intimidation. On Monday the cottage of one of these workmen, named Joseph Roberts, who lives at Gornal Wood, was partially destroyed, and his own life and those of all his family attempted by one of those diabolical trade outrages which are unhappily so notorious in workmen's disputes in Sheffield. At an early hour in the morning Roberts, who was sleeping with his wife and children in the top story of his dwelling, was aroused by something like a heavily loaded can having been thrust through the window of the bedroom in which they were all lying, and almost immediately afterwards a terrible explosion happened, which blew off the roof of the house. Assistance was soon at hand coming, when it was found that all the sleepers had escaped uninjured. This is the first colliers' strike during which this class of outrage has been committed in this district, but it is the third crime of the kind which has been perpetrated during the present excitement. The police have arrested one of the leaders of the strike on suspicion of his being the offender.

BOLTON.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer arrived in this town on Tuesday, and was presented with addresses from the corporation and also from the working classes. The presentation took place in the Temperance Hall, which is capable of holding about 3000 people, and every part of the building was crowded to excess. Mr. Gladstone returned thanks in a speech of great length, from which the following are extracts:—

"I know very well that I am receiving, in testimony of your confidence, a reward due rather to the labours of others. I know that it is those who were pioneers in the field of legislation to whom your gratitude is mainly due. I cannot consider myself to be other than one of the humblest of all the labourers in that cause, and not one of the first among them. I claim at your hands no credit whatever other than such as is due to secondary abilities and to a second part, but yet a part taken in a useful process. We have during a lifetime an alteration brought about in relations classes in this country, such as must make the heart of man leap within his breast to think upon. We have mistrust and alienation gradually fading away like mists the rising sun; and we have seen throughout all parts country, and throughout all classes of the community, ments of mutual confidence, respect, and esteem taking place of that alienation and estrangement. Believe me appreciate that generosity of the English character been so signally exhibited by the mass of the people in country, and with which they have shown themselves so ready to acknowledge the efforts of the Legislature on their behalf. The changes we have seen within the last 20 or 25 years, especially in the field of economical legislation, are of a character so marked that, perhaps, we cannot expect anything precisely similar to occur. It is not often that it is given to those called on to bear a part in public affairs to be enabled by their puny exertions, under the direction of an allwise Providence, to do an amount of good which is, upon the whole, both so extensive and unmixed as the good which has been done in England within our recollection by the liberation of industry, of capital, and of skill. In general when we see parties violently at issue, and principles keenly contested, the conditions of human life do not permit us to hope anything better than that in the solution of those controversies at least a balance of good may be secured; but here we have witnessed changes carried into effect which have conferred good alike upon those by whom they were promoted and upon those by whom they were opposed. And moreover we have seen this, that although these changes referred in their primary aspect only to material and commercial interests, yet they have proved to be fraught with a profound moral and social character. In increasing the wealth of the nation, they have warmed the heart of the nation. In disposing of arguments which seemed to separate man from man, they have disposed of jealousies which separated class from class. And while these Acts of Parliament take their place upon the register of the Statute Book, they are not to be judged only by the formal terms in which they are conceived, but must be regarded rather as angels of mercy, ministers of peace, and restorers of union through every part and corner of the land. I hear with pain that throughout the district of South Lancashire, and perhaps especially in a town which hitherto has not had to encounter the extreme severity of the recent scarcity of cotton, pressure is now very sharply felt. I am afraid we must admit there is a recurrence of another extension of distress, but the distress is of a different character from that which formerly prevailed. It is not attended with such gloomy prospects. When the cotton famine first began to bear upon Lancashire, it was absolutely impossible to know at what point its calamitous results would close. We knew that the principal source of supply was stopped. We did not know in what degree other countries of the world would prove able to minister to our wants. After a time it has been found that, though nothing will as yet enable England to dispense with the American supply, the powers of other countries have been developed to a very considerable extent, and very large contributions have been obtained from quarters which previously had hardly been reckoned on, or had, indeed, been scarcely dreamed of in the enumeration of our resources. We may now—and this is the difference to which I refer—venture as far as it becomes a frail being like man to give an opinion on such a matter—we may now venture to say that the knot of the problem is in the main untied, and that sources of supply do exist in the world which will sustain the future prosperity of the cotton industry of England, and probably tend to place it upon a firmer basis than it could ever be said to occupy when it depended almost entirely on the productions of America, and when those productions themselves were due to a state of society and to a description of labour which in this country we look upon as being unnatural and contrary to the best interests of humanity. Therefore, it is a great point that your brethren of the working class, and such among you as belong to that class, and not only you, but all who compose the other sections of the community, and whose interests are completely identified with yours, when the pinch comes, if it be not now felt by you, may derive consolation from the reflection that there is ground for a confident hope that the calamity is a temporary one, and that the inconveniences you are now enduring are attendant on a course of transition and on the process of return from a state of things which is unnatural and exceptional to a state of things which is durable, sound, and healthy. I do not believe that 25 years of more effective or beneficial legislation are to be found in the history of any country than of those of the last 25 years in England. If there be any who think that there is still a pressure for great improvement—and I certainly am one who believe that much may yet remain to be done—let them also bear this in mind, that we live in a state of things in which a conviction once taking hold of the minds of the people, of the different classes of which it is composed, will be fairly answered in the conduct of the Houses of the Legislature. When I speak of what remains to be done I don't at all mean to say that we stand now as we stood 20 years ago. On the contrary, crying grievances, gross evils, and mischief have with great prudence, wisdom, and circumspection, but, at the same time with great firmness and decision, been remedied. The improvements that are before us are, therefore, in many respects of a different character from the improvements that lay behind us to be made. There are adjustments which our institutions will require. The progress of education, the progress of good and sound habits in the community, the increasing confidences which unite classes together, all these things point to a gradual enlargement of the privileges possessed by the people, and sure we may be that as the necessity and the occasion for such changes are felt, a liberal disposition to adjust such changes will likewise be felt among us. I trust we shall never live again to see the time, a time bearing the smallest resemblance to the great public crisis which marked the commencement of the reign of William IV. —the crisis known as the crisis of the Reform Bill. The triumph then achieved was not only in itself a great advantage to the country, but I think it was a pledge that altogether improvements would be attained by a process less critical and violent. I hope the time is coming when more and more all social and political questions will be disposed of, not by violent action, but by friendly persuasion, by the close contact of mind with mind, by a constant diffusion of information, by keeping the people well apprised of all the Legislature is doing and intending for them, and that there will be a gradual substitution of what we may call moral force in the settling political controversies for that dangerous manifestation that has often been the only means of remedy available in other times for the removal and cure of grievances. I cannot touch on a question of this kind without in one single word performing an act of justice to those who were the real and effective promoters of the measures that were gradually adopted by Parliament for what is called the emancipation of the press of this country. The penny press of this country has now been in operation for a certain number of years: there were those who were led to anticipate that that organ would be a dangerous organ, that it would minister food to bad passions, and that it would tend to create jealousies in the country. We have now had a pretty long experience, and it is no more than justice to the gentlemen by whom that press is conducted, no more than justice to them, without the smallest reproach to others who have conducted a press of a somewhat different character, to say that every one of those sinister anticipations has been signally disappointed, and that these organs of public opinion, copies of which are sold at so cheap a rate as to find their way into almost every man's house, have been second to none in their regard for moral principle, in their respect for personal character, in their fidelity to the duties they have undertaken, and, lastly, let me add—for it is a vital element—in the cause of attachment to the law and in loyalty to the Throne; and that press in my opinion has proved to be not only a means of conveying innocent and useful information to the masses of the population, but it has been a powerful political engine, contributing to the stability of our institutions, conveying home to the mind of the working man a sense of his interest in the country, and is in point of fact entitled in the highest sense to the honourable designation of a thoroughly Conservative power. I trust that we may venture to look forward to a continuance and an increase of those feelings of mutual regard which now happily unite together the several portions of this community, and I trust that also it may be the happy privilege of the people of this country to be governed in future generations as they are governed in the present age, by a Sovereign whose affection for her people, whose knowledge of the principles of the Constitution, whose fidelity and attachment to those principles, and whose exhibitions of every personal virtue and qualities of excellence may make her a model for imitation, as well as an object, which she is, of tenderest and warmest attachment throughout all classes of the community."

On Wednesday Mr. Gladstone fulfilled the main purpose for which he had visited Bolton, by formally opening the Park at Farnworth, so liberally bestowed on the town by Mr. Barnes, M.P. The day was observed as a general holiday, and the park and all the roads leading to it were decorated with flags, banners, and triumphal arches. Mr. Gladstone addressed the meeting at great length, and reviewed the past and present state of the factory system, the character of the factory population, the effect of their occupations on the public health, and the value of public parks in cultivating a love of nature and natural objects. A déjeuner then took place in the Pavilion, after which Mr. Gladstone proceeded to Liverpool.

Bristol.—The Church Congress was opened in this city on Tuesday, under the presidency of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Divine service was first performed at the cathedral, where a sermon was preached by the Dean of Ely on the text "Go and do," which was afterwards eulogised by the President as one of the noblest inaugural addresses which could possibly have been delivered. In the afternoon the actual business of the Congress commenced at the Victoria Rooms, when the Rev. Canon Kennaway read a paper on the increase of the episcopate, in which he advocated the creation of suffragan bishops without seats in Parliament, and the admission of archdeacons to episcopal orders. Prebendary Mackarness, the Rev. B. Belcher, the Earl of Harrowby and others spoke strongly in favour of a large increase of the episcopate. Mr. Beresford Hope urged that dioceses should be made conterminous with counties; and that the increase of the Episcopate should be forced on the Government by a simultaneous attack from the bishops and the laity. The Rev. W. Bamfield, a naval chaplain, advocated the appointment of a bishop who should have charge of the religious condition both of the Royal Navy and merchant service. The President, in summing up the discussion, congratulated the Congress on the fact that the subject had been discussed with much greater unanimity and a desire for agreement than when it was started at the Cambridge congress. The Rev. Canon M'Neile introduced the next subject—"Home Missions and Lay Agency," in which he contended that preaching was neglected, and too great attention paid to ritualism, by which great estrangement from the Church was produced, and consequently that there was a great demand for the operation of the home mission, including lay agency. The Rev. Canon Woodgate protested against the remarks of Canon M'Neile against ritualism and music. Prebendary Trevor read a paper on the history of synods, in which he concluded that the reform most immediately called for in the Church was the revival of the diocesan synod. The Rev. T. Lathbury, incumbent of St. Simon's, Bristol, and the Rev. A. T. Lee read papers on the same subject, the latter relating specially to synodal action in the Church of Ireland. Dr. Pusey, who was received with loud cheers, advocated the revival of synodal action, more especially in view of the recent judgments of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The Archdeacon of Taunton, the Rev. C. Keble, and the Right Hon. J. Napier also advocated a revival of synods. The subject of rural deans and decanal chapters was introduced by the Archdeacon of Ely and the Rev. Prebendary Maine. Prebendary Mackarness, Mr. R. R. Rowe, of Cambridge, the Rev. A. T. Lee, and Mr. Davies, of the Church Institution, took part in the discussion which followed, all testifying to the value of ruro-decanal chapters. This closed the afternoon meeting. On Wednesday the Rev. T. V. French read a paper chiefly on "Missionary Colleges," suggesting that one of the Arabic Professorships at Oxford might be advantageously employed to train up a body of missionaries skilled in the language of Mahomedan countries; and Canon Lyttelton read a paper proposing the establishment of professorships for missionary history. Mr. Beresford Hope read a paper in favour of the establishment of Collegiate Churches in large towns. Mr. Knott read a paper in favour of parochial subdivision; and Mr. Clabon read a paper recommending the creation of church defence committees in each parish. Archdeacon Denison and Lord Lyttelton thought that this suggestion was inapplicable to country parishes. Canon Trevor thought that Mr. Hope's suggestion for the establishment of collegiate churches was a thoroughly conservative measure, while the subdivision of parishes was essentially a democratic and unecclesiastical measure. The Rev. F. Lyne (Brother Ignatius) then presented himself in his Benedictine dress, with shaven head, and sandalled feet, and was received with a storm of hisses. The President said that Mr. Lyne was a member of the Congress and a deacon of the Church, and he was sure they would do wisely and respect themselves in hearing him. Mr. Lyne then spoke at some length on the defects of the parochial system, and argued that they were only to be remedied by men who would follow such rules as those of St. Benedict, and by the restoration of monasteries in our large towns. At the close of his speech, which was frequently interrupted by cries of disapprobation, Mr. Lyne left the room. The Earl of Harrowby then rose and said that if it had not been for the startling apparition which had just disappeared, he should not have taken part in this discussion. A few years ago they would as soon have expected to see St. Benedict himself appearing before them. He thought it a matter of regret that any one who undertook to deal with the masses of vice and misery in our great towns should raise obstacles in his own way by offending the feelings of other people. He asked if a man could not attempt to do good among the labouring classes without wearing an obnoxious habit, or without shaving his crown. If a man thought that everything should be done for the spread of the doctrines of a Reformed Church, was it necessary that he should put on an appearance which was connected with the idea of a totally different Church? He hoped that these men would reconsider their course, and reflect whether it was not possible to extract all the good which might be found in the inner principle of the rule of St. Benedict without wearing his garb. Papers were then read on Church Architecture and Decoration, on Free and Open Churches, on the Augmentation of Small Livings, on Dilapidations, on the mutual relations of the Church in England and Ireland, and on the Social Hindrances to the Spread of Christianity, on all of which brief discussions followed. On Thursday the Dean of Canterbury read a paper on the Education of the Clergy, in which he advocated an "apprenticeship" of candidates for holy orders, in order to make them acquainted with parochial work. The paper excited general interest, and the discussion upon it was of great length and importance. The other papers read were on Associations for the relief of poor and aged Clergy, Church Finance, and the Revised Code. It was announced in the course of the day that the Congress will be held next year at Norwich.

"Much uneasiness had been caused by the frequently repeated assertion that the number of candidates for Holy Orders had within the last few years considerably diminished, and that the proportion of candidates from the Universities had decreased; but there were some facts which seemed to contradict that statement. Between the year 1850 and the year 1861 the number of clergy in England and Wales had risen from 17,621 to 19,193, showing an addition of 1574; and of the 285 candidates ordained at Christmas, 1863, 203 were from Oxford and Cambridge, 22 from Durham and Dublin, and the remainder from the smaller Colleges. It was obvious, however, that the number of small benefices, and the opportunities afforded by competitive examination for more lucrative employments, were calculated to influence unfairly the supply of candidates for the ministry; and the vast increase of new churches and the additional staff of curates employed in some of the old churches might account for the difficulty of procuring sufficient assistance. In spite of the increase of the clergy between 1850 and 1861, it was quite clear that the number of candidates ordained had diminished on an average about 65 per year. The fact of a large increase in the number of the clergy, together with the vast annual addition to the population, forced strongly upon attention the necessity of an increase in the Episcopate. That some of the dioceses were much too large for ecclesiastic supervision had been long felt. There were too ways of supplying this acknowledged want—the subdivision of dioceses, or the appointment of suffragan bishops. At the present moment the diocess of Exeter demanded such relief, both on account of its extent and population. He regretted that the hopes which had been entertained of the formation of a see of Cornwall had been frustrated for the present. The question of the appointment of a suffragan bishop for the diocess of Exeter was still under consideration. As a means of facilitating the attendance of the public at places of worship, there had recently been established an institution entitled the National Society for Promoting Freedom of Worship in the Church. He had not as yet felt himself at liberty to give any countenance to that society. He fully recognised the importance of having the churches open to the poor without calling upon them to pay for the seats, but he believed that the movement to which he alluded transgressed the ancient rules of the Church, which imposed upon the churchwardens the duty of assigning seats to the parishioners. No doubt that privileges given by law had in many instances been abused, and illegal claims had been set up by persons of their right to dispose of these seats. It was most important that all persons should have their minds disabused of that erroneous impression, for as soon as a person ceased to reside in a parish he had no claim to any seat in the church. This new society proposed to deprive the churchwardens of the function which they now exercised, and to throw open every seat to the whole community. If the society would confine its efforts to the establishment of freedom of public worship, the abolition of all payments for seats, and the provision of adequate stipends for the clergy, it should have his willing countenance. The issue of a Royal Commission to consider and revise the various forms of subscription and declaration made by the clergy had naturally attracted the attention of Churchmen to its proceedings. The idea of abolishing all clerical subscriptions had met with little favour from either the clergy or the laity; but there could be no doubt that the existing forms of subscription were too numerous, and that some of them might be modified without lessening the moral obligation of the subscribers to maintain the tenets of the Church inviolate. The labours of the commission had been brought nearly to a close, and he confidently anticipated that the result would prove satisfactory to the members of the Church in general. He would now pass to that much agitated question—the revision of the burial service. Some years since a considerable body of the clergy—about 4000—petitioned the Legislature for relief from the grievance of reading the burial service over every corpse, not excepting those who had died unbaptized, or who had been excommunicated, or laid violent hands on themselves. The petitioners sought a remedy not in the alteration of the service, but in a change of the law. He confessed that he entertained a strong objection to the changes proposed to be introduced. That there were inconveniences and evils connected with the burial service it would be vain to deny, but he looked upon the proposed mode of mitigating those evils as worse than the disease. The change proposed was repugnant to the feelings of the great body of the clergy, and in opposition to their deliberate opinion. He did not think it would be wise to proceed. Certain remedial alternatives had been suggested, but he did not think they would commend themselves to the Church The question of the revision of a single office in the Liturgy would lead to the consideration of its general revision, and any such proposal would be met by the strenuous opposition of the great majority of the clergy of the Church, whatever might be their peculiar bias on theological questions. He did not think it necessary to enter further into the discussion of the question, and would merely say that having expressed his willingness to consent to the appointment of a Royal Commission for a revision of the table of Lessons and some other matters, it was probable that on the reassembling of Parliament such a commission would be appointed. There were other topics engrossing the attention of Churchmen which could not be so soon dismissed. There had existed within the pale of the Church during the last two generations disciples of two distinct schools of thought. The basis of one section had been rather an exercise of individual liberty in the interpretation of the sacred writings, with less reference to the principles laid down by Church authority; while the other looked to that authority for direction and aid in ascertaining the meaning of Holy Scripture. Both were equally anxious to retain the Scripture as God's Word. Recently, however, a third party had arisen, small indeed in number, who claimed the right of maintaining that although the Holy Bible contains the Word of God, the Word of God is not coextensive with the sacred volume, and that it is left to each individual to decide which is the Divine element and which is the human, and to reject that which does not approve itself to a man's verifying faculty. This new principle struck at the root of all fixed doctrine as deducible from Holy Scripture, for each minister and each lay member would feel at liberty to eliminate all such passages as were repugnant to his own views, feelings, and convictions. It might well be asked what would become of Christianity if it was to be surrendered to the caprice of every mind. It might be urged that the Articles of the Church would act as a check on these dangerous innovations; but how long would that be suffered to exist when the basis had been sapped to its foundation? Each distinctive doctrine of Christianity would disappear in turn from the formularies of the Church, and the result would be simple deism—that deism which reared its head towards the close of the 17th century. But the friends of the Church need not feel any misgivings, for as she had outlived other assaults, she would outlive the present. Another error to be combated at the present moment was that which had been raised with respect to the inspiration of Holy Scripture. It might have pleased Almighty God to have communicated His word and will in some such supernatural manner as to have conveyed it in every case to the ear and heart of men without the intervention of any subordinate agency. There would then have been no question of the Divine and the human element. But it seemed good to him that men should be the instrument and channel by which the revelation of Himself and His counsels towards men should be imparted, and in intrusting the prophets and apostles with that commission He did not divest each individual of his peculiarities of temperament and talent. Thus far we must be prepared to allow the human element, and to acknowledge that those who were the appointed channels of communication were not mere machines. There was a wide difference between the authority which teaches the very heart of an inspired writer and the absolute dictation of every word by the Holy Spirit. All we ought to maintain was the absolute and universal authority of every portion of Scripture as written under the Divine superintendence which guarded the writer from error—the exact words in some cases being dictated, as in the case of the Decalogue. The theory of complete verbal inspiration was not necessary to the maintenance of the position held by the Church, that the canon of Scripture not only contains God's Word, but God's Word written; nor were the teachers of the Church called upon to lay down any new theory of inspiration, but rather to invite her sons to adopt the declaration of unfeigned belief in all the canonical Scriptures of the Old and New Testament as the written Word of God, and to teach the people from it as having that Divine authority. It was satisfactory to him to find that this view of inspiration was in accordance with the opinion expressed by his predecessor seven years ago. It might be asked, "If these be your views of the authority of Scripture, how will you reconcile some of its statements with the more recent discoveries of science?" He thought that too much alarm had been felt in some quarters on that point. The Word of God did not profess to teach us science. The object of revelation was not to teach us as to the secrets of nature, but to make us wise unto salvation. The Word of God might incidentally touch on subjects bearing on physical science, but it never introduced them with the view of affirming scientific truth. Unless the Word of God distinctly initiated a proposition to be received as revealed truth, we need not allow ourselves to be perplexed by any apparent discrepancy between the two. Let Science pursue her own course, and let us not be always imagining that she ever entertains designs hostile to the truth of God's Word. Let us devote ourselves to our holy calling, in the full assurance that our faith rests on a foundation which it is impossible for any human efforts to subvert. It was most satisfactory to find that so many able replies had been published to the attacks which had been made on the authority of the Holy Scriptures, and particularly to the critical examination of the Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua. It was his firm belief that if the negative school of theology pursued its course in the same direction and in the same spirit, it must before long work out its own condemnation. It must soon exhibit the consequence to which the principle leads,—the negation of all that is distinctive in Christianity,—and then would follow what had been witnessed in Germany, a yearning after a definite system of religious belief, to meet the wants and cravings of fallen nature, and a return to that belief which alone can satisfy it. Considerable alarm had been felt as to the recent decision of the Privy Council, but he thought that no general conclusion as to any future decisions could be drawn from the tenor of that decision, and much of the apprehension which prevailed was, he thought, quite groundless. His desire was to abate the alarm which was not unnaturally felt when the decision was supposed to have had a much wider scope, and to dissuade his rev. brethren from committing themselves to any particular line of conduct in consequence of apprehensions which might have less foundation than many persons imagined."

DRIFFIELD.—The rapid spread of incendiarism in the stackyards of the Yorkshire Wolds and North Lincolnshire, 10,000*l.* worth of produce having been destroyed last week, has induced the Woldsmen to appoint night-watchers, with dogs, in their stackyards, the same as during last winter. On Monday night the stackyard of Mr. R. Thompson, of Harpham, a village about midway between Burlington and this town, just at the foot of the Yorkshire Wold district, was found to be on fire. The yard contained several corn stacks, and on one side a large pile of straw, the produce of some days' threshing. The whole of this straw, with a tare-straw stack and a haystack, was completely burnt, but as the wind was blowing from the corn stacks, they were saved. The damage done was about 300*l.* The fire was seen for many miles. The police are said to have a good ground for suspecting a well-known person as the incendiary in this case. As this is the sixth fire which has occurred within a few days, it has been resolved to form little confederations of adjoining parishes, and to raise and support a fire brigade, and provide a good engine in each centre. Many of the farmers are threshing their corn rather than risk its destruction.

LEEDS.—On Thursday Vice-Chancellor Kindersley made an order, in accordance with three petitions which were presented to him, for the winding up of the Leeds Banking Company, and appointed Mr. Turquand sole provisional liquidator, subject hereafter to an application to the Court in term.

MANCHESTER.—The monthly meeting of the executive committee of the Central Relief Fund was held in the Town Hall on Monday, the Earl of Derby in the chair. Mr. Maclure in his monthly report stated that there were in September 212,520 cotton operatives in full work, 102,047 on short time, and 135,821 out of work, and by comparison with previous months it thus appeared that the improved condition of things which commenced in the early part of the year had been replaced by a gradual increase in the distress, which had reduced the cotton operatives almost to the condition they were in last January. The relief table was, however, more favourable, doubtless from the fact of cotton operatives getting other kinds of employment. In September the number in receipt of relief was 103,002, as compared with 196,116 in January last, and with 468,610 in January, 1863. The greatest amount of distress exists in the unions of Ashton and Glossop. Mr. Rawlinson's report stated that 4879 were engaged directly on public works in September, and some 80 towns, parishes, and districts have adopted the Act. As many as 13,000 men, representing 50,000 persons, can readily have employment on the several public works. Some conversation ensued on the subject of the neglect of certain corporations to place operatives on public works, and Mr. Rawlinson admitted that such was the case, but he had no power to coerce local authorities. Mr. Farnall then read his monthly report, in which it was stated that there was an increase of persons receiving relief in 27 unions on the 1st inst., as compared with the 3d ult., of 12,299. In the afternoon the meeting of the general committee was held in the mayor's parlour, the Mayor of Manchester presiding. The Earl of Derby, and most of the noblemen and gentlemen who had been present at the meeting of the executive committee, also attended. Mr. Maclure's report stated that during the months of June and July there was a steady increase in the employment of the factory population. The committee therefore urged the local committees to close their distribution of relief during the summer months, while out-door labour could be resorted to, in order that the local and general sources of relief might be husbanded for a period of distress. During the last month the improved condition of the cotton districts had been so much disturbed that on the 24th of Sept. 42,973 had been added to the number of factory operatives working short time, and 33,725 to those out of work, as well as 9316 to the number of persons receiving relief from boards of guardians and district relief committees. During the last fortnight there had been a further diminution of work, and it is estimated that about 114,000 persons are now aided either by the guardians or district relief committees. The report then went on to refer to the operations of the Public Works Act, both past and prospective. Dr. Watts made some remarks upon numbers of persons employed under the Act, and the number unemployed, which he did not consider quite a favourable indication of the success of the measure, and he criticised its operations in other respects. Several other gentlemen spoke on the subject, including Mr. Farnall, who said that there were now on the pauper lists of the unions in the cotton districts 300 able-bodied men, wholly unemployed, and who were fully capable of being put to out-door work, provided the local authorities could find it for them. Sir J. P. Kay Shuttleworth, speaking on the general question, said that the general opinion of the central executive committee was that, though the phenomenon they were now meeting might increase in its gravity, and assume perhaps even a more alarming appearance in the course of a week or two, yet that it would not be prolonged. As a committee they thought that they might possibly have to meet successive crises of this kind, but that the various periods of depression would be succeeded by periods in which the pressure would be relieved. The committee were aware that in publishing a fair and full account of the amount of balance which they had in their hands—210,000*l.*—they might produce an impression that they had means for the relief of the wants of the district equal to those which they had wielded before—he meant equal in proportion to present wants as compared with those of former times. The impression which the central committee had was this—that, however transient the pressure might be, it was so likely again to occur that it required the utmost caution upon their part; the fund which they at present had in their hands was not more than adequate; and the most cautious expenditure and the utmost vigilance on their part were necessary to meet the wants of the district. The report was then received and adopted.

OXFORD.—A meeting of the provost and fellows of Queen's College took place on Tuesday for the election of a principal of St. Edmund Hall, when the choice of the society fell upon the Rev. Edward Moore, late fellow on the consolidated foundation and tutor, and dean of Queen's.

ST. IVES.—The annual meeting of the Huntingdonshire Agricultural Society was held in this town on Friday. Lord Robert Montagu, in returning thanks for the county members, spoke as follows on the Sewage of Towns question:—

"In rising to respond, he must apologise for not being present at their July fair. When they caught a truant they generally asked him where he had been and what he had been doing, but, as their local newspaper had said he was away he would make a clean breast of it. He was doing his duty looking after the interests of agriculturists in the capacity of the health of the towns. He had been the chairman of the Sewage Committee. That involved considerable labour. In the first place there was a very extensive correspondence to keep up, then to master the subject, to look for witnesses, interviews with the witnesses to prepare them, and, lastly, it was the duty of the chairman to correct the report of the evidence that was given. The committee was composed of hard, shrewd men of business, who were not easily led. Among them were Mr. John Bright, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Cowper, the Chief Commissioner of Works, and many others. He purposed to give them a sketch of the proceedings. He had not run the risk of supporting a theory without evidence. Before that people used to tell them why they should not be paid to put the sewage on their land. The only question that was raised was how it could best be done. That he might make himself understood he would take a few examples. A Government engineer said that in the Thames there was in part of the year there was more sewage than water. The Thames supplied 800,000 people with water. In Manchester, which was on the Medlock, Mr. Rawlinson said, you might be seen walking on the scum of its surface. Was it necessary that some steps should be taken to put a stop to a practice like this? Some would say that this water was filtered, but men of science had stated that filtering did not take from water the qualities of putrescence, and that it was always capable of engendering disease. Mr Rawlinson, on several other similar matters, stated that there was spread over a bridge where formerly a cart could pass, but now a boat could not get through. The land around, meanwhile, was waterlogged. In the rivers the trout and fish were killed by the sewage. At the mouth of the Dee 300 families depended on the salmon they caught. There might be many hundreds and thousands supported in the same way at the mouth of the Thames. In many parts cattle had been killed by drinking water in the brooks where sewage had been introduced. Besides the safety which was needed for the public health of the population should be considered, and hundreds of lives might be saved. The noble lord then referred to the state of the Ouse, and said that if it were added to it would do them a great injury, and, as the Yankees would say, 'The tall spectre has arisen from Kimbolton to Huntingdon.' A few years ago Croydon was emptying its sewage into the river. Complaints were made, and at last 14 different actions were brought against the Town Council, and seven injunctions were put out against them, which with the suits cost 10,000*l.* Other experiments cost them 2000*l.*, and they got a final injunction from Vice-Chancellor Wood, who said the sewage must be turned upon the land. The price of land rose at once, and the corporation were compelled to pay 4*l.* an acre for it. They immediately let it at 5*l.* an acre, at a profit of 250*l.* a year. The voice of lamentation was now heard because they had contracted for 21 years with a farmer that he should take the sewage for 5*l.* an acre. They came to the committee, and said they could make a guinea an acre. They wanted to extend the area of the sewage, but could not, on account of the contract. It thus paralysed the town. He must conclude, as he had already occupied much time with what he had fondled as his baby. Some would, perhaps, retort that it was a very dirty one, but it did not follow that there was extreme poverty; indeed, he would say that it was one of the richest."

INAUGURATION OF FATHER MATHEW'S STATUE.—The statue of Fathew Mathew was unveiled at Cork on Monday. An imposing procession traversed the principal streets of the town, and halted opposite the statue in Patrick Street, when the Mayor, J. Maguire, M.P., addressed them on the excellence of the man in whose honour it was erected. The statue was then unveiled amid general cheers, and the whole proceedings passed off without accident or ill-feeling.

ATTEMPTED MURDER IN DONEGAL.—The Mail of Thursday evening publishes a private telegram, stating that Mr. Wilson, the steward of the Earl of Leitrim, has been shot in Donegal, and it is feared that he is mortally wounded.

OUTRAGE IN LONGFORD.—A brutal, and possibly fatal outrage was perpetrated on Sunday evening at Ballinamuck, in the county of Longford. It appears that a feud existed between three families named Farrell, Cassidy, and Merriman, who resided near each other, and three brothers of the Merriman family having determined to silence their opponents, waylaid Patrick Cassidy and James Farrell, and beat them in a most savage manner with shovels, spades, &c. During the affray Patrick Cassidy received a severe blow on the head with a shovel, which leaves him in a precarious state. Farrell was not beaten so much, but sustained some injuries. After satisfying themselves the brothers decamped, leaving their victims weltering in blood. The police have captured Peter and James Merriman, but Francis has escaped. Cassidy is considered to be in danger.

THE CLADDAGH FISHERMEN.—The Claddagh fishermen have given another proof of the lawless spirit which actuates them. By one of their regulations they have bound themselves to fish only every second night; and, even though the bay may be filled with fish on the prohibited nights, they will neither put es themselves nor allow others to do so; and any who transgress this law are sure to incur their vengeance. On Thursday week a shoal of herrings visited the bay, greater than was ever witnessed before. The water was literally alive with them, and they swarmed even up to the dock quays. But it was one of the night's duty not to rest by the Claddagh men, and though Captain Oliver, with a few men who did not share in the opinions of their fellows, put to sea, and shot their nets at the mouth of the harbour, the people rushed to the pier to inflict vengeance on those who had dared to infringe their rules. Two boats were manned, and went out to engage the intruders, and threw large stones at Captain Oliver, his men, and the crew of the second boat. Captain Oliver expected an attack, and consequently was armed: and after some time he fired at one of the boats with the view of frightening the men. The stones, however, still continued, and the nets had to be taken up. A man named Canavan, seeing the attack from the dock, procured aid and went out to assist the men who were attacked; but all had to return to the dock, some of the men being seriously injured. Some of the assailants are known and will be prosecuted. On Friday night the Claddagh men thought proper to go out and captured in a few hours nearly half a million of herrings, which brought from 15s. to 1*l.* per "mace" of 500.

DOUBLE MURDER AT BALBRIGGAN.—On Monday last two sisters called Murphy were murdered at Hollywood Great, four miles from Balbriggan. They lived in comparative comfort with their brother, a farmer, who went on that day to visit a married sister who lived at some distance. On his return he alarmed the neighbours, and stated that he had found one of his sisters lying murdered in the house, and another lying dead in a field at some little distance. He has been taken into custody on suspicion that he is himself the murderer, on the ground that there had been disputes between him and his sisters in reference to their father's will. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against some person or persons unknown. The prisoner was then remanded on a magistrate's warrant till Tuesday next, when he will be brought up for further examination at Balbriggan.

ACCIDENTS ON THE SOUTH-WESTERN.—A collision took place on Monday night, near the old Godalming station, on the South-Western. An up train from Godalming was run into by the Portsmouth down train, when the engine and tender of the former were thrown over and much injured, and one carriage was nearly shattered to pieces. The passengers escaped with comparatively little injury. The extinguishing of an auxiliary signal lamp is assigned as the cause of the accident. On Tuesday evening the up passenger train from London ran into a goods train at the Putney station. The break van of the goods train was shattered to pieces, and several of the trucks were thrown off the line. The engine of the passenger train was also partly thrown off the rails, but no lives were lost, although many of the passengers were shaken severely by the shock.

ACCIDENT ON THE GREAT NORTHERN.—On Friday evening the Midland express, which left King's Cross at 7 o'clock, ran into a goods train, which was shunting at Welwyn Station. The engine of the express was thrown off the rails, but both the fireman and stoker escaped with slight injury. Two or three carriages next the engine were smashed, but fortunately they were unoccupied. In the other carriages many passengers sustained contusions, and one had his ribs broken, but no one was dangerously hurt. The goods vans and their contents were scattered in every direction, covering both the up and down lines, which were thereby completely blocked for many hours.

He studied for some time at Rome, and then became a priest of that Church, eventually joining the Order of Passionists. He occasionally presented a curious appearance in the streets of London in his mediæval costume, his naked legs, and feet strapped up with wooden sandals.

MR. WILLIAM TRIPE, for many years proprietor of the Surrey Zoological Gardens, died on Sunday last, after a short illness, at his residence, Cringleford, near Norwich. He became proprietor of the gardens in 1844, having previously been secretary to Mr. Cross, the original founder of them, and he continued the proprietorship till 1856, when the property was vested in a limited liability company. The grand music hall was afterwards used as a chapel by Mr. Spurgeon, and is now employed as the temporary site of St. Thomas's Hospital.

THURSDAY, Oct. 13.

The number of Beasts is much larger than for a long time past, yet choice qualities are by no means plentiful, and these make about the same as on Monday. A large proportion of other kinds remain unsold. Although the supply of Sheep is not very large, it exceeds the demand. Trade is unusually heavy, and Monday's prices cannot be maintained throughout. Good Calves are in demand, at full rates. Our foreign supply consists of 1030 Beasts, 3090 Sheep, 255 Calves, and 80 Pigs.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Oct. 10.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was very small, and disposed of at the prices of this day se'nnight. There was a moderate attendance, and foreign Wheat attracted rather more attention than of late, but cannot be quoted dearer. Barley sold slowly at about the prices of this day week. Beans and Peas were unaltered in value. The Oat trade was steady, and Russian brought an advance of fully 6d. per qr. upon last Monday's rates. In Flour there was but little done.

FRIDAY, Oct. 14.

The weather since the 7th inst. has been fine, but dull. The supplies of English Wheat during the week have continued to be small, which has enabled farmers and factors to realise the extreme rates previously obtainable. Transactions in foreign have been of limited extent only at former prices. The demand for Malting Barley increases, and late quotations have been somewhat exceeded in Scotland and the East coast markets. The value of Beans and Peas has not undergone any material alteration. Oats have been written cheaper in Liverpool, Hull, Newcastle, and Glasgow, but the improvement of 6d. per qr. established here for Russian on Monday has been maintained. Business in Flour has been dull at previous prices. Since Friday last 61 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has been extremely quiet; holders resisted the lower offers made for Wheat, and only a few cargoes of Maize having changed hands at late rates, all other descriptions of spring corn must be quoted nominally unaltered, no transactions having taken place. Paris, Oct. 13.—The Flour trade is very dull, and prices have given way 6d. per 280 lb. In Wheat only very little business has been done, and late rates are barely supported. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 29,000 cwt. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. 3d. per 280 lb. The arrivals of Irish and foreign Oats are large, of English grain small, and of foreign Wheat and Barley moderate. The attendance at this morning's market was very limited, and the little English Wheat on offer was taken at Monday's prices, but foreign being almost entirely neglected, that day's value was quite nominal. Spring Corn was steady, without any alteration in value.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 11.—Although we have had a fair attendance of both millers and dealers at to-day's market, Wheat has moved only very slowly at Friday's prices. Flour neglected, but is not offering cheaper. Indian Corn is more pressed for sale, and there being few buyers we have to note a reduction of fully 3d. per qr. on all descriptions. Oats and Oatmeal are both the turn lower. Beans, Peas, and Barley nominally unchanged. Market may be characterised as very dull throughout.

FRIDAY, Oct 14.—Market thinly attended. Wheat barely supported Tuesday's quotations. Flour slow and rather easier. Indian Corn 3d. lower. Beans steady. Oats and Oatmeal dull.

The Furnishing of Bed Rooms.

HEAL AND SON have observed for some time that it would be advantageous to their customers to see a larger selection of BED-ROOM FURNITURE than is usually displayed, and that to judge properly of the style and effect of different descriptions of Furniture, it is necessary that each collection should be placed in separate rooms. They have therefore erected large and additional Show Rooms, by which they are enabled not only to extend their show of Iron, Brass, and Wood Bedsteads and Bed Room Furniture, beyond what they believe has been attempted, but also to provide several small rooms for the purpose of keeping complete suites of Bed Room Furniture in the different woods.

Japanned Deal Goods may be seen in complete suites of various different colours, some of them light and ornamental, as well as in a plainer description. Suites of Stained Deal Gothic, Stained and Polished Deal, Oak, and Walnut, are also set apart in separate rooms, so that customers are able to see the effect as it would appear in their own rooms. A Suite of very superior Gothic Oak Furniture will generally be kept in stock, and from time to time new patterns of Furniture in various woods will be added.

Bed Furnitures are fitted to the Bedsteads in large numbers, so that a complete assortment may be seen, and the effect of any particular pattern ascertained as it would appear on the Bedstead.

A very large stock of Bedding (HEAL & SON'S original make) is placed on the Bedsteads.

The stock of Mahogany goods for the better Bed Rooms, and Japanned Goods for plain and Servant's use, is very greatly enlarged. The entire Stock is arranged in eight rooms, six galleries (each 50 feet long), and two large ground floors, the whole forming a most complete an assortment of Bed Room Furniture as they believe can possibly be desired.

Every attention is paid to the manufacture of the Carcass, and they have just erected large Workshops on the premises for the purpose, that the manufacture may be under their own immediate care.

Their Bedding trade receives their constant and personal attention, every article being made on the Premises.

They particularly call attention to their Patent Spring Mattress, the Sommier Elastique Portatif. It is portable, durable, and cool, and lower in price than the old Spring Mattress.

News of the Week.

BY the overland mail we learn that every effort to obtain redress for the insulting treatment of Mr. EDEN'S mission having failed, the invasion of Bhootan has been decided on. General SHOWERS is to command the invading force, which will enter the Bhootan territory from four different points. Despatches from Shanghai announce that the Imperialists have taken Hoochow; and from Japan we learn that it has been determined that the British, French, and Dutch fleets at Yokohama shall force a passage into the inland sea. In Australia the transportation question was absorbing public attention to the exclusion of every other topic. Mr. CARDWELL'S despatch, announcing that transportation to Western Australia would be persisted in, had caused the greatest dissatisfaction at Melbourne; and the Victorian Ministry had informed the Governor of their determination to invite all the colonies, except Western Australia, to unite in common action to oppose the continuance of the system, and to isolate the convict settlement from the other colonies by withdrawing from the contract for the postal service with England, unless the mail steamships cease to touch at any port in Western Australia.

The official journals of Vienna announce that Austria has not protested against the Convention, and that the relations between France and Austria have undergone no change. They state that the Vienna Cabinet has accepted the Convention in a conciliatory spirit, and has replied to it by an extensive measure of disarmament.

From the United States we have the important news that the greater portion of General GRANT's army has recrossed the James River, and it is generally admitted that all his recent operations have been failures. On the 8th the Confederates assumed the offensive, attacked General BUTLER's lines, and captured his artillery. They then attacked General BIRNEY, but were repulsed and driven to their inner line of defence. General LONGSTREET has joined General EARLY with 20,000 men, and has assumed the command in the Shenandoah valley. General SHERIDAN is at Harrisonburg, his advance being opposed by the combined force of LONGSTREET and EARLY, and his supplies and communications interrupted by the Confederate guerillas. General PRICE, with a force estimated at 20,000, and 5000 Federal recruits who have joined him, is making a victorious march through Missouri; and a portion of his force has already appeared before Jefferson, the capital of the State, where, it is said, he intends to establish a State government. General FORREST is still operating with success in the rear of General SHERMAN at Atlanta, and is said to have complete control over his communications.

Accounts from the Brazils state that war has been declared between Brazil and Uruguay. The great Banking firm of SOUTO at Rio has failed for a large amount, leading to the failure of several other firms; and the commercial crisis was so severe that the Government had decreed the suspension of cash payments by the Bank.

Advices from the Pacific state that the Peruvian Government has resolved to declare war against Spain unless she abandons the Chincha Islands.

Home News.

THE COURT IN SCOTLAND.—On Wednesday, the 12th, the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, drove to Invercauld. The Abergeldie woods were driven for deer in the presence of Prince Alfred, who was accompanied by Sir Alexander Bannerman and the Hon. Lionel S. West. Sir George Grey arrived at the Castle as the Secretary of State in attendance on the Queen. On Thursday the Queen, accompanied by Prince Arthur, drove to the Lynn of Muick. The Dean of Westminster left the Castle. The Hon. Sir Frederick Bruce arrived on a visit. On Friday morning the Queen went out, and in the afternoon her Majesty went out driving, accompanied by Princess Helena and Prince Leopold. On Saturday morning the Queen went out, accompanied by Princess Helena; and in the afternoon drove to Invercauld, accompanied by Princess Helena and Princess Beatrice. On Sunday the Queen and Royal family attended Divine service in the Castle. The Rev. A. H. Charteris, of Park Church, Glasgow, officiated. On Monday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, went out. In the afternoon her Majesty drove to Glen Ey, accompanied by Princess Helena. The Hon. Sir Frederick Bruce left the Castle. On Tuesday morning the Queen, accompanied by Prince Leopold, drove to Loch Muick. Prince Alfred left for Floors Castle on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe. Princess Helena visited the Earl and Countess Delawarr at Abergeldie. In the evening Prince Albert Victor of Wales arrived from Denmark. It is now announced that the Queen and Royal family will leave Balmoral on Wednesday the 26th inst., instead of Monday the 24th, and will arrive at Windsor Castle at 9 o'clock on Thursday morning.

RETURN OF PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR.—Her Majesty's ship Salamis arrived in the Humber from Cuxhaven on Sunday afternoon, having on board the infant Prince Albert Victor, in charge of the Countess De Grey and Ripon. The weather was rather rough, and the Prince had suffered from sea sickness, but recovered as the vessel approached the Humber. The landing did not take place till 8 o'clock on Monday morning, when the Countess De Grey and the nurse with the Royal infant, landed on the town pier amid the cheers of thousands of people, and proceeded by a special train to Edinburgh, where they passed the night at the Douglas Hotel. On Tuesday morning, at 9 o'clock, the Prince left Edinburgh for Balmoral, where he arrived in the course of the afternoon, and will remain with her Majesty till the return of the Court to Windsor.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES leave Copenhagen to-day.

PRINCE ALFRED arrived in Edinburgh on Tuesday from Balmoral, and left that city on Wednesday for Floors Castle on a visit to the Duke of Roxburghe.

LORD PALMERSTON attained his 80th year on Thursday. His lordship is at Broadlands, and is in excellent health.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—It is asserted that the Emperor will go to Nice to-day to visit the Emperor of Russia. The Constitutionnel of Saturday contradicts the news that the Council of Marshals would meet earlier than usual this year on account of extraordinary duties. The Bourse was very flat on Wednesday in consequence of adverse rumours. It was stated that the bullion in the Bank had decreased 15,000,000f. since the last return, and that a note would appear in the Moniteur calling for the immediate payment of the arrears of the last loan. The Constitutionnel of Thursday denies these rumours on authority, and says that there is a slight improvement in the state of the Treasury; and that the Government will sell the bonds of the last loan, the instalments on which are overdue. The Moniteur du Soir has since confirmed this denial.

ALGERIA.—The Duke of Magenta announces that, notwithstanding the sharpness of the struggle at some points, he is master of the situation. It is stated that, in consequence of this despatch, the selection of any fresh troops for Algeria will cease, the reinforcements already determined on being sufficient. General Jolivet has followed up his late success by defeating Si-Lala. Several tribes have made their submission.

SPAIN.—The Epoca says that Spain should not remain aloof from the arrangements tending to guarantee the independence of the States of the Pope, which must be under the guarantee of Europe if the French quit Rome. A circular has been issued by Señor Gonzalez Bravo, Minister of the Interior, relative to the elections, which recommends the Governors of the provinces in every measure to strictly observe the law. The Minister states also that electoral rights are to be exercised with the most entire liberty. This circular has been well received by the Madrid journals. The Progressistas having been authorised to hold a public meeting, a meeting of 300 has been held under the presidency of Señor Olozaga, at which a Central Committee was appointed, including among its members General Espartero, Señor Olozaga, Señor Madoz, and General Prim. The Epoca announces that two-thirds of the committee are favourable to the policy of abstaining from voting. The Novedades pronounces against the continuance of this policy on the part of the Progressistas. It also condemns the employment of force, which does not convince any one, and advises a return to the Constitution of 1837. Señor Mon has not yet accepted the French embassy. The Iberia states that 500 workmen have been dismissed from the Arsenal of Carrara. The Epoca and the Politica urge the Government to keep the Chincha Islands as a pledge until Peru shall have given satisfaction.

PORTUGAL.—The official Gazette of Saturday publishes an article declaring that the Conservative party in Portugal may be considered as extinct, not a single Conservative candidate having been elected Deputy. A political transformation is therefore inevitable, the Reform party taking up the position of the Progressista party, and the Government remaining Progressistas.

SWITZERLAND.—The Federal Council on Wednesday authorised the department of Commerce to open negotiations for a treaty of commerce with the Zollverein. The inquiry into the late disturbances at Geneva has terminated, and M. Duplan Veillon, the Federal magistrate, has returned to Lausanne. On the 16th M. Friedrich, the Independent candidate at Geneva, was elected a member of the National Council by 5800 votes, the number of persons voting being 11,000. A conflict took place in the evening between the adverse political parties. On the 13th inst. the Federal mail was plundered by nine armed brigands, on Monte Cenere. M. Lattuada, one of the passengers, was wounded by the robbers, and has since died. The chief of the band is said to be one Gianotto, from Acrolo, a ferocious fellow, who constantly lives in the mountains, and against whom warrants have long been out. During the whole of the 12th, the day preceding the robbery, he was seen in the neighbourhood. He left towards evening, carrying away provisions, as he said, for his comrades. He had with him a bar of iron, which appears to have been used for prising open the trunks of the travellers. This bar was found close by the spot where the mail was attacked. The Government has issued a proclamation, promising a reward of 500f. to whoever shall bring in Gianotto, dead or alive. At Maccagno the Royal Carbineers have arrested persons on suspicion of having formed part of the band. Six watches were found upon the prisoners, one of which of the peculiar kind habitually worn by the conductors of the Swiss diligences.

DENMARK.—M. de Bille, a member of the Left, has demanded of the Ministry that they should ask the sanction of the Rigsdag to a prosecution for high treason being instituted against the Dagbladet on account of the following article which it published on Saturday in reference to the succession to the throne:—

"Should peace be concluded in accordance with the preliminaries, the basis of the present order of succession will be overthrown, in which case the legitimate heir to the Danish throne would be Prince Frederick of Hesse, not Christian IX."

JUTLAND.—General de Gablenz, the Austrian commander in Jutland, in an announcement on the subject of winter quarters just published, orders that where requisitions of the military authorities are not immediately complied with, the mayor of the place shall be imprisoned on bread and water, and that all houses shall be occupied by the soldiers, only one room being left for the owner's family and servants.

SCHLESWIG HOLSTEIN.—The semi-official Prussian Correspondenz of Berlin on Wednesday publishes the following article on the Danish question:—

"After the conclusion of peace it will be necessary provisionally to organise the government of the Duchies. Preliminarily the administration will be conducted by Austria and Prussia. The succession question will also have to be settled, and for that purpose Prussia and Austria, with the approval of the Federal Diet, will convoke an assembly of legates. The statement that a preference has been shown on the part of Prussia to the claims of one of the two Princes is entirely founded upon mere conjecture or upon a policy the tendency of which is foreign to that of Prussia. The legates, after having been given and properly considered, as well as the general interests of Germany, a final resolution on the matter will be passed."

PRUSSIA.—The King of Prussia arrived at Homburg on Saturday in excellent health. During his return journey he passed two hours with the Emperor of Russia at Darmstadt. Baron Von der Plessen arrived at Berlin on Saturday from Vienna and has had repeated conferences with Herr Von Thiele. Lord Napier arrived at Berlin on Monday and left for St. Petersburg, where he will remain several days. The Archduke Leopold of Austria arrived on Monday to attend the baptism of the infant son of the Crown Prince. His Imperial Highness was received at the railway station by the Crown Prince Field-Marshal von Wrangel, the general staff, and a company of the Kaiser Franz Grenadiers, with their colours. The Archduke afterwards supped with the King and the Crown Prince, and received the insignia and order of the Black Eagle from the hands of the King.

AUSTRIA.—Both Houses of the Reichsrath will be convoked on the 16th of November. On Saturday the Conference held its 11th sitting. It is hoped that peace will be concluded before the end of the present month, some points of minor importance relating to the financial question only remaining to be arranged. The Oesterreichische Zeitung of Saturday says:—

"Letters from Paris state that the relations between France and Austria have undergone no change. The Venetian question has not been touched upon. Austria has not protested against the Franco-Italian Convention, and there has been no question of a Congress. Prussia hastened to consent to the Convention. Napoleon, however, will never agree to the aggrandisement of Prussia without adequate compensation. At Berlin there is possibly an idea of abandoning Austria to her fate if certain concessions be made to Prussia, but no negotiations have taken place on the subject."

The Wanderer of Vienna publishes the following article:—

"According to reliable information, Austria has taken a decided part as regards the Convention of the 15th September. Without deviating from the principles which have hitherto directed the policy of the Vienna Cabinet in all questions relating to Italy, the Austrian Government has come to a decision which is of the most reassuring nature. We believe we may state that the Vienna Cabinet will inaugurate a policy of conciliation towards France in this sense—that, without abandoning its passive policy in the affairs of Italy, it will accompany it with a certain character of benevolent abstention. We further add that this change in the attitude assumed by Austria will not entail any change in the Cabinet. Independently of the resolution taken by the Government not to oppose the Convention of the 15th of September, the Austrian Ambassador at the Roman Court will receive instructions to endeavour to the Holy See, so as to prevent it entertaining wrong illusions as regards the mission of Austria."

THE TYROL AND VENETIA.—On Sunday last refugees from the south of the Tyrol appeared in the province of Udine. They were dressed in Garibaldi blouses, and carried a tricoloured flag. The barracks of the gendarmes in Spilembergo and Maniago were surprised, the guard disarmed, and the barracks plundered. Attempts to induce the inhabitants to rise having failed, the refugees withdrew to the mountain passes. Troops were despatched in pursuit and to protect the inhabitants. Sixteen young men, on their way to join the refugees, were attacked by the soldiers. The names of the leader and several of the men of the band are known to the authorities.

RUSSIA.—The Emperor and Empress of Russia arrived at Lyons on Wednesday evening, and proceeded on their journey to Nice at 11 A.M. on Thursday. Their Majesties preserved the strictest incognito.

ITALY.—The electoral colleges have re-elected the Ministers Della Marmora, Lanza, Petitti, and Sella. The electors of Castel-Maggiore have returned the Marquis Pepoli as member to Parliament. The report disarmament and discharge of soldiers of various classes on unlimited furlough is officially contradicted. Baron Ricasoli has arrived at Turin. The Italia Militare of Saturday says that a decree of amnesty on behalf of the prisoners taken at Aspromonte has been signed by his Majesty. A meeting of workmen was held in Turin on Sunday to present a petition to Parliament requesting the impeachment of the late Ministry, and protesting against the Franco-Italian Convention. Four persons spoke, protesting against the charge of municipalism which had been brought against Turin. The Opinione publishes an article on the state of the Italian finances. It expresses its belief that the new Minister will not have recourse to a fresh loan, but will carry into effect the measures already prepared for the alienation of the Treasury Bonds and the sale of the Government railways. It states the circulation of the Treasury Bonds to be 200 or 300 millions, which ought not, it says, to cause any anxiety. By the two measures above mentioned the Minister can obtain 350 millions to meet the requirements of the State. It concludes by urging the new Ministry to effect economy in the different departments, and advises the discharge of some classes of soldiers. The Grand Duke of Tuscany has protested against the project of making Florence the capital of Italy, as contrary to the rights reserved to him by the Treaty of Munich. Letters from Rome state that the Correspondencia di Roma violently attacks the Franco-Italian Convention, and criticises the interpretation given to that Convention by the Constitutionnel and the France. The Czarewitch was expected at Rome. The Pontifical gendarmes, assisted by the French troops, have arrested five brigands of the band by whom some French gendarmes were assassinated. In the territory of Ascoli 26 gendarmes attacked a numerous band of Neapolitan brigands who had stolen 250 sheep. Several of the band were wounded.

Greece.—Intelligence from Athens to the 13th inst. states that the Opposition continued their agitation in the Assembly. The Bill introducing universal suffrage had been voted. A Royal message was communicated to the Assembly in its sitting on Wednesday. The King complains of the slowness of the Parliamentary debates, which exasperates the people, and fixes a period of one month for the Assembly to finish drawing up the Constitution and the electoral law. Should this not be accomplished at the expiration of that period, the King reserves to himself liberty of action, and throws the responsibility upon the Assembly. An unsuccessful attempt was made on the 11th inst. to assassinate the Minister of the Interior.

Tunis.—Advices from Tunis to the 12th inst. state that the troops of the Bey have beaten the insurgents on the coast, and that the latter have made their submission.

India.—The invasion of Bhootan has been decided on, all attempts to obtain reparation for the insulting treatment of Mr. Eden's Mission having failed. The invading force will be commanded by General Showers, and will enter the country at four separate points. The Viceroy has conferred the Star of India upon the Rajah of Kupportolah, who did good service in the mutiny, is a Christian, and a man of considerable ability. Shah Abbas, son of the late ex-King of Delhi, a state prisoner in Rangoon, has been released on condition that he shall pass the rest of his life at Rangoon. Feroze Shah, one of the sons of the late ex-King of Delhi, who took a prominent part in the mutiny, and for whose apprehension the British Government offered a reward of 10,000 rs., has made his appearance in the Serony Jungles.

China.—A telegram from Shanghai of the 5th Sept. states that the Imperialists have captured Hoochow. The loss of life at the taking of Nankin is said to have been 100,000.

Japan.—Intelligence from Japan announces that it has been determined that the English, French, and Dutch fleets at Yokohama shall force a passage into the inland sea.

Australia.—The transportation question was engaging the attention of the colonists to the exclusion of almost every other subject. On the arrival of Mr. Cardwell's despatch, communicating the determination of the Home Government to continue transportation to Western Australia, with the details of the debate in the House of Lords on the Penal Servitude Bill, the Ministry determined to invite all the colonies, except Western Australia, to unite in common action to oppose the continuance of the system, and to withdraw from the contract for the postal service with England, unless the mail steamships cease to touch at any port in Western Australia, in order to isolate the convict settlement from the colony. The following minute was subsequently submitted by the Ministry to Sir Charles Darling to be transmitted to the Home Government:—

"The copy of Mr. Cardwell's despatch, in reply to the resolutions of both Houses of Parliament against the continuance of transportation to Western Australia, which your Excellency did me the honour to transmit to me, has been duly laid before my colleagues. It is to the Government of this colony matter of the utmost regret that all efforts made by them, the Parliament, and the people of Victoria, in common with the other colonies, have failed to secure that measure of justice the colonists had a right to expect; but the decision of her Majesty's Government is still more deeply to be deplored as at direct variance with the statement made by the Duke of Newcastle in 1853, and in contravention of the policy which it was declared by his Grace to be the duty of her Majesty's Government to adopt towards the Australian colonies. In the concluding paragraph of a minute which I had the honour to submit to your Excellency in September last, I felt it necessary to indicate the course this Government would be forced to pursue in the event of the threatened continuance of transportation being carried out; and it now becomes my duty to state to your Excellency the steps which your advisers have felt it imperative upon them to take in the discharge of their responsibility to the people of this colony. Upon a careful consideration of Mr. Cardwell's despatch, written in the face of all the earnest representations addressed to her Majesty's Government, it has been forced upon the attention of myself and my colleagues that further remonstrance is in itself useless; and that the time has arrived when it is incumbent upon us in the exercise of our powers of self government to initiate legislation in connexion with the colonies whose interests are alike affected for our common protection. I have accordingly addressed a circular to the Chief Secretary of each of the colonies interested, inviting the co-operation of their respective Governments in framing a measure to be submitted to the consideration of the several Parliaments prohibitive of all intercourse whatsoever with Western Australia, in order that her position as the only convict colony in Australia may be distinctly marked. Sufficient time has not yet elapsed for me to have received any reply, but from the universal feeling of dissatisfaction which prevails throughout the free colonies I can have no doubt that the proposition will meet with their approval. Intimately connected with this proposition is the question of the postal service with Great Britain. No measure for the isolation of Western Australia could be efficient while the mail steamers continue to call at King George's Sound; and, although serious inconvenience must result from any interruption to frequent and regular postal communication, so deeply is the Government that the justice of Victoria in the dread of the contamination of transportation, would deny themselves the privilege of the mail service than be exposed even to the possibility of the introduction of convicts, that I have to beg your Excellency will be pleased to notify formally to the Imperial authorities that unless the terms of the existing arrangement with the Peninsular and Oriental Company be altered, and the company consent that their packets shall not touch at any port in Western Australia, the Government of Victoria will, at the expiration of six months from the 1st of November next, cease to contribute to the annual subsidy; and further, that they withdraw their offer to join in establishing a fortnightly service except upon similar conditions. I cannot express to your Excellency the pain your advisers have felt in being obliged to take this course; but to have hesitated would have been to neglect their highest duty. In requesting that your Excellency will forward a copy of this memorandum to the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies, I would venture to suggest that it be accompanied by your Excellency's testimony to the reality of the feelings of the people of Victoria, as made known by memorials and through the public press; and also to the discontent which has manifested itself throughout the colony, at the decision of her Majesty's Government. "James M'Culloch."

"Chief Secretary's Office, Melbourne, Aug. 24."

New Zealand.—The last mail brought an account of the defeat of the Maori rebels at Pa Te Ranga, the position taken up by them after the evacuation of the Gate Pa. This last event has proved more decisive than was at first anticipated. The Maori combinations have been completely broken up, and peace is probably re-established. Several of the principal leaders have given in their submission, and it was reported that even William Thompson was about to meet the Governor and take the oath of allegiance.

United States.—It begins to be admitted that General Grant's recent operations at Deep Bottom and Petersburg are, like all his previous movements, failures. The Confederates claim to have captured 1500 prisoners during the recent engagements to the south-west of Petersburg, and the Federal loss north and south of the James River on the 29th and 30th ult., is estimated at 4000. Secretary Stanton reports a series of skirmishes at Deep Bottom on the 7th inst., attended with considerable loss in artillery to the Federals, and many killed and wounded on both sides, but no decisive advantage to either. On the same day the Federals under Burbridge attacked Saltville in Western Virginia, and were badly repulsed, retreating in confusion, pursued by the Confederates. On the 7th the Confederates attacked Butler's lines, drove in Kautz, and captured his artillery. They then attacked Birney, but were repulsed. Birney recaptured Kautz's position, and drove the Confederates to their inner line of defence. Affairs in Missouri are threatening for the Federal cause. General Price continues his victorious march, and a portion of his force has appeared before Jefferson City, the capital of the State. The Pilot Knob garrison reached Rolla, Missouri, on the 2d, with the loss of 300 men during their retreat. General Ewing has arrived at St. Louis. A large force under Magruder and Kirby Smith is reported to have entered Arkansas, and to be preparing for a combined movement against Little Rock and the capture of General Steele and his army. If successful, it is believed that they will combine with General Price, attack St. Louis, and proclaim the annexation of Missouri to the Southern Confederacy. General Forrest's forces destroyed portions of the railway between Chattanooga and Allatoona on the 4th inst., and captured Big Shanty. On the 5th a division from General Hood's army under General French, by a flank movement, crossed the Chattahoochie, gained Sherman's rear, and attacked Allatoona, but were repulsed, after a severe fight, with heavy loss, leaving behind them their dead and wounded. The Federals state their own loss at 300, and that of the Confederates at 500. General Thomas has been sent to Nashville by General Sherman to take charge of the Federal forces there, and to watch General Forrest. Southern papers state that Hood has moved his army 35 miles westward without molestation. The Governor of Georgia has declined Sherman's proposition for an informal peace conference. Letters from Sheridan's head-quarters confirm the Confederate account of his defeat. Longstreet is asserted to have joined Early on the 26th with 20,000 troops, and to have assumed the command. The Confederates have almost entire possession of Sheridan's communications, and guerillas occasionally intercept his supply trains. General Early reports on the 20th ult. that if the people of Lynchburg will guard against raiding, he is in a position to check Sheridan's further advance. Despatches from Admiral Farragut, received on the 1st, contradict the recent report of the proximity of the Federal gunboats to Mobile. In accordance with a resolution passed by Convention, the Governor of Tennessee has issued an order that all persons voting in the Presidential election must swear to oppose an armistice and peace negotiations with armed rebels until Constitutional laws and Constitutional proclamations are re-established throughout the States. The Governor of Tennessee has conscripted white men and negroes between 18 and 45 years of age. Secretary Fessenden has advertised for proposals to a new loan of 40,000,000 dollars of Five-Twenty gold-bearing Bonds. The amount of the public debt announced on the 30th September is 1,960,000,000 dollars. Several banking houses in Chicago which have been engaged in speculations in grain and produce have failed in consequence of the heavy decline in prices. Crowds gathered around the banks, and were dispersed by the military. The steamer Matagorda has been captured. The steamers Night Hawk and Lineh have been destroyed, and the steamer Condor beached, off Wilmington. The Macon Telegraph contains a speech alleged to have been delivered by President Jefferson Davis, asserting that Sherman will be compelled to re-enact the retreat of Moscow; and that the independence of the South would be established, and the enemy defeated if half the absent troops returned to their duty. The Southern press is dissatisfied with the speech, and doubts its authenticity. It is also believed by the Administration at Washington and by the public in New York to be a forgery.

Mexico.—The New York journals publish a doubtful report from New Orleans that during the absence of the Emperor Maximilian from Mexico city, Miramon, backed by the Archbishop of Mexico, had declared against Maximilian. Miramon (?) held half the city. There were contradictory reports that the French had raised the blockade of the Mexican ports.

Brazils.—Accounts from Rio of Sept. 25 state that war has been declared between Brazil and Uruguay. The banking firm of M. Souto has failed for a very large amount. Other failures took place in consequence, and were followed by a commercial crisis. A slightly better feeling, however, now prevails. The Government has decreed the suspension of cash payments for notes by the Bank of Brazil, and has given a forced currency to the Bank's paper.

Peru.—Advices from Peru assert that the Peruvian Congress has resolved to declare war against Spain unless she abandons the Chincha Islands.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Industrial Exhibition at the Agricultural Hall.—On Monday afternoon the North London Working Classes Industrial Exhibition was opened at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, by Earl Russell, who had consented to preside on the occasion. The object of the exhibition, which is under the patronage of the Earl of Shaftesbury and numerous other gentlemen connected with the metropolis, is to bring together as large an assemblage as possible of works of an artistic, scientific, and useful character, the production of the artisan who is the exhibitor, manufactured in the ordinary way of business, being specimens of superior workmanship or of novelty in design; new inventions or original contrivances to economise labour or time; and useful, artistic, or ornamental articles, which may have been produced in spare hours, whether by working men or working women. For the best productions in the various departments prizes are to be awarded in the respective classes, and although on some of the days of exhibition the Hall is opened to the public at a charge of sixpence, to enable working people to see it the admission fee is reduced to twopence each evening from 7 till 10 o'clock. The guarantee fund, from noblemen, gentlemen, and others supporting the movement, amounts to more than 350*l.*, of which 50*l.* was guaranteed by Miss Coutts, and 100*l.* by Mr. S. Morley. The inaugural ceremony included a musical performance, in which Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss Leffler, Mr. Gayler, Mr. Lewis Thomas, and other professionals took part, supported by a choir of upwards of a thousand voices, the musical arrangements being conducted by Dr. Wesley, of Winchester Cathedral. Earl Russell, who was accompanied by the Countess Russell and Lady Amelia Romilly, in declaring the Exhibition open spoke as follows:—

"Ladies and gentlemen, I have to congratulate you on the Exhibition which I have just been permitted to witness. It has given me the greatest satisfaction to observe the works of skill and industry of the North London working classes That which I have seen does the working classes of North London the highest credit. There are works of skill and ingenuity in carving, in cabinet work, and in various kinds of professional art which would take me long, indeed, to enumerate, but which you will see for yourselves from day to day, and which cannot fail of giving you the highest satisfaction. I must confess that it affords me pride and pleasure to be the fellow-countrymen of men who have so employed their time, who have exhibited the greatest ingenuity in the works that they have performed, and in that manner have done credit to the country to which they belong. Those who first conceived the thought of this Exhibition of Industry did but justice to the industry of their countrymen, and I congratulate them on the great success which has already attended their efforts. It is in this manner that this country gives another proof that the working classes of London are, as I believe, the highest in the world, the most distinguished in the works that they perform, the most ready to accomplish anything that may be set before them, and thus making this great community that which it ought to be—the head of the civilised world in all those works which betoken civilization and progress. We must all be thankful that it is permitted to us by a gracious Providence to enjoy under the laws of this country, under the safeguards of the monarchy of this country, that security by which time can be made available, and every one can be certain that if he is industrious, if he devotes his time to works which do him credit, he will receive the rewards of that industry. It is therefore that we ought to be thankful that an Almighty power, under whom we enjoy so many benefits, permits all classes to join together, we, who have other works to perform, performing those works on our part, and the industrious artisans performing the duties allotted to them, and all, I trust, combined to raise the reputation of this great country. I was happy to accede to the proposal when a wish was expressed that I should attend here to-day and preside at the opening of this Exhibition, and I must say that I had no conception when I acceded to that wish that the works of industry which were to be shown would betoken so much skill and such beautiful results of the operations of labour. I congratulate you upon them, and I declare this Exhibition is opened from this time."

A vote of thanks, moved by Mr. D. Seymour, M.P., and seconded by Mr. George Cruikshank, was then voted enthusiastically to his lordship for his kindness in presiding. In acknowledging the compliment his lordship said—

"I beg to return you my heartfelt thanks for the honour you have done me. To me it has been a very easy and delightful duty to preside at this ceremony. This at least I can say, that I myself have been a working man from an early period of a long life; and though I do not wish to enter into any political discussion, you will, perhaps, permit me to tell you what happened to me when I had the honour of being a Member of Parliament for the city of London. A measure was brought into Parliament, and a very excellent measure as I thought, by Sir Robert Peel, for promoting freedom of trade with regard to many articles of art and manufacture. Many of those whom it affected came to me, and complained that while they were exposed to competition, and while their trade would be thrown open to all the nations of Europe and the world—(I remember one man especially, who was a shoemaker, and who complained that it was with great difficulty that he could obtain one piece of meat in the course of a week)—the bread which they ate was taxed, and they wished me to oppose the measure. I said to them, "Permit me to tell you that I think no such injustice as you apprehend can long continue; that if your trade is thrown open to the competition of the whole world you will not find corn will be taxed for many years, but that you will have the benefit of free trade along with others." And so accordingly a few years afterwards a Bill was introduced for the repeal of the corn law, and free trade was extended to the farmers and other grades of society in this country. With that example before us, I may well say that while you pursue your industry —while you show the industry and skill that you do whenever any question arises in which your rights and privileges are concerned, you will find that after some discussion—for no great progress is made in this country by any question until it has undergone a good deal of soaking—whatever is just and for the common benefit is sure to be sanctioned by Parliament in the end. But allow me also to say that it does not happen to us in politics as it does to those who work in some other ways. For instance, I saw a machine to-day, by which, I think, the ten-thousandth part of a grain difference in weight could be shown by an exceedingly nice and delicate balance. I saw also a watch made to go exactly to the minute and the second. Now, we who are engaged in politics are not able to work with any such mechanical accuracy; and therefore it well becomes you, as it has become you in former times, to show patience and confidence in the laws of your country. Perhaps it is needless to tell you that in the great year 1848, when the streets of Paris and Vienna were deluged with the blood of men fighting for their rights, and while others perished in maintaining order, the people of London rose in insurrection, but in insurrection on behalf of order and peace, and for the maintenance of the laws and the constitution of their country. I trust such will be your conduct in future, as it was in 1848; for you may depend upon it that this is a country in which, by means of discussion, by means of the Press, by means of Parliament, by means of public opinion expressed in a thousand ways, truth at last gains the supremacy, and, under God, every evil will be abolished."

The Thames Embankment.—On Wednesday the ceremony of laying the first stone of that portion of the Thames Embankment comprised in the second contract was laid, in the presence of a large number of members of the Board of Works and their friends, by Mr. Bazalgette, the engineer-in-chief, on the bank of the river, at the lower end of Arundel Street, Strand. The work to be executed under this contract extends from the eastern side of Waterloo Bridge to the lower end of the Temple Gardens, a length of 1970 feet. About its centre will stand the Temple Steamboat Pier, in length 470 feet, a piece of granite masonry presenting an imposing front to the river, and breaking the uniformity of the river wall. Some difficulties have been experienced in carrying the works to their present stage, but the contractor, Mr. Ritson, seems to have met them in a manner that has given full satisfaction to the Board of Works. Mr. Bazalgette, in his address to the assembled company, expressed his regret that the Legislature had not given the Board of Works power to buy the property along the margin of the river, so that, instead of giving compensation for loss of business, they might, at a slightly-increased cost, have taken the property and have made a good frontage along the [illegible] of the river. There could be no doubt that this [illegible] yet take place, as it could not be supposed that [illegible] ornamental grounds and a handsome wide road [illegible] miserable property now standing at the river side [illegible] be allowed to remain.

Blackfriars Bridge.—The demolition of the [illegible] Blackfriars Bridge proceeds rapidly. The road [illegible] above the arches has been cleared away for some [illegible] and on Friday the keystone of the second arch [illegible] Surrey side was removed in the presence of a [illegible] number of engineers and scientific men. The [illegible] machinery constructed for the purpose is simple [illegible] highly effective, and the work of unkeying the [illegible] was performed with ease and rapidity.

Visit of General Todleben.—It is understood that General Todleben, who devised and executed the defences of Sebastopol, and whose work during the Crimean war is now the subject of so much attention among military men, is about to pay England a visit, and that during the principal part of his stay he will be the guest of Captain Blakely.

Great Fire at Pimlico.—On Sunday morning about 4 o'clock a fire occurred at Messrs. Sa[illegible] Patent Wheel Works, in Pimlico, which was not extinguished until the large buildings of the [illegible] filled with valuable machinery and manufactured [illegible] were destroyed. The loss of property will be great, and it is not known if the firm was insured. No lives were lost.

Demolition of the Great Exhibition Building.—On Saturday all the arrangements for removing the towers in the Exhibition Road were completed. Captain Fowke and his staff of Royal Engineers are preparatory to operations for that purpose. All the [illegible] and the rest of the building have already been removed. The ground is expected to be cleared by the end of the year, when operations will be commenced for the erection of the proposed new museum for the department of science and art.

Proposed Removal of Middle Row.—At the [illegible] meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works it was brought up from the Streets Committee [illegible] proposed removal of Middle Row, Holborn. The Committee said that they instructed the superintending architect to survey and report on the probable cost of removing the property in question, and that he had reported that the net cost of acquiring the property part of the property would be 61,152*l.*; that in his opinion it would not be advisable to touch Staples Inn as originally proposed by Mr. Marrable, as the rents after return from the sale of ground rents, would be less than 20,000*l.* The houses were all let to tenants having valuable business interests in the ground floors, and the upper floors were occupied as chambers by solicitors of Staples Inn. The advance in straight line of frontage would not, in his opinion, be equivalent to the cost incurred, and it would be questionable in point of taste to destroy one of the few picturesque examples of half-timber style now left in the metropolis. The report was received, and ordered to be taken into consideration on a future day.

The City Police.—The City Committee have resolved to adopt for the force the "Britannia" helmet, recommended to them two years ago by Dr. Borlase Childs, the surgeon to the force. The Britannia helmet has been adopted by the Metropolitan and several provincial forces, and is likely to come into general use.

The late Explosion at Erith.—The adjourned inquest on the persons killed by the Erith explosion was resumed on Tuesday. Several witnesses were examined, but no information could be obtained as to the cause. Mr. Raynor's letter, complaining of the leaky state of the powder barrels. Some men accustomed to unload powder barges were examined, and stated that they were in the habit of having fires on board during the voyage when the powder was battened down, and when they were landing powder. They were also obliged to show lights on board to prevent being run down by steamers, which one of the witnesses stated was a more imminent danger than that of being blown up. The inquiry was again adjourned. The inquest on the girl Osborn, who died in Guy's Hospital from the effects of the explosion, was concluded on Wednesday. Mr. Hall and some other witnesses were examined, but no fresh light was thrown on the calamity. The jury returned a verdict that deceased met her death by accident caused by an explosion of gunpowder, but as to originating there was no evidence to show.

Southwark Bridge.—The Court of Common Council on Thursday discussed at some length the report of a committee in favour of opening Southwark Bridge free of toll, for six months, by way of experiment. A motion for the adoption of the report was opposed on the ground that if the bridge were once opened it could never be closed again; and that the corporation had no funds for its purchase. The motion to open the bridge was ultimately carried by a large majority, but in consequence of some technical point in regard to funds, the report was referred to the Coal, corn, and finance committee before being finally carried out.

The Ludgate Hill Circus.—At a meeting of the City Commissioners of Sewers, on Tuesday, a report was read from the committee which had been appointed to report on the expediency of constructing a circus at the junction of Ludgate Hill and Fleet Street.

committee strongly approved of the project and recommended its immediate adoption. After some discussion on the means of obtaining funds for the purpose, an amendment was moved for referring the report of the Court of Common Council, with a view of obtaining their assistance in carrying the scheme into effect. On a division the amendment was lost, and the report of the committee was adopted.

Fire at Blackfriars Station. — On Thursday morning between three and four o'clock, a fire was discovered at the new station of the London Chatham and Dover Railway, on the south side of Blackfriars Bridge. It occurred in the booking-office, and is supposed to have been caused by an escape of gas. The office was burnt, with some thousands of railway tickets, and considerable damage was done to the premises below, but it was eventually extinguished without the aid of the brigade engines.

The Forthcoming Trial of Müller.—On Thursday afternoon Mr. Serjeant Parry, who will hold the leading brief for the defence, had a consultation with Mr. Metcalfe, Mr. E. Besley, Mr. Beard, and Dr. Juch of the German Protection Society, at which it was decided that the trial should take place at the session which commences on Monday next, unless any circumstances should arise to necessitate an application for a postponement.

Garibaldi's Yacht.—The Princess Olga schooner, 50 tons, has been bought by the committee of the Garibaldi Fund, to be presented to General Garibaldi, for his use at Caprera. This vessel was built by Mr. Joseph White, of East Cowes, for Mr. Rutherfoord, of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club, who himself furnished the design. She is built of the best English oak and East India teak; copper bolted and fastened. She has no wood treenail. Her internal fittings are commodious and elegant. Her saloon and lady's cabin were painted by Sang and his assistants, the fruit and flowers by Benson, the figures by Bendixen. Her head, a likeness of the Princess Olga, of Russia, was carved by Hellier, of Portsmouth. She is very fast, and has won many prizes, and has been long recognised as the show yacht of her class.

The Public Health. — The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths registered in London in the week that ended Saturday October 15 were 1355. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 years 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1183. The present return is therefore 172 above the average. During the week the births of 1020 boys and 1052 girls, in all 2072 children, were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1854 63 the average number was 1851.

Provincial.

Ascot.—A very barbarous murder has been discovered at Sunning Hill Park, the seat of Mr. P. H. Crutchley, near this town. On Saturday afternoon a carrier named Kentish called about half-past 5 o'clock at a lodge near the road leading to Sunning Dale, for the purpose of leaving some papers. This lodge was kept by an old woman named Butler, about 70 years of age. On his opening the door and entering the lodge he was horrified to find the old woman sitting on the floor near the entrance, with her head covered with wounds and streaming with blood. On asking her what was the matter she was just able to utter a few exclamations of pain, and became insensible. He hastened to the adjacent farm for assistance, but she died from the injuries she had received before medical aid could be obtained. There were three frightful cuts on the back, and two on the top of the head, all of them evidently inflicted with some blunt instrument, as the cap which she wore had not been cut through. Two of the Berks Constabulary immediately proceeded to the lodge, and minutely searched the premises in the hope of finding some traces which might lead to the arrest of the murderer. By the side of the body were found a bunch of four keys and a seal, engraved with the letter "G." The poor woman, who was in the receipt of parochial relief, was the housekeeper of William Mancey, who is in the employ of Mr. Nelson, a racehorse trainer at Winkfield, who left her alive and asleep on Saturday morning, and was at Winkfield at the time when the deed was perpetrated. As Mrs. Butler was in very poor circumstances it is thought that the murder has been committed from motives of malice and not of plunder. The officers remained on the premises during the whole of Saturday night, and from their inquiries suspicion has fallen upon two tramps who were seen in the neighbourhood during the day, and are said to have insulted several persons who refused to give them alms. At the inquest on Wednesday the jury, after a long deliberation, returned a verdict of "Wilful murder against some person or persons unknown."

Bristol.—The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol has prohibited Brother Ignatius from preaching in his diocese. This step has been taken in answer to a memorial signed by the rural dean and many of the clergy and laity, calling his lordship's attention to the fact that Brother Ignatius had announced his intention to preach if possible in some church in Bristol or its neighbourhood on the following Sunday. In his reply the bishop says that in his position as chairman of the Church Congress he felt it to be his duty to permit Mr. Lyne, as a member of the Congress and ticket-holder, to address the meeting, but he feels it equally binding upon him as bishop most distinctly to prohibit the admission of Mr. Lyne into any of the pulpits of his diocese.

Bilston.—The colliers' strike, which has caused so much excitement and suffering in this district, was supposed to be at an end on Monday, but subsequent events have proved that the supposition was premature. On Saturday a meeting of the men was held in this town, when Mr. Samuel Griffiths, a well known metal broker, addressed them, and pointed out how hopeless was the chance of the men gaining their object in the present state of the iron trade. The committee then proposed a resolution that the men should return to their work, but they could not bring themselves at once to confess that all their past sufferings had been endured in vain, and the resolution was received in silence. A meeting of the committee was afterwards held, when they resolved to break up their organisation, and leave each man to do as he pleased. This resolution was practically carried out on Monday morning, when large numbers returned to their work. A large body of men, however, still remained on strike, and meetings have since been held, at which violent sentiments were uttered, and were followed by attempts to call out the men who had resumed work. On Wednesday morning a party of 8000 marched in a body to Lord Dudley's pits, when a collision took place between them and the police, who took 19 of the ringleaders into custody. The magistrate remanded the prisoners for a week, with an intimation that he will then commit them for trial at the assizes.

Chatham.—A public meeting of the inhabitants of this town, convened by the High Constable in accordance with a numerously-signed requisition, was held on Monday for the purpose of taking into consideration the great danger experienced by the inhabitants from the close proximity of the large gunpowder magazines and stores at Upnor Castle, and urging upon the proper authorities the necessity of taking steps to protect the lives and property of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood. It was stated that the powder stores at Chatham are among the largest in the country, the quantity at present in store being so vast that if an explosion were to occur it would infallibly destroy the dockyards and naval establishments at Chatham and Sheerness, and spread ruin and devastation in both places. It was only a short time since that the Upnor magazine had a narrow escape of being destroyed, a fire having been discovered in a part of the establishment, which was only extinguished after some difficulty. It was ultimately resolved to present a memorial to the Government to adopt such measures as might be deemed necessary to prevent the calamitous results of an explosion at the magazines.

Coseley.—It will be remembered that a few weeks ago a miner named Hale was committed by the local magistrates to take his trial at the next Stafford Assizes, on the charge of wilfully murdering his daughter, a little girl eight years of age, at Coseley. A woman named Cecilia Baker, with whom he had been living, was also charged, but the evidence against her not being conclusive she was discharged. During the past week additional evidence has been obtained, and the woman has been taken into custody and committed for trial with Hale at the next assizes.

Liverpool.—On Wednesday, the 12th, the Chancellor of the Exchequer was entertained by the Mayor at a banquet in the Town Hall. In returning thanks for the toast of his health, Mr. Gladstone said:—

"I speak the language of the utmost sincerity when I say that in my opinion, after an experience that has now become a long one, the one standing pain to the political man in England, the one serious drawback to the satisfaction of his public life, is not the fear of criticism by which on every side he is surrounded, and which I hold to be one of the greatest and most essential advantages he enjoys—it is not the labour, even the exciting labour he is called upon to perform, but it is a sense of the inequality of his best exertions to the arduous duty of government and of legislation. There is no affectation in that language. It is justified by an appeal to the plainest facts, for I apprehend it to be beyond the possibility of dispute that this great and remarkable country has undertaken responsibilities of empire such as never before lay on the shoulders or upon the minds of men. What nation in any part of the world has had relations such as we have had in every corner of the globe? What nation has had its factories, its interests, its ships, its commerce in every part of the habitable world? What nation has governed, as we govern, distant millions many times outnumbering ourselves? What nation has claimed, as we claim, to bear the sway in the name of Queen Victoria of so large a proportion of the surface of the earth? What nation has made itself responsible, as we have made ourselves responsible, for the welfare of 40 or 45 separate States, in every portion of the world, which we know by the name of our colonies; and what nation has at the same time had the care of all those direct interests and relations, been charged with the same responsibility in the exercise of its moral influence abroad, in the example it is called upon to set, in the sympathy it must feel with the cause of right and justice and constitutional freedom, wherever that cause is at issue, throughout any portion of the world? I am not one of those who could look forward with satisfaction to the waning of the splendour of the sun of England's prosperity. I hope, on the contrary, it may ever continue, and that the honour of the country may continually grow; but, at the same time, I do not scruple to say that I do witness with the utmost satisfaction the gradual growth of opinion and sentiment on the part of the people of England, whose sentiments in the long run govern the course of policy of the Government, the growth of the tone and temper which recognises those great facts of our enormous—nay, even our over-extended responsibilities. It is not very long since, not in this country alone, but in every country of the civilised world, there prevailed what I may call a lust of territorial aggrandisement, and a notion had gone abroad, connected, no doubt, in great part, with false economical theories, that the happiness and the greatness of a people are to be continually augmented by obtaining constant accessions to their extent of territorial away. I hope the time has come when the people of England have thoroughly shaken themselves free from that delusion—when they have arrived at a solid and mature conviction that a nation may have too much territory as well as too little even. However, if you have too much territory you have contracted responsibilities in regard to it, of which you cannot honourably free yourselves, but you have at least reached the point at which all lust of extended territory has been sincerely and permanently forsworn. What we have now to do is, I think, to cultivate what Providence has given us, but not to seek any addition to the sphere of our labours, still further to overtax those human powers which are already charged beyond their true faculty for the satisfactory discharge of their responsibility. I think we may trace in other ways the progress of a true and just political philosophy, the philosophy of practical politics. On the part of the people of this country a great change has taken place in the mind of England within the last three generations with regard to the government of our colonies. A century ago the idea on which our colonial relations were based was narrow and selfish. In one respect, indeed, the administration of the old American provinces was conducted upon a system which might still afford some useful lessons, but it rested essentially on the idea that, as far as economical and commercial matters were concerned, the interests of the colonies were to be made subservient to those of the mother country, and that the channels of their trade and their industrial exertions were to be forced in a direction different from that which nature might point out, in order to make them tributary to the greatness of the mother land. We have fully and entirely awakened from any such dream. We have given to the colonies practical freedom. I am not prepared to say that we have not something to rectify on the other side of the account. We observe a disposition on the part of some colonies calling themselves our own, to set up against the industry and productions of England the mischiefs and obstructions of an exploded protective system. With regard to the government of these dependencies in general, there is not much to be done. Slowly, perhaps, and cautiously, but firmly and resolutely, we may find it needful to rectify the distribution of burdens and benefits, in order to place the people of England not in the position of ascendancy and superiority, which they have in good faith surrendered, but in that position of justice and equality to which they have an indisputable claim. Our duty is to get rid as far as may be of interference with the affairs of our fellow subjects abroad, to afford them the protection and shelter of the power of this great empire, but at the same time not to consent to be charged with the payment of vast sums of money for the sake of performing duties which belong to the colonists rather than to us, and the performance of which in every case is an inalienable part of the functions of freedom. There cannot be a grosser mistake in politics than to suppose that you can separate the benefits of freedom and its burdens. Is it to be imagined that it would be a benefit to a nation if some unknown and unseen benefactor were to undertake the payment of its taxes? No, it is necessary, if you choose to succeed to and claim the dignity of freedom, that you should provide the means by which free institutions can be maintained. In this direction we are in one sense moderating our views. We are learning that we have enough to do—more, perhaps, than we can probably accomplish—in confining ourselves to those immediate duties with which Providence has charged us. These duties are not slight. What revelations have we had within the last 30 or 40 years with regard to the condition of England itself! how many sore places have been disclosed! how much has been improved and reformed! But how much also does the conviction remain behind that there is still a great deal to be done! In regard to what is called foreign policy, we witnessed something of a similar movement of public sentiment to that in regard to the question of our foreign dominions. It is impossible that to a country like England the affairs of foreign nations can ever be indifferent. It is impossible that England, in my opinion at least, ever should forswear the interest she must naturally feel in the cause of truth, of justice, of order, and of good government; but it is possible, nay, it is greatly desirable, that England should recognise the immense advantages which the Almighty has bestowed upon us in the independence of our insular position. The first result of that independence is that with regard at least to every European question out of which most of the disturbance of the peace of the world arises, England—and England alone—is as a nation essentially and pre-eminently impartial; but this position of impartiality is a position at once of dignity and of power. It is a position in which happily you do not require to be always seeking by artificial means for the creation of influence. It is a position in which influence will come to you of itself, because amid the conflicts of the passions and interests of others, confidence will be reposed in the judgment of a country known to be free from the influence of these passions. Therefore, feeling, as I have said, on the one hand, the consolation and the advantage that public men in England must derive from the strenuous support which they receive on all hands from their fellow citizens, and on the other for the chastened humility with which they should regard a function they must know to be beyond their strength, it is with satisfaction I anticipate a state of things growing and consolidating itself in the public opinion of this country from year to year, which tends to inspire the belief that we are shaking off schemes, projects, and ideas that would draw us forth beyond our sphere, that our immediate duty should tend to involve us in continual embarrassments, and that we are consequently setting free our hands and energies for the great works which do still always remain to us in the administration of the British Empire, and in studying the happiness of the people of England. Doubtless, there is still much to be done—the instinct of preservation has always been the most powerful in this country, and justly has it been the most powerful of all our impulses, because we have had that which was worth preserving; but the instinct of preservation is best promoted and upheld when dutifully and honestly combined with the instinct of improvement and the laws and condition of this country after all that has been done yet will offer a rich harvest to the wise and judicious efforts of the statesmen of future times, and with the hope that the result of those efforts will be in the future as in the past, not the impairing or diminution of the national inheritance, but the rendering it larger and more secure for those who are to come after us, even as we are happy to see it has been increased in value and deepened in stability by the changes and reformations which during the last 30 years it has undergone."

On the following day addresses were presented to the Chancellor of the Exchequer by the Chamber of Commerce and the Financial Reform Association, in St. George's Hall. The latter address was a criticism on the financial measures of the right hon. gentleman, and was generally considered to be so much out of place that it was received with hisses from various parts of the Hall. It said that it was exceedingly to be regretted that, instead of taking a penny off the income tax this year, Mr. Gladstone did not retain the penny and abolish the corn tax, and expressed the hope that in his future budgets he would make arrangements for the entire abolition of the duties on tea, sugar, and coffee; and in succeeding years would proceed steadily in the great work of liberating capital, skill, and industry from all fiscal obstructions to their operations, looking for revenue from wealth actually created, not, as heretofore, to the means of its production. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in reply, said:—

"I see in this address a latent principle, on which in my own peculiar position as Minister of Finance I confess I look with a certain degree of suspicion. Its authors want to promote public economy by making the payment of large taxes insupportable. Direct taxation, I admit, if we were to proceed upon abstract principles, is a sound principle; but, gentlemen, have some compassion upon those whose first necessity, whose first duty it is to provide for the maintenance of public credit—to provide for the defences of the country—to provide in every department for the full efficiency of the public service. I wish I could teach every political philosopher and every financial reformer, to extend some indulgence to those who would ascend along with them, if they could, into the seventh heaven of speculation, but who have weights and clogs tied to their feet which bind them down to earth, and render it necessary for them to infuse large dilution, large participation of secondary matter, into that system of abstract reasoning by which, if they could, they would be very glad to be guided. That is an important reservation from me. Allow me to say that I trust that at no time will any Government be induced for the sake of seeking favour with the belief—and I am quite sure that in seeking favour they would fail to find it—let no Government be induced under the notion of abstract, extensive, sudden, and sweeping reforms to endanger the vital principle of public credit, or to risk throwing the finances of the country into confusion; but, subject to these limitations, I, for one, trust that progress will be the law of our Legislature in that as well as in every other particular, and in that particular not less than in any other. I am very glad to think that among the sources to which we may now look for the progressive extension of fiscal reform, we may, I trust without too confidently reckoning on the future, calculate a steady increase in the revenue of the country. Indeed, this is no matter of secondary importance. There was a time—and that time is within the recollection of almost the whole of us—there was a time when the revenue of this country was nearly stationary. In an important period marked by many and most beneficial changes in every respect—the important period between 1830 and 1840—a period which was almost barren in measures of commercial and fiscal improvement, the increment of the revenue was almost imperceptibly slow. But it is now our gratifying duty to record from year to year, quite independently of the progress of the imposition of any new taxation, a considerable increase in the public receipts, as the result of that increased activity of capital and industry which has been imparted to the various industrial classes of this country. There is a source upon which, indeed, we cannot reckon with confidence from year to year, because circumstances may interfere to break the continuity of progress, but upon which, in looking over a series of years, I think we may reckon with considerable confidence, and which, therefore, leads to the belief that we have as yet by no means arrived at the term of fiscal and financial improvement: but there is one consideration on which, in concluding these remarks, I will briefly touch. It is fraught with so many topics of reflection, it brings into view so much of the future, it extends itself over so many departments of the deepest human interest, that even to touch upon it almost appals the mind. We all remember that before the repeal of the corn laws we were told that we should get into a state of dependence on foreign supplies. Let us do literal justice, at least, to the prophets from whom these menaces proceeded. We have fallen into a state of dependence upon foreign supply. Prima facie, therefore, the prophecy is justified; but yet when we state what that prophecy really meant—because the real meaning of it was this, "You will obtain your corn from abroad, and your own fields at home will remain uncultivated,"—that was their full prediction,—I need not ask whether that full prediction has been verified or not. As far as my knowledge goes, the fields of this country continue to be cultivated. I believe that those who are happy enough to be possessed of any portion of the lands of the country still continue to receive some rent for those lands. In point of fact it is not only that they continue to be cultivated, but there is a great deal better cultivation than ever. It is not only that they produce as they did before, but they produce a great deal more than ever they did before. It is not only that they produce more than they did before, but it is this—that they produce what is less in the character of the mere necessaries of life, and what is more in the character of the comforts, and, in addition in one sense, let me say, the luxuries of life for the mass of the population. It is that which has increased the general progress in the condition of the country, and which has made us dependent on foreign supply, because we find it cheaper and better to get our corn from abroad; but, gentlemen, at the same time, there is something I believe almost unprecedented, nay, as regards any great country, something quite unprecedented, in the condition of a nation whose commercial position might now be defined as ours. Nearly one-half of the essential food of the people of England—I mean grain—is cultivated and raised in other lands, and perhaps I might say, independently of food, nearly one-half, possibly, for aught I know, it may be more than the one-half, of the whole materials of the labour of the country are also produced in other lands. What is the condition of a country whose industry is distinguished by features like these? Here is opened to us a vista almost interminable, because we are not only dependent, but we are increasingly dependent on foreign supply. I see, indeed, and I see with joy, in the figures of the Customs' revenue that there is a decreasing duty on foreign grain, because a small revenue from that source means abundance at home and cheapness in the main essential element of the subsistence of the people. That is the case comparing one year with the years that are nearest to it; but if we look a little further what must we expect? Population and trade have grown enormously, but have they reached their limit? Have your dock walls reached their limit? Has the extension of Liverpool reached its limit? When I was a child its population was 100,000; now it has more than quadrupled its numbers. Is there any reason why the rate of that increase should be slackened in the future? For my part, I know of none. If it please God to preserve to us the inestimable blessing of peace, I know no reason why the trade of the country should not continue to extend with the population of this country—should not continue to grow—why along with the growth of the population in mere numbers the powers and efficacy of the moral agents at work within it should not also continue to grow in future times as they happily have grown during the last 30 years; and I know no reason why we should refuse to accept the benefit Providence thus offers us in the increase of numbers, of power, and, as we believe and trust, of happiness and virtue, because we see, and must plainly see, that it will be and must be accomplished from day to day with increasing dependence on foreign supply. For when we consider the matter, what does dependence upon foreign supply mean? It means, I humbly trust, progress, the substantial progress towards that state of things which may still be remote, which neither we nor our children may live to see, but yet which we may hope lies in some happy future—that state of things in which the intercourse between nation and nation, produced by human industry, the blessed result of that law of labour which Providence imposed on our first parents and all their descendants, shall weave a web of kindness by the incessant action of the interchange of commodities between country and country, shall diminish progressively the force of those motives which dispose men to violence and aggression, and shall progressively surround and increase the power and efficacy of those motives which incline men to live in concord, amity, and love with one another. I am not insensible—none of you can be insensible—and still less can any one responsible for public affairs be insensible, to the gravity of the questions which must be encountered in the working out the great problem before us. What is to be the condition of a country with respect to the necessary element of the means of defence? What is to be the state of the maritime and international law of the world? How far the rules hitherto applicable to its conduct are safe, good, or wise, or require alteration or modification by the joint consent of the nations in order to meet the exigencies of coming times? All these are questions which must be examined and must be brought in due time to their solution; but beyond, and above, and beneath, and around these questions is embraced the destiny of our time, and the extension of those great laws of industry and exchange which are a wider and larger fulfilment of the beneficent design of the Almighty in giving different productions to different climates and countries of the earth. My belief is that the law of that extension will prevail, and that as our dependence on foreign supply increases, we may become more and more pledged and bound to a policy of peace and justice, to setting a good example of moderation and wisdom, and promoting the influence of every principle that conduces to the happiness both of ourselves and of our fellow men among the various surrounding nations of the earth."

LYNN.—On Wednesday Lord Stanley addressed his constituents in this town in a speech of great length. He declared himself for non-intervention in the quarrels both of America and of Germany. He regarded the Danish debate as an almost unanimous protest on the part of the House of Commons against intervention in the affairs of foreign States, and as establishing this principle as the standing maxim of our policy for the future. He approved of the Italian Convention, and thought it impossible to doubt that Rome, or at least the Roman territory, would pass into other hands at no very distant date. He considered it clear that the clumsy scheme of a German Confederation had in practice broken down; that the mutual rivalry of Austria and Prussia would make it impossible for all Germany to be united for any purpose, or in any manner, as a single community, and that the smaller States would eventually be united to Austria or Prussia; and he earnestly hoped that England would do nothing to prevent it. He believed the breaking up of the Turkish Empire to be only a question of time, and probably not a very long time. He was in favour of encouraging the federation of the North American colonies, and considered the opposition of the Australians to transportation to be so reasonable that he hoped the Government would not stand upon the legal rights of England, but would make concessions while they could do so freely and with a good grace. With regard to domestic matters, he urged the abolition of the fire-insurance duty, and the reduction of the income-tax, and was of opinion that they could not expect the total repeal of the malt-tax. He also urged the necessity of economy, especially in the naval estimates. On the extension of the franchise he was not hopeful. Small measures, he said, would not be acceptable, and a large measure could not be carried.

MANCHESTER.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer paid a visit to this city on Friday, and after receiving an address from the Town Council, presided at the distribution of the prizes and certificates of honour awarded to the successful competitors in the Oxford middle-class examination. In returning thanks for the address of the Corporation, Mr. Gladstone spoke as follows on the foreign policy of the Government:—

"One of the characteristics of our time is the mutual feeling of concern of every nation in the affairs and destinies and prospects of every other nation, and in no country can that sentiment of general interest and of concern be so natural, so suitable, so efficient, as in a country like England, placed in universal relation with every people of the earth. Under these circumstances it becomes a matter of the deepest importance that wisdom, circumspection, courage, and justice should direct the foreign policy of this country. In speaking of this principle I hold that the disinterested position of England is above all that which should be borne in mind, that we have higher dignity—that we have higher influence with regard to all questions in the least affecting the policy of Europe, as speaking with a judicial impartiality to which no other country from its position can in the same degree aspire, although, in point of fact, it is no special virtue on our part, but is the result of that position in which Providence has placed us with regard to the other states of Europe, so that we can have no desire with regard to them except that peace and harmony should prevail amongst them, and that they should adopt for their standing guidance of conduct the principle of respecting the rights of one another. That is a happy position for us to maintain. It places us, as it were, by the side of every European nation in the character of the friend of each and all. It makes us feel that the time is gone by when it was the fashion and the custom of the country to speak of one great country abroad in particular as our natural enemy. We have no natural enemy. Every country of Europe is our natural friend; and if to any country of Europe in particular we are to look as the country by a close relation with which we may best promote the general interest of the civilised world, it is that very country which once, in the blindness of uncharitableness and in natural yet unhappy prejudice, we regarded as our natural enemy. I trust that you think that the conduct of the Government in the regulation of its foreign policy has been actuated by a sincere desire to perform towards all countries of the world the offices of friendship. I trust, indeed I am confident, that you think that that disposition has been indicated by the Government—and not specially by the Government, for in this respect they have been no more than the organs of the feelings of the people—that disposition to respect the rights of every country, to avoid undue interference in its concerns, has been indicated in regard to the lamentable war which still desolates the continent of America. England was a sad sufferer by that war. I don't believe that history records a case in which the dissensions of a country have produced such wide calamities in other nations beyond its borders; but we felt that it was our duty to respect American [illegible] respect the discretion of the Americans to deal with [illegible] affairs whatever might be our particular opinion as to wisdom of any course they were pursuing, or as to the [illegible] bility of any object they had in view. For my own [illegible] confess I always had great doubts as to the practica[illegible] reducing to subjection any large portion of a country [illegible] manifests a determined disposition to separate; but what[illegible] be our opinion, we have no right to place it in a [illegible] should make us the judge of what it is fit for another [illegible] to do. Theirs is the responsibility; ours has been [illegible] suffering. But if we groan over the suffering which has been experienced among our own population, let us [illegible] frightful magnitude of the calamities the Americans [illegible] undergoing. It is for them, as they have the responsibility, to judge of their own course. I entertain, in the [illegible] this conviction, that by an attempt to enforce our judgment instead of theirs we should have done [illegible] but embitter a contest already too much exasperated. In the second place, I feel that the sentiment with which we ought to regard this most unhappy war is [illegible] We have no jealousy of American greatness, we have [illegible] to fear them, or any other nation. We feel they are brethren by blood and language. We know their [illegible] is calculated to continue in relations of the most [illegible] intercourse with us, and we ought to pray Almighty God it may please Him in His mercy to bring this sanguinary contest, if it be His will, at an early period to such a nation as shall be best for the happiness, peace, and welfare, and prosperity of all the inhabitants of [illegible] once the United States. With regard to other questions of foreign policy I need not say much. I might express a warm and enthusiastic feeling of this country with regard to what is believed to be the cause of freedom, of justice, in the Italian peninsula. Lately we have been informed of [illegible] which I deem of the greatest importance with regard to the future happiness of the Italian people. I mean the [illegible] Italian treaty. I am not able to pronounce any dispassionate official judgment on the merits of that convention; but I may venture to say I regard it with the eye of [illegible] satisfaction. It may not, it is true, promise an [illegible] solution of the very serious difficulties with which the destinies of the Italian people are still beset. But we know that the best and wisest men of Italy believe that by this treaty a great step has been gained towards the consolidation of freedom in that country. As an object in view, I cannot express to you what I feel its importance. I do believe that the fusion of the separate and feeble States of Italy into a kingdom which shall be united and powerful, and which on all [illegible] questions must almost of necessity be disinterested, is an event of incalculable importance to the happiness of [illegible] I ventured a few minutes ago to say that England is singularly favoured in her insular position, which renders her impartial in regard to questions of European politics. The Alps very nearly do for Italy what the sea does for us. It is hardly possible that Italy could be a power which, circumstances animated by the pernicious and destructive madness of the principle of territorial aggrandisement. In the best sense of the word, on European questions, the single Italy, even as it is, still more when fully consolidated and brought to its natural limits, must be for every European question a power conservative of honour and justice, conservative of the peace and welfare of the world. We merit in regard to the treaty, but it is a subject on which, in a view of its provisions which it appears to warrant, we exchange mutual congratulations. The solution of the problems will follow, under God's providence, in good time. While something has been accomplished, and it may be that treaty has a tendency to divest the great political [illegible] issue in Italy of its more distinctive ecclesiastical [illegible] It is well that Italians, and a large portion of our own countrymen, should understand that, in our warm sympathy for Italian unity and freedom, the people of England are governed by what may be called sectarian motives. The people of England have their own religious convictions, are sufficiently decided in the maintenance and exposition of them, but they contemplate this Italian question in the true and single view that what they look at is entirely a question of political rights and justice, and that they recommend and support precisely the same principles in regard to the consolidation and unity of Italy as they would do if the religion of Italy were in every respect the same as ours."

At the distribution of prizes to the Oxford middle-class competitors, Mr. Gladstone spoke as follows on the subject of the Universities:—

"For many long years it has been my undeserved but [illegible] lot to represent in Parliament one of the ancient Universities of the country. Often and long have I deplored, and [illegible] have I felt the difficulty of keeping together in harmonious efficiency the older and the newer pursuits of our [illegible] civilization. If we go back for some two or three generations in this country to what we were ourselves at the time of [illegible] inventions and manufactures, what do we see? [illegible] through the rural districts the old world existing [illegible] unchanged, in each University everything that belonged to the future of society remaining almost exactly as it [illegible] and then, passing into Lancashire, or into Staffordshire or West Riding of Yorkshire, we see a new world growing [illegible] a great degree in company with the old one, with [illegible] rising towns, multiplying population, and distributing [illegible] and gradually calling into existence both powerful classes and powerful faculties of mind, adapted and dedicated to [illegible] circumstances of the present day. But between the two we see little sympathy or connexion. [illegible] ladies and gentlemen, my belief is that it is a happy distinction of this country that what is not [illegible] does not require to forswear brotherhood with what is [illegible] and I do not believe that any higher duty, or any more fruitful of reward, can attach to any one of us in more [illegible] stations than the effort, according to our respective [illegible] to harmonise these two great powers together. More has been done in our towns for the purpose. The [illegible] of invidious distinction and unjust preference [illegible] the way between heart and heart which was [illegible] and barred up before; but as regards the special [illegible] these institutions and the great commercial and manufacturing districts of the country, no doubt there was much difficulty in bringing them together. Commerce and manufactures require that the period of education, or what is education in the more specific sense, should be [illegible] term at a time of life earlier than that which a [illegible] education has commonly been judged to require. And [illegible] no doubt that there was a want of connexion between the district and the ancient universities of the country. I do not [illegible] step has been made in filling up that gap. I do not [illegible] any more important or any wiser measure has been adopted by those ancient institutions than was adopted, and foremost, I am glad to say, by the University with which I have the honour to be connected, when, under the auspices of some distinguished and excellent men [illegible] among its sons, it was led to make the first effort for the foundation of this system. I trust that that effort on the part of the Universities will not be their last effort [illegible]

...and sound law, notwithstanding the real difficulties t... which I admitted, I have no doubt they might be met, and that, I believe, will yet be done, to place the powerful commercial class of the [illegible] districts of our country into closer connection with the [illegible] and most valuable seats of learning. But they deserve honour for that great effort. It was a great innovation in their customs, and they had the right nature to persevere here. Strongly liable to the charge of innovation, it bore the true character of improvement. They were, therefore, not deterred by any apprehension of any previous criticism to which they might be subjected. Having claimed to your halls the London which is their due, let me in return say that it is the highest honour, in my humble judgment, to the manufacturing and commercial districts of Lancashire—those very districts in which novelty and progress were most particularly represented—that they distinguished themselves beyond almost any other portion of the country in their readiness, in their eagerness to close with the offer of the old Universities to make these local examinations an important and prominent part of your educational and your social system. I anticipate with the utmost confidence the continued and increasing success of this great effort. I must add that there is not a wish that lies nearer to my heart than to see the healthful interchange, the free interchange which belongs to the operations of commerce applied also in all its breadth to the operations of the mind and of the heart. There are none of us who have not much to learn from those who are placed in other positions. There are none of the separate classes connected with our institutions and connected with the power and wealth of the country that have not much to learn from one another. By an increasing they will learn nothing of what they have, they will gain much of what they have not; and I must not tell to you, for you feel it more readily than I do, that the commercial, the material pursuits of this age require more than ever—more than in any period of human existence—the balancing and compensation which is afforded by the highest enlivening pursuits. It is more than ever necessary that the powers of the Christian revelation—of the Christian faith—should be exercised and felt over the whole surface of society and down to its profoundest depths. But that Christian revelation has not been only a revelation of spiritual truth, it was a revelation in which spiritual truth was designed to carry with it and to draw after it the perfect development of every human excellence. The soaring faculties of the imagination, the searching powers of the mind, that which has made philosophers, artists, and poets, who are the glory of mankind—these things were not proscribed by Christianity. They were elevated into a higher sphere, and when I speak of civilising agencies I draw no distinction for the present argument between the beneficent purposes of the Gospel and those other excellences which the Gospel, independently of its religious aims, has been the most powerful and fruitful agent in promoting."

PORTSMOUTH.—The launch of another iron-clad of 35 guns, the Royal Alfred, took place in this dockyard on Saturday. She was laid down in 1859, but was afterwards lengthened and converted into an iron-clad ram, and it is intended to plate her with 4½-inch iron plates down to her water-lines. The launch was witnessed by about 10,000 persons. The Lord Clyde iron clad of 16 guns was successfully launched at Pembroke on Thursday.

YARMOUTH.—The fine screw steamer Ontario, of 3200 tons, belonging to the National Steam Navigation Company, ran on the Hasborough Sands on Sunday morning, while on her first voyage from Shields to Alexandria, with coals and iron. Every effort made to get her off has failed, and she has become a total wreck. The crew refused to abandon the vessel, and had not been rescued on Thursday morning.

WAKEFIELD.—On Friday night at the village of East Moor, near this town, George Atkinson, a collier employed at Methley, near Leeds, made an attempt to murder his wife by cutting her throat with a razor. She succeeded in making her escape before he completed his purpose, and the wound he inflicted was only superficial. It appears that they had been married for 13 years, and that the wife left him some time ago to live with a collier named John Young, at East Moor. The prisoner had gone over from Methley to ask her to return to him, which she refused to do. He was taken into custody and remanded for further inquiry.

THE LATE OUTRAGE IN DONEGAL.—It is now hoped that Mr. Wilson, the agent of the Earl of Leitrim, who was shot at and severely wounded a few days ago, will recover. The utmost exertions have been made by the police to detect the assassins; but though they wore the cloaks of the constabulary and were seen to walk quietly away from the place, the peasantry will give no information. Several persons have been arrested on suspicion; but the evidence, so far as it has yet appeared, has not been sufficient to detain them.

Railways.

DESTRUCTIVE COLLISION ON THE GREAT NORTHERN.—On Tuesday morning a collision took place at Grantham, between two Manchester goods trains laden with valuable merchandise, consisting of tea, silks, &c. One of the trains left Peterborough at 12 30 and the other at 12.50. The latter train ran at full speed into the former while standing at Grantham station, and as it was travelling at the rate of between 30 and 40 miles an hour, the collision was terrific. Twelve trucks were completely smashed, and the up and down lines were literally strewn with tea. One truck was cut clean in two, each half standing some distance apart from the other on two wheels. The driver of the train and the fireman were so seriously injured that their recovery is despaired of; and the damage to property is immense.

Obituary.

THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE died on Tuesday evening at Clumber, after a long illness, brought on, like that of Lord Herbert, by over-work in the public service. His Grace, Henry Pelham Pelham Pelham Clinton, K.G., Duke of Newcastle, under Lyme in St. Pudelsie, Earl of Lincoln, and Baron Clinton, Lord Warden of the Stannaries of Cornwall and Devonshire, Lord Lieutenant of Nottinghamshire, Ritter and Master Forester of Sherwood, Hereditary Steward of the Sherwood Rangers, High Steward of Retford, Keeper of St. Briavel's Castle &c., was born in Clarges Street, Berkeley Square, in May, 1811, and was consequently in his 54th year. He was educated at Eton and at Christ Church, where he was the contemporary of Mr Gladstone, Lord Elgin, Lord Canning, Lord Herbert of Lea, and the Marquis of Dalhousie, all of whom lived to fill high offices in the political world, and of whom Mr. Gladstone is now the sole survivor. He represented South Notts in Parliament from 1832 to 1846; represented the Falkirk burghs from 1846 to 1851, when he succeeded to the House of Lords on the death of his father. He was a Lord of the Treasury from 1834 to 1835, first Commissioner of Woods and Forests from 1841 to 1846, Chief Secretary for Ireland in 1846, Secretary of State for the Colonies from 1852 to 1854, Secretary of State for War from 1854 to 1855, again Colonial Secretary from 1859 to 1864, when his ill health obliged him to retire from public life. While he held the latter office in 1860 he was selected by the Queen to travel through her North American dominions with the Prince of Wales, and the visits paid to him on his declined by her Majesty and his Royal Highness are the best proofs of the manner in which he discharged this responsible duty. In 1832 he married Lady Susan Harriet Catherine Hamilton Douglas, only daughter of the Duke of Hamilton, by whom he has left four sons and a daughter. The latter, Lady Susan Charlotte Catherine Pelham Clinton, married in 1860, Lord Adolphus Vane Tempest, M.P., for South Durham, who died a few months ago. The second son, Lord Edward William, born in 1836, is an officer in the Rifle Brigade; the third and fourth, Lords Arthur and Albert, born respectively in 1840 and 1845, are in the navy. The eldest son, who succeeds to the titles and estates, Henry Pelham, Earl of Lincoln, was formerly M.P for Newark, and was born in 1834. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, and married in 1861, Henrietta Adela, daughter of Mr Henry Thomas Hope, of Deepdene, by whom he has issue two daughters, and one son and heir, Lord Clinton, born a week or two back.

VICE ADMIRAL LORD SOMERVILLE died on Wednesday morning at Newtold Conyn, Leamington, where he had resided for many years. He was the 17th Baron Somerville, in the peerage of Scotland, and succeeded to the title in 1842. He entered the navy at an early age, but retired from active service when holding the rank of captain. He attained the rank of Vice-Admiral in 1862. He married in 1833 the only daughter of Mr. John Hayman, by whom he leaves two sons and five daughters, and is succeeded in the title by his eldest son, Hugh, born in 1839. His Lordship was in his 77th year, and had been in a critical state of health for a considerable time.

SIR ALEXANDER LAWRENCE, BART., whose accidental death was announced by the last Indian mail, was the eldest son of Sir Henry Montgomery Lawrence, K.C.B., who fell at Lucknow, by the youngest daughter of the Rev. George Marshall, of Cardonagh, in Ireland. He was born at Allahabad in 1835, entered the Bengal Civil Service in 1857, and was assistant commissioner in the Punjaub. He married in 1862 the daughter of Dr. Every Kennedy, of Upper Merrion Street, Dublin, and of Ballynastra Castle, Dublin county. He was created a baronet for his father's services in India in 1858, with remainder to his brother, Henry Waldemar, who succeeds him in the title.

SIR WILLIAM EDMUND CRADOCK HARTOPP, BART., died on the 16th inst. at Four Oaks Park, Warwickshire, in his 67th year. He was the third son of the first baronet, and succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of his brother in 1849. He married in 1825 the eldest daughter of Mr. Henry Bloomfield Keene, by whom he leaves a family. His eldest daughter married the late Sir Francis E Scott, Bart.; his second daughter married Mr. Farnham, M.P.; and the fourth married Lord Walter Scott, son of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was educated at Rugby, and was deputy-lieutenant of the counties of Leicester and Warwick. He is succeeded in the title and estates by his eldest son, John William Hartopp, born in 1829, formerly captain in the 17th Lancers, and now major in the 1st Warwickshire Volunteers. He married, in 1855, the eldest daughter of the late Mr. Edward Gyles Howard, a collateral member of the ducal house of Norfolk.

VICE ADMIRAL GREVILLE, C.B., died on the 18th inst., after a long illness, at Canon Hill, near Maidenhead, aged 70. He was the second son of Lieut.-Colonel Greville, by the second daughter of Sir Bellingham Graham, Bart. He married, in 1816, the only child of the late General Despard. He entered the navy in 1806, and served on the north coast of Spain, in the action of Lissa, and afterwards on the Boulogne and North American stations. In 1817 he held the office of private secretary to Viscount Combermere. After holding various employments and commands, he was, in 1851, appointed to the command of the Trafalgar, 120, on the Mediterranean station, in which ship he served during the war with Russia. For his services during the war in the East he was made a companion of the Bath, an officer of the Legion of Honour, and decorated with the Medjidie of the 3d Class. He attained the rank of rear admiral in 1856, and vice-admiral in 1863. He had been in the receipt of a good service pension since 1863.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Oct. 17.

We have to-day an unusually large supply of Beasts; still, however, the choice qualities are not very plentiful, and there is very little reduction in them. A considerable number of inferior remain unsold. The number of Sheep is also very large, and the average quality good. Prices are lower, and a clearance cannot be effected. Calves are more plentiful, and quotations are lower. From Germany and Holland there are 3840 Beasts, 10,030 Sheep, 369 Calves, and 165 Pigs; from Spain, 125 Beasts; from Ireland, 760; and 3150 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Oct. 20.

We have a larger supply of Beasts, but it consists chiefly of those left over from Monday and middling qualities. Trade is dull, but there is no quotable reduction in price. The number of Sheep is small, yet it exceeds the demand. The choicest descriptions meet with purchasers at Monday's rates, but inferior are very difficult to dispose of. Calves are selling about the same as of late. Our foreign supply consists of 1560 Beasts, 2640 Sheep, 391 Calves, and 140 Pigs.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Oct. 17.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent being very small induced factors at the opening to hold for a slight advance, but the Wheat remaining unsold they were ultimately compelled to accept the prices of last week; there was a moderate attendance of country buyers, who took foreign slowly and in retail quantities at late rates. Fine Malting Barley was in good demand at last week's rates, other descriptions were unaltered in value. Beans and Peas brought late prices. The Oat trade was quiet, and we do not alter our quotations. Flour was in moderate demand at about former rates.

FRIDAY, Oct. 21.

The weather since the 14th inst. has continued to be fine, until the evening of the 19th, when some rain fell. The Wheat trade during the week has been dull, but prices have remained everywhere much the same as previously quoted, and the same may be said of Spring Corn of all descriptions, Maize perhaps excepted, which is somewhat cheaper. Flour is unaltered in value. Since Friday last 81 vessels have been reported off the coast. A moderate business has been done in Wheat at slightly reduced rates, but fine qualities are in demand; Maize was dull and rather lower, but found yesterday a little more inquiry. All other descriptions of Spring Corn are very quiet. Paris, Oct. 20.—The Flour trade has remained exceedingly slow at late rates. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 31,930 cwt. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. 3d. per 280 lb. There is only a little Wheat on offer, but even this cannot be sold except at a reduction of about 9d. per 480 lbs. The arrivals of English Wheat and foreign Oats are small, of foreign Wheat and English Barley moderate, of English Oats and foreign Barley considerable, and good of foreign Flour. The attendance at this morning's market was limited, and grain of all descriptions neglected; prices may be considered nominally the same as on Monday.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 18.—Our market to-day has been fairly attended, but both millers and dealers are careless about buying whilst our trade remains in such an exceedingly dull state, and the business passing in Wheat has been of the most limited character, at a decline of 1d. per cental on Friday's quotations. Flour is difficult to sell, and very irregular in value. Indian Corn still droops, and we must quote all descriptions 3d. per qr. cheaper to-day. Oats and Oatmeal are both the turn lower. Beans, Peas, and Barley are nominally unaltered in value. The market closes very lifeless.

News of the Week.

The Emperor of the French left Paris on Wednesday for Nice to visit the Emperor of Russia. The King of the Belgians left Geneva on the previous day for the same place, and it is said that the King of Italy is also likely to visit Nice during the interview of the two Emperors.

The Italian Chamber of Deputies was re-opened on Monday, and was attended by a very large number of members. The Ministers laid on the table the Franco-Italian Convention and the diplomatic correspondence relating to it, together with a bill for the transfer of the capital to Florence. There was some fear that the revolutionary party would take advantage of the occasion to excite the people to a renewed demonstration against the transference of the capital, and a military force was in readiness to suppress any outbreak, but no attempt was made to disturb the public peace. On Tuesday the Parliament was adjourned till further orders for the purpose of allowing time for the consideration of the Convention. On the same day about 200 deputies held a meeting at which they expressed themselves unanimously in favour of the Convention. It is believed that the Convention, as well as the bill for the transfer of the capital to Florence, will be carried by a large majority.

A telegram from Vienna states that Count Richberg, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, has retired from the Cabinet, and has been succeeded by Count Mensdorff-Pouilly.

The news from the United States continues favourable to the Confederates. In the recent engagement on the north of the James River, the Federals were driven to a distance of five miles from their entrenched lines before Petersburg, with the loss of ten guns. General Grant subsequently visited Washington to consult President Lincoln on the state of affairs, and it is rumoured that since his return to the army he has removed Generals Meade and Warren from their commands in consequence of their protesting against the policy of assaulting impregnable earthworks. General Longstreet has superseded General Early in the command of the Confederate force in the Shenandoah Valley, and General Sheridan has retreated to Strasburg after devastating the country and burning all the barns, mills, and houses between the Blue Ridge and the North Mountains. In Missouri General Price has been attacked in front and rear by Generals Pleasanton and Curtis, but has nevertheless sent a portion of his force north of the Missouri River, and has established his head-quarters at Booneville, where he has proclaimed his intention to remain in the State if the people will rally to his standard. Accounts from Richmond state that General Hood has re-captured Atlanta and Rome, with four Federal corps; and the Southern journals generally assert that the movements which are progressing in Georgia render General Sherman's position untenable. The voting for the Presidential Election commenced on the 12th inst. In Ohio and Indiana the Republicans obtained a large majority. In Pennsylvania the voting was largely in favour of the Democrats; and in Maryland there was a majority of several thousands against the adoption of an anti-slavery constitution. It is believed that the vote of the soldiers serving in the Federal army will not reverse this result in either of these States.

The Conference of the British American colonies at Quebec has resolved upon the confederation of all the provinces. A proposal that the Crown shall appoint the head of the Confederate Executive and the Governors of the provinces has been favourably received; and it is understood that an invitation will be sent forthwith to all the Pacific colonies to join the Confederation.

Home News.

THE QUEEN IN SCOTLAND.—On Wednesday week the rain prevented the Queen and Royal family from going out but for a very short time. Dr. Sieveking left the Castle. On Thursday morning the Queen and Royal family were prevented from going out in consequence of the unfavourable state of the weather. Her Majesty went out for a short time in the afternoon. On Friday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, drove to the Lynn of Quoich. On Saturday Sir George Grey dined with the Queen and the Royal Family. On Sunday morning the Queen and Princess Helena attended Divine Service at the parish Church of Crathie. The Rev. A. Anderson officiated. On Monday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena and Prince Arthur, drove to the Lynn of Dee. On Tuesday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, drove round by Invercauld. Sir George Grey left the Castle for Falloden. The Queen's departure from Balmoral, which was first announced for the 24th, and then postponed to the 26th, was again postponed till yesterday, in consequence of the slight indisposition of the Princess Louisa. By the last arrangements her Majesty, accompanied by the Princesses Helena, Louisa, and Beatrice, Prince Arthur, Prince Leopold, and Prince Albert Victor, were to leave Balmoral at noon yesterday, and post to Aboyne, whence they were to proceed by a special train at half-past two o'clock to Aberdeen and Perth, where the Royal party were to halt one hour, for dinner. From Perth the train was to proceed to Carlisle, where a halt of 15 minutes was to be made for refreshment. From Carlisle the run was to be uninterrupted to Windsor, where the Royal train was timed to arrive at nine o'clock this morning.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES left Copenhagen on Saturday afternoon in the Osborne, They were accompanied on board by the King, the Royal family, the Ministers, and members of the Diplomatic body, and a large number of the higher civil and military officials. Their Royal Highnesses were attended by a guard of honour, and salutes were fired from the batteries and men-of-war in the port. Large crowds of people were present at the embarkation. Their Royal Highnesses arrived at Travemünde on Sunday morning at 11-45, and proceeded at 2.30 P.M. by special train, through Büchen and Lüneburg to Brunswick, where they slept at the hotel. On Monday morning after an early breakfast they went by special train to Ballenstedt, to visit the Princess Alexandra's grandmother, the mother of the King of Denmark. On Tuesday the Prince and Princess left Ballenstedt for Hanover, where they arrived at 4 P.M., and were received by the King and Crown Prince of Hanover at the railway station. On Wednesday their Royal Highnesses left Hanover by special train for Cologne, accompanied by the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia, who had arrived from Berlin. Their Royal Highnesses are expected at Darmstadt on the 1st of November. It is rumoured that on their return to England the Prince and Princess will pay a visit to the Earl and Countess of Derby, at Knowsley.

PRINCE ALFRED arrived at Windsor Castle on Saturday night from Scotland. On Tuesday his Royal Highness went out shooting. On Wednesday the Prince came to town, and returned to the Castle in the evening. His Royal Highness will shortly leave England for Bonn, on the Rhine, where he will reside during the coming winter for the purpose of studying in the university of that town.

PRIVY COUNCIL.—The Queen will hold a Council at Windsor Castle on Tuesday next, the 1st of November.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—The Post of yesterday contradicts the popular rumour that a dissolution of Parliament is imminent. On the contrary, "it believes that it is warranted in postponing it, as far as Ministerial intentions are concerned, to the extremest limits—viz., to 1866."

THE CHURCH.—It is stated that Archdeacon Bentinck has resigned the canonry of Westminster, which he has held since 1809, and that the Rev. Ernest Hawkins, Secretary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and Minister of Curzon Chapel, has been appointed his successor.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor left Paris on Wednesday for Nice to visit the Emperor and Empress of Russia. It is said that the Czar, prior to his return to St. Petersburg, will go to Compiègne on a visit to the Emperor and Empress. A Cabinet Council was held at St. Cloud on Saturday. Count von Bismark has arrived in Paris, and seen the Emperor. He dined on Tuesday evening at the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, with Count Goltz and M. Benedetti. It is stated that a project is under serious consideration of establishing a Public Works Fund, to occupy the same position towards undertakings of general utility for the whole of France as is fulfilled by the Works Fund for the city of Paris. The amount set apart for the new fund is not yet decided, but it will probably be raised by a loan applicable to the great works of public utility which have been recently discussed. The Constitutionnel of Thursday says that it is authorised formally to deny the rumours relative to the issue of a new loan. The same paper publishes an article by M. Paulin Limayrac, stating that the Convention of the 15th of September having been concluded in good faith, its execution will be equally so. It also combats the exaggerations both of the extreme revolutionary party and also of the ultra-Conservative party, who distort the text of any treaty, however clear. The France of Tuesday, alluding to the rumour at Vienna of an understanding between France and Austria, says that nothing is known on the subject, but the Venetian question is in that respect a difficulty which very considerable concessions on the part of Austria could alone remove. A pamphlet, entitled "The Convention of the 15th of September," and believed to be of semi-official origin, was published on Sunday. It says:—

"There can be no doubt that the conditions of the treaty will be loyally carried out, and that the object of the Convention is to bring about such an understanding between the Papacy and Italy as may allow of a solution of the great and fundamental question of Rome. Catholicism would thus rally round the cause of Italy, and the difficulties still existing on the other side of the Alps, and which prevent the establishment of order in Europe, would be solved. We are sufficiently acquainted with the sagacity of the Holy Father to be convinced that he will give no pretext to the turbulent spirits who will not fail to seek obstacles whereby the happy and speedy reconciliation of the Papacy and Italy may be prevented."

The Legitimist party in Paris are using every effort to form a legion for the Pope; and have offered the command to General Lamoricière, who has replied that when a real army is formed, he will be happy to take charge of it, but not till then. The Duc de Dodeauville Rochefoucauld, one of the most faithful and constant adherents of legitimacy in France, died a few days since, at the age of 82. The death of Admiral Romain Desfosses is also announced.

SPAIN.—A meeting of capitalists took place on Wednesday at the Ministry of Finance. The Minister said that, pending the opening of the Chambers, it would be necessary to satisfy the wants of the Treasury. He appealed to the patriotism of those present to negotiate 600,000,000 reals of the bonds given in payment of the national property, or to subscribe to an issue of hypothecated notes of the Bank, bearing interest at 6 per cent. The meeting separated without coming to any decision. It is stated that at a meeting of the Progressista party it has been decided that the members should continue their abstention from politics. Señor Madoz expressed a contrary opinion. The Noticias of Friday says that the Bank of Spain has concluded a loan of 20,000,000 reals with Señor Salamanca, and that the Sub-Governor of the Bank would leave for Paris on Saturday to purchase gold. The Council of Ministers was occupied on Friday morning with Peruvian affairs. It is said that as explanations have been refused by Peru, diplomatic relations between that country and Spain are entirely suspended. Admiral Pareja left Madrid on Wednesday for the Pacific, to replace Admiral Pinzon.

BELGIUM.—The King of the Belgians left Geneva on Tuesday for Lyons and Marseilles, whence his Majesty will probably go to Nice.

DENMARK.—The Flyveposten of Thursday asserts that the sitting of the Council of State held on Tuesday had a material influence on the speedy conclusion of peace, and Lieutenant Blohme at once started for Vienna with despatches to that effect. Rumours have since been current at Copenhagen that a further delay has occurred. The Dagbladet of yesterday says:—

"We hear, but cannot vouch for the truth of the news, that on Wednesday intelligence unfavourable to peace, arrived here, and the sudden summons of the Council of State was on that account. The orders issued by the military authorities at Copenhagen seem to confirm this rumour. It is asserted that Prussia demands that the treaty of peace should not be submitted to the Rigsraad. The rumour that General Falkenstein has absolutely forbidden all imports and exports by sea is fully confirmed."

The Elberfelder Zeitung of Monday states that a clause has been inserted in the treaty, whereby Denmark engages to give compensation for the captured German shipping.

JUTLAND.—General Falkenstein has declared that all functionaries in Jutland will be appointed by him. From the 1st of November all the present postal officials in Jutland will be dismissed. It is asserted that General Falkenstein will entirely prohibit exports and imports by sea from and to Jutland.

THE DUCHIES.—The Schleswig-Holsteinische Zeitung states that the Federal Diet has decided that a very considerable portion of the expense incurred for the Federal army of execution and the civil administration of Holstein shall be defrayed from the revenue of the Duchy. The Lübecker Zeitung of Saturday says that the motion to annex Lauenburg to Prussia has been carried in the Lantag of that Duchy.

PRUSSIA.—The semi-official Nord-Deutsche Zeitung of Monday says that Prussia is not in a position to comply with the resolution of the Lauenburg Diet for annexation to Prussia without further negotiations, since Austria, in virtue of treaties, is, in fact, co-possessor, and has through the alliance acquired moral rights which the Cabinet of Berlin will conscientiously respect. It says, however, that Prussia, fully appreciating the frank and honourable advances of the inhabitants, will neglect nothing to meet their wishes. It is denied, on good authority, that Prussia recently demanded to continue the occupation of Jutland after the conclusion of peace.

AUSTRIA.—The opening of both Houses of the Reichsrath will take place on the 13th November, four days sooner than was at first intended. Rechberg has tendered his resignation, which has been accepted by the Emperor. Count Mensdorff has been appointed as his successor, and took [illegible] of office on Wednesday as Minister for Foreign Affairs and Commerce. Since his resignation Rechberg has received a satisfactory reply to the [illegible] which he had sent to M. Drouyn de Lhuys in reply to the Convention of the 15th of September. The treaty of peace between Denmark and the [illegible] German Powers has been concluded so far as essential points are concerned; some special [illegible] such as that referring to the Port station of [illegible] at Hamburg, being the only ones not yet settled. The following is said to be a summary of its provisions:

"The treaty will differ but little from the preliminaries already executed at Vienna. In conformity with [illegible] the preliminaries, the Jutland Enclaves in the [illegible] territory, situated to the south of the southern [illegible] district of Ribe, and ceded by Denmark to the Germans, have been exchanged against a portion of Northern [illegible] The new frontier of Schleswig will be fixed to the [illegible] town of Christiansfeld; on the east it descends to [illegible] Stenderup, in order that the eastern side of Schleswig [illegible] possessed by Germany, would be a-continuous [illegible] Island of Funen, may remain with Denmark. The [illegible] tion of the debts contracted on account of the [illegible] monarchy have been settled in accordance with [illegible] down in Article 8 of the preliminaries. The reduction [illegible] State property, which was not mentioned in the preliminaries, has also taken place, whereby the Duchies will receive [illegible] of about 8,500,000 thalers, in lieu of about 14,000,000 which they would have had the right to reclaim."

VENETIA.—During the late invasion of Udine [illegible] of insurgents commanded by Talassi, formerly a [illegible] in Garibaldi's army, took possession of the town, [illegible] the tax collectors at Spilembergo and Maniago, and [illegible] in return a formal receipt. On the 19th the insurgents bivouacked at Capo di Ponte, intending to take possession of Belluno. Subsequently they received orders to disperse and to hide their arms. They are about 100, among whom are several deserters, and have taken refuge in the forest of Consiglio, where [illegible] deserters at Cadore and Belluno are endeavouring to join them. Up to the present time the leaders have not been captured, although many arrests have been made. A strict watch is maintained on the frontiers by the authorities, no emigrants being permitted to pass. Contradictory reports are current respecting the situation of the insurgents. One account states that the band is reduced to a small number, and has found any followers among the people; while others state that numerous bands still exist. About 1,000 insurgents are said to have taken refuge in the mountains, where they will be able to offer a prolonged resistance.

RUSSIA.—The Emperor and Empress of Russia arrived at Nice on Friday. On Saturday his Majesty gave a banquet to the battalion of Chasseurs à pied of the Guard. Prince Wittgenstein proposed a toast to the health of the Emperor of the French, and the commander of the troops reciprocated by proposing the toast of the Russian Majesty. On Sunday the Emperor and Empress, with their children, made an excursion in open carriage to Villefranche. In the evening their Majesty attended the representation at the Italian Theatre. General Sonnaz has arrived at Nice to congratulate the Czar and the Emperor Napoleon in the name of the King of Italy. The Emperor is expected at Stuttgard on the 31st inst., when, together with the Queen of Würtemberg, he will assist at the celebration of the service in commemoration of the death of their mother. A Russian frigate has arrived at Villafranca. It is asserted she is on her way to Civita Vecchia to fetch the Czarewitch. Prince Gortschakoff, who has hitherto accompanied the Czar, has gone to Berlin, where he will await the arrival at Nice of the Emperor and Count von Bismark. The Russian papers announce the death of the veteran General Paul Petrovitsch Liprandi, so well known in the Crimean war.

POLAND.—Letters from St. Petersburg state that the so-called Constantine party in Polish affairs has been defeated. The introduction of political reforms is to be expected after a social revolution in Poland has taken place. The Russian Government has not taken sides either in the White or Red Polish party.

ITALY.—The Chamber of Deputies was reopened on Monday under the presidency of Signor Casati. A very large number of Deputies were present, and [illegible] the members of the old Ministry. The new Ministers were in their places. The town was perfectly quiet, and the military were not called out. In the Chamber of Deputies Signor Della Marmora laid on the table the Franco-Italian Convention and the diplomatic correspondence connected therewith. Signor Rattazzi brought forward a Bill for the transfer of the capital to Florence, fixing the necessary credit at 7,000,000 francs, and requested that it might be declared urgent. Several Bills were introduced by different members requesting an inquiry into the late events at Naples. An investigation was agreed to, and a committee of nine members appointed for the purpose. The Minister then made a statement relative to the Convention. He said that they presented the Convention to the Chambers, believing not only that its sanction was henceforth a political necessity, but that its benefits were immensely superior to its inconveniences. The Ministerial declaration acknowledged the great sacrifices involved in the transfer of the capital, but the result of the measure would be the removal of foreign troops from Italian soil, and the preparation a satisfactory solution of the Roman question, it was in the name of the national dignity, independence, and unity that these sacrifices were called for. The diplomatic documents communicated to the Chamber were the Convention and the protocols of the 15th September and the 30th October, two notes from Signor Visconti-Venosta to the Chevalier di Nigra, a note from the latter to the former, and the declaration of the late Ministry to the King. The Note of Chevalier di Nigra to Signor Visconti-Venosta related the history of the negotiations. It stated that the French Government demanded, in addition to a promise not to attack Pontifical territory, some real guarantee in order to inspire the Pope with confidence in the Catholic sentiment of the King of Italy. The Italian negotiators had formal instructions to reject all conditions contrary to the right of the nation. The Marquis Pepoli informed the Emperor Napoleon that the Italian Government, from strategic, political, and administrative reasons, was occupied with the question of removing the seat of Government from Turin. The Emperor replied that this resolution would remove many difficulties. The note further stated that in the negotiations it had been well understood that the Convention should not and could not signify either more or less than what it stated—namely, that Italy undertook to renounce all violent measures. On Tuesday the sittings of the Parliament were adjourned until further orders. A meeting of about 200 deputies took place on the same day, at which they expressed themselves unanimously in favour of the Convention. The members of the Opposition were to meet on Wednesday. It is believed that the Bill for the transfer of the capital to Florence will be carried by a large majority. Seven out of nine Bureaux in the Chamber of Deputies have nominated their representatives to the Committee which will report on the Bill for the transfer of the capital. These are all favourable to the Convention. The following letter from Garibaldi, declaring himself opposed to the Franco-Italian Convention, appeared on Friday in the Diritto, which was seized in consequence with some other journals which copied the declaration:—

"Caprera, Oct. 10.

"That the guilty should be anxious to find accomplices, the thing is but natural; but that an attempt should be made to drag me through the mire with the men who have defiled Italy with the Convention of September 15th is what I was not prepared for. With Bonaparte the only convention possible is this—purify our country of his presence—not in two years, but in two days."

The following letter has also been addressed by Garibaldi to the priest Pantaleo, congratulating him on having thrown off the clerical dress:—

"Caprera, Oct. 10.

"My Dear Pantaleo—It is not in the name of Italy alone, but in that of all humanity, that I thank you for the courageous resolution you have adopted to cast off the uniform of the enemies of liberty and of progress. To women first, and next to generous priests like yourself, it belongs to deliver Italy from an institution which, if beneficial in former times, has now become a desolating scourge. The priests' dress was sanctified by Campanella, Bruno, Arnoldo, Savanarola, and Ugo Bassi, but it is now cursed by every one.

Yours for life, Garibaldi."

Perfect tranquillity reigns in Turin, and there is not the least indication of excitement. Proclamations of the Syndics and the commanders of the National Guard and manifestos of the working men's associations have been published, recommending the people to preserve order and tranquillity. One of the societies of working men has adopted a resolution inviting the working class generally to prove by their actions that they are not forgetful of their reputation and their past actions, and that they will maintain in the present days a calm and dignified attitude. The resolution also declared that they would regard as a traitor to his country whoever should attempt to disturb public order. The Grand Duke of Tuscany has protested against the project of making Florence the capital of Italy, as contrary to the rights reserved to him by the Treaty of Munich. Letters from Rome state that the Correspondencia di Roma violently attacks the Convention, and criticises the interpretation given to it by the Constitutionnel and the France. The Czarewitch was expected at Rome.

Greece.—The Ministers on Friday declared that the signature of the Constitution could not take place unless a proviso to that effect were contained therein. The Royal proposal was adopted, after a discussion, by a majority of 186 to 124, ten members abstaining from voting. The National Assembly, in its sitting of Saturday, revoked the decree whereby six members of the Miaouli Ministry, during the reign of King Otho, were deprived of civil rights for 10 years. The following is the text of the despatch from Earl Russell to Mr. Erskine, of which the Greek papers have given a very distorted version:—

"Foreign Office, Sept. 19.

"Sir,—I have received your despatch of the 1st inst. reporting the request of Count Sponneck that her Majesty's Government would exert their influence with the National Assembly, and especially with the so-called 'English party,' to induce them to proceed with the discussion of the Constitution without unnecessary delay. You will state to Count Soonneck that her Majesty's Government have no relations with any political party in Greece, and only wish to act in concert with France and Russia in the general interests of Greece. But as regards the request made by Count Sponneck for the exertion of English influence on the National Assembly, you will say that although her Majesty's Government would not object to her Majesty's representative expressing to any deputies who may speak to him on public affairs an opinion in favour of an early settlement of the Constitution, it would not be consistent with the principles of her Majesty's Government to attempt to influence the decisions of the Assembly, while to do so would be setting a bad example and might lead other Powers to exert influence in some other and more objectionable direction. The less foreign Powers interfere in the internal affairs of Greece the better will be the prospect of internal tranquillity and external peace for that kingdom.

"I am, &c., Russell."

Cape of Good Hope.—By the mail steamer Briton we have Cape news to the 20th ult. Sir Philip Wodehouse intended to proceed about the close of September from British Kaffraria to the Orange River Free State to settle the boundary of Moshesh's country. The incorporation of British Kaffraria with the Cape colony has been referred to the Home Government. The Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Percy Douglas, was at Graham's Town. The natives are quiet. Kreli is to be located between the Kei and the Bashee. The year's revenue to June 30 was 671,144*l.*, and the expenditure 625,616*l.* Of the former 136,000*l.* consisted of loans. The additional taxes may make up the deficiency. The weather was fine, the land cultivated extensive, and the harvest promising. The llama is to be introduced from South America. The Government has placed 200 men to work, for the purpose of extending the railroad from Wellington to Worcester. The Supreme Court has quashed the sentence of deprivation pronounced by the Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church on the Rev. Mr. Kotze, one of her ministers, on the ground that he was not allowed a legal trial.

China.—The overland mail has brought further details of the capture of Hoochow by the Imperialists. It appears that the Taepings, after defeating the Franco-Chinese force which was besieging the city, and capturing a fleet of the Imperial gunboats, suddenly evacuated Hoochow and dispersed, although their large force had just been augmented by a body of fugitives from Nankin, and the besiegers under M. d'Aiguebelle were barely able to maintain their positions. The Emperor has issued orders that two of the chiefs taken at Nankin, Chung-Wang and Kan-Wang, the latter a brother of the rebel Prince of Peace, should be sent to Pekin, where they will be brushed with wire brushes till their flesh is gradually torn from their bodies and they die under the operation.

Japan.—The latest news from Kagosima states that the Prince of Nagato still objects to the passage of foreign ships through the Straits of Simonoseki into the inland sea, and even fired a shot across the bows of the Cormorant when she attempted to enter. A fleet was about to sail for the Straits in July last to punish the Prince for this conduct, when the Japanese Ambassadors who were here two years ago arrived and reported the treaty they had made with the Emperor of the French, guaranteeing the opening of the sea within three months. On the news of this peaceful solution of the difficulty the expedition was stopped, but it was soon announced that the Gorogio and the Tycoon repudiated their ambassadors, and stated that they had no authority to execute such a treaty, and that the Government could not guarantee its fulfilment. The chief ambassador at the same time received permission to commit suicide by performing the Hari-Kari. It was therefore resolved by all the Christian Ambassadors to resume the expedition to force the passage into the inland sea. The ships of war which will compose the expedition are 17 in number, viz. the Conqueror, 78; Euryalus, 35; Barossa, Leopard, and Tartar frigates; Coquette, Cormorant, and Bouncer corvettes, all under the English flag, and armed with Armstrong guns; the French ships Semiramis, Dupleix, and Tancrede; the Dutch ships Medusa, Metalen, Kims, Djamba, and Amsterdam; and the Takiang, chartered by the United States Minister in order to show the American flag when the forts are engaged.

New Zealand.—The Gazette of Friday night contains despatches from the governor and commander-in-chief in New Zealand, which officially confirm the unqualified submission of the insurgent natives in the Tauranga district. It is not yet known what effect their submission will have on the other tribes.

West Indies.—A telegram from Halifax of Oct. 5 says that yellow fever is abating at Bermuda, and all the medical officers are recovering. Those that can be spared are to return in a few days to Canada. All the effective troops stationed in the islands have been removed to Halifax, a guard and the convalescents remaining.

United States.—General Grant, after visiting Washington, has returned to Petersburg. The military situation is unchanged. It is rumoured that General Grant has removed Generals Warren and Meade for protesting against his orders to assault the Confederate works in their front, which are of great strength. General Lee's report of the engagement of the 8th on the north of the James River states that he attacked the Federals on the Charles City road, and drove them from two intrenched lines, capturing 10 guns. Finding that they were further strongly intrenched, he did not press them. General Gregg was killed. Southern journals claim the engagement as a signal victory, the Federals being driven five miles from the city. General Grant reports that his loss amounted to 400 men, the Confederate loss being 1100. General Longstreet has superseded General Early. General Sheridan has retreated to Strasburg. He reports that on the 9th inst. he repulsed Early's cavalry, who followed him to that point, capturing 330 prisoners and 11 cannon. He states that in obedience to the orders of General Grant to make the Shenandoah Valley a barren waste, he had devastated the whole country between the Blue Ridge and the North Mountains, destroying 2000 barns and 70 mills, which were filled with hay, farming implements, meal, and flour. In retaliation for the shooting of a subordinate officer he burnt all the dwellings within five miles' radius of the spot where he fell. General Sherman reports on the 9th inst. that Hood's forces, operating in his rear, had occupied Dalton, and that he feared an attack by them on Kingston and Rome. He adds that seven miles of their way to Chattanooga are destroyed, but that, having plenty of provisions in Atlanta, he feels secure so far as his main army is concerned. The Richmond journals contain rumours that Hood had recaptured Atlanta, together with four Federal corps: and other Southern journals still assert that the movements progressing in Georgia render Sherman's position untenable. Despatches from Augusta, Georgia, of the 8th inst., report the recapture of Rome by the Confederates, with over 3000 prisoners. A Federal force of infantry and artillery from General Washburn's department, under Colonel Hodge, proceeding up the Tennessee on transports convoyed by gunboats, was attacked and driven back at East Point on the 10 inst., by General Forrest. The Federals admit the loss of two transports, all their artillery, and 50 men killed and wounded. General Burbridge, who, with a large Federal force, was recently sent from Mount Stirling, Kentucky, to destroy the saltworks in South-Eastern Virginia, has returned to Kentucky unsuccessful. He attacked Saltville on the 3d inst., and was repulsed with heavy loss; and, having expended his ammunition, was forced to retreat precipitately. The latest accounts from Missouri, to the 12th inst., state that the Confederates have been attacked by Pleasanton in the rear, and by Curtis in front, and that one portion of their force has withdrawn from before Jefferson city, moving westward; while another has advanced north of the Missouri River. They have destroyed the bridges and portions of the Pacific Railway near Sedalia, and General Price, whose head-quarters are at Booneville, has made a speech asserting that if the people would rally to his standard he would remain in Missouri. It was reported that the preparations which were being made for a Federal attack on Wilmington, both by sea and land, were nearly completed. The National Democratic Committee has published an address to the people of the United States, denouncing the acts of tyranny and usurpation of the Administration, the suppression of Democratic newspapers, and the imposition of test oaths; and threatening the adoption of revolutionary measures in case of any illegal interference in the approaching elections. The elections in the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana were held on the 12th. The Republican ticket has been elected in Indiana and Ohio by a large majority. In Pennsylvania there is a large Democratic majority on the home vote, which it is believed the soldiers' vote cannot overcome. In Maryland the elections show a majority of several thousand against the adoption of an anti-slavery Constitution. It is believed that the soldiers' vote will not reverse this result. The New York World publishes a statement showing that the public debt, including the appropriations to be made by the next Congress, amounts to 4,000,000,000 dols. The steamer Constance has been sunk off Charleston. Chief Justice Taney died at Washington on the 12th. It is reported that Mr. Case will succeed him. Vice-President Stephens has written a letter, in which he says that the only key-note to peace is the acknowledgment of the sovereignty of the States. He favours an armistice and a convention of the States, and believes that the question of the boundaries of the Confederacies, Union or Unions, would adjust themselves to the interest of parties and the exigencies of the times.

Canada.—The British American Conference at Quebec has unanimously resolved upon the confederation of all the provinces. It is understood that an invitation will be sent to the Pacific colonies to join the Confederation. A proposal for the Crown to appoint the head of the Confederate Executive and the Governors of the provinces has been favourably received.

Mexico.—Advices from Mexico to the 1st inst. state that the Mexican main army has been defeated near Durango, with a loss of 20 guns. Vidaurri, Quiroga, Doblado, Zuloaga, and Garza had made their submission. The troops were pursuing Juarez in the north-west. The French have occupied Matamoras, and General Bazaine was preparing for the return of those French troops under orders to leave Mexico. The Emperor Maximilian in his recent tour was everywhere received with enthusiasm.

San Domingo.—General Gandara has informed the Madrid Government that the San Domingo insurgents have made serious proposals for peace.

PROCEEDINGS IN BANKRUPTCY.—In April last the Lord Chancellor, dissatisfied with the accounts of the official assignees and messengers of the Court of Bankruptcy for the Leeds district, requested Mr. Commissioner Ayrton, one of the commissioners there, and Mr. Harding, the London accountant, to institute a rigid examination and scrutiny of all their books, and to report to him on the subject. The result of this investigation turned out to be of so very lamentable a character that his Lordship, immediately it was made known to him, followed up his request by issuing an order directing a similar proceeding as to the accounts of every official assignee and messenger in all the district courts in the country, with power also to inquire into the manner in which the bills of costs were taxed by the registrars of the various courts. The inquiry under this order has been completed so far as regards the courts at Leeds, Birmingham, Manchester, and Liverpool, and the result is that, besides the discovery of many very gross irregularities, it has been found that large sums of money have been improperly retained, both by the official assignees and by the messengers, which ought to have been paid over to the Chief Registrar's account—sums it is said already amounting in the aggregate to upwards of 14,000*l*. It as understood to be his Lordship's intention that the inquiry shall be extended to the accounts of the official assignees and messengers acting in London.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—The nine statues from the Farnese Palace at Rome, recently purchased from the ex-King of Naples, were received at the British Museum last week. They are—A Mercury, nearly identical in pose and scale with the celebrated statue in the Belvedere of the Vatican, and a counterpart of one which forms the principal ornament of Lansdowne House;—the equestrian figure of a Roman Emperor, curious as one of the only four equestrian statues that have descended to us from antiquity;—the celebrated and unique copy of the Diadumenos of Polycletus, a Greek athlete binding a diadem round his head, estimated by Pliny to be worth the equivalent of 20,000*l*. in his own day, and ranked third, if not second, among the productions of Polycletus;—an Apollo playing on the lyre, in the same attitude as the beautiful statue from Cyrene, already in the Museum;—an heroic figure, supposed to represent a King of the Macedonian period in the character of a Deity, according to the system of ideal portraiture which prevailed after the time of Alexander the Great;—a Satyr holding up a basket containing an Amorino;—a group of Mercury and Herse;—a male torso. These statues formed part of the celebrated Farnese collection, the remainder of which is now in the Museo Borbonico at Naples. They were all found in the Baths of Caracalla. Their acquisition is mainly due to the friendly intervention of Mr. William Storey, the well-known American sculptor at Rome.—Mr. Edward Wigan, of Highbury Terrace, has just presented to the Museum 293 coins from his celebrated collection of Roman imperial coins.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION IN TURKEY.—A numerous deputation, introduced by Lord Calthorpe, and composed mainly of members of the Evangelical Alliance, presented a memorial to Earl Russell on Wednesday at the Foreign Office, inviting his attention to the recent proceedings of the Turkish Government at Constantinople, as constituting a violation of religious liberty. Earl Russell, in reply, explained that the subject was one of considerable difficulty as to the facts, the Turkish Government alleging that the steps they had taken were the result of indiscretion on the part of the missionaries in performing their services in places where they were likely to cause a disturbance of the public peace. He could not agree in the view taken by the Turkish authorities that the converts must not communicate their convictions to others lest they should induce them also to become Protestants. That was a natural exercise of their religion in which the Hatti Humayoun said they should not be molested. Whilst they should firmly insist on that agreement being carried out, it behoved those who went out as missionaries to treat the national religion with that respect with which they would expect to have their own treated by people of all creeds living in this country. He understood that the three men who had been imprisoned for embracing the Protestant faith had been released, but he would make inquiry as to the statement that banishment had followed their release from prison.

THE ANGLO-INDIAN TELEGRAPH.—A despatch from Bombay of October 2 says that the Persian Gulf Telegraph cable has been repaired. The land line is completed from Bushire to Teheran, and messages have come through to Bombay in 12 hours. The extension from Teheran to Bagdad will be finished next month, but the disputes on the frontier prevent communication with the latter city.

BURGLARY AND ATTEMPTED MURDER AT WOODFORD.—On Friday night a daring burglary was committed ... at the house of Mr. Joseph Kemsley, farmer, situated ... in a somewhat retired spot near Woodford. About ... past 11 o'clock at night his two daughters were ... awakened from their sleep by three men dressed ... labourers, and with crape over their faces, standing ... over them, one with a pistol and a heavy bludgeon. ... The girls both fainted from fright, and the burglars ... took advantage of their helpless condition to ... possession of a small gold watch and key; a ... silver watch with silver guard; two cloth waistcoats ... hats; about 4*l*. in gold, and 9*s*. in silver. While ... were ransacking the house a man-servant who slept ... stairs heard them, but was afraid to venture down to ... give any alarm; but a policeman named Delaberche, ... observing an unusual moving about of lights in the ... house, effected an entrance, when the burglars immediately set upon him and beat him most severely about ... the head and body, and left him for dead in the passage. ... They then decamped. The man-servant did not ...

any alarm, and the policeman lay weltering in his blood for a considerable time, until the sergeant of police and another patrol passed round that way and discovered him. The sergeant at once sent for medical assistance, and had him conveyed to the police-station, where he at present remains in such a dangerous state that, erysipelas having supervened, his death is daily expected. Notice was at once sent to the different police-stations in the county of Essex, and active measures were taken to discover the burglars, but no trace of them has yet been obtained. The fact that they left their pistol behind encourages the hope that they will eventually be traced.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that in the week that ended on Saturday October 22, the deaths of 1335 persons were registered in London. The average number in the corresponding week of the ten years, 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1188. The present return is therefore 147 above the average. During the week the births of 997 boys and 967 girls, in all 1964 children were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1895.

Provincial.

Bilston.—The men on strike are still as determined as ever to remain out; but the determination of the authorities not to permit large bodies of men to congregate with bands early in the morning in the neighbourhood of collieries where the men are at work has materially checked their meetings. The military and police, however, are still in great force in the Dudley and Tipton districts, to which the strike is now confined. In the Bilston and Wolverhampton district by far the greater number of the pits are at work. On Monday a mass meeting, which was attended by 15,000 persons, was held at Tipton, at which a vote of censure upon the police for preventing the bands from playing was adopted, and the men expressed their determination to stand out until they had their wages. The meeting passed off very quietly considering the vast numbers present. There was a large body of police, as well as two troops of Hussars, in the town during the time.

Brighton.—On Tuesday evening, the 20th inst. about 6 or 7 o'clock, Miss Isabella Naylor, 26 years of age, daughter of Mr. Naylor, of York Place, left her home apparently in excellent health and spirits. She did not, however, return at night, and great alarm was consequently felt for her safety, as she had been suffering from fits. The police at once instituted inquiries, and Sergeant Baldwin, who is stationed at Preston, hearing that there was a young woman in the neighbourhood of Preston and Patcham who was acting very strangely, concluded that it was the missing person, and with five or six men went out to make a search. The whole neighbourhood was completely scoured, and not a pond or well, or any place that was likely to conceal her, was passed without a minute examination. The hills were searched, and at length a portion of a woman's dress was discovered. Sergeant Baldwin kept his lantern on, in order to give the young lady an opportunity of retracing her steps, if she had chosen to do so, to a place of safety. Instead, however, of approaching the light, she ran away from it, and completely undressed herself as she did so, for, on a closer search being made, the whole of a woman's garments were found at different places on the hill. The search was kept up till late, but no signs of the missing person could be found. Sergeant Baldwin then proceeded to Brighton to communicate with her friends, and at daybreak again made a search over the hills. The last portions of attire which were found were a pair of boots, a pair of stockings, drawers, and a chemise, and these were nearly half a mile from where the first things were found. The search was perseveringly carried on, and ultimately the body, which was identified as that of Miss Naylor, was found quite naked and dead in a ploughed field between Patcham and Stanmer Park. She was lying on her back, and must have run fully a mile after she had completely undressed herself. At the inquest on Friday, a surgeon stated that death arose from exhaustion, want of food for 36 hours, and exposure on a severely cold and windy night. The jury returned a verdict that death arose from exhaustion and exposure, all arising from temporary insanity.

Clumber.—The funeral of the Duke of Newcastle took place on Thursday in the family mausoleum in the parish church of Markham Clinton, about seven miles from Clumber House. Nothing could exceed the respect shown to the Duke's memory by the whole country round. Every shop in Worksop, and many in Retford, were closed entirely till after the funeral; from Bothamsall and Retford Church towers flags were flying half-mast high, and the bells of all the churches in the neighbourhood tolled from ten to two. The tenantry attended on horseback, two and two, and the hearse was drawn by six horses. The chief mourners were the Earl of Lincoln, Lord Arthur Clinton, Lord Albert Clinton, and the Duke of Hamilton. The second mourning coach conveyed Sir Cornwallis Ricketts, Bart., and Captain D'Eyncourt, R.N., brothers-in-law of the late duke; Admiral Sir G. R. Mundy, K.C.B., and Lord Foley, cousins of his Grace. And a third conveyed Lord De Tabley and the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, executors of the late duke; and Lord Harris, representing the Prince of Wales. The pall-bearers, who were on horseback, consisted of tenantry whose families had been longest connected with the estate.

Liverpool.—A bazaar was held last week in St. George's Hall, in aid of the Southern Prisoners' Relief Fund. [A number of aristocratic and fashionable ladies of Southern birth or proclivities presided at stalls named after the various Confederate States, and contributions were received from all parts of the United Kingdom, from Paris, Rome, the Southern States, Canada, and even from New York. The attendance daily was immense, upwards of 5000 being present on Friday, when the admission was reduced to a shilling, while at least 2000 were obliged to be refused admission. The amount produced was about 11,000*l.*, exclusive of 9000*l.* received in subscriptions—an enormous sum to be raised for a charitable object during the present critical state of business affairs.

Liskeard.—Mr. Bernal Osborne addressed his constituents in this town on Friday evening. He said that the Ministry had thoroughly neglected all domestic questions, while it had exhibited peculiar abilities for entangling us in foreign embroilments. He censured them for lecturing Germany, bombarding Japan, and bullying the Brazils; and contended at great length that their policy in the Polish question was inconsistent, injurious to Poland and obnoxious to Russia, a policy of "foolish, unmeaning, criminal swagger." He condemned in strong terms the whole conduct of the Government in the Dano-German dispute, and said that if the country had been saved from the horrors of war and from 10 per cent. income tax, and if Germany had not been devastated and mothers were not now mourning in England—it was not attributable to any act of the Government, but to the unwillingness of the French Emperor and to Mr. Gladstone's opposition. He described Earl Russell as the proper leader of the Liberal party, and said that the party had never held up its head in the House of Commons as it did in his time, and he hesitated not to declare that the Liberal party had neither a flag nor a leader, and was in the Slough of Despond. With regard to the Opposition, he said that if Diogenes were to descend into the House of Commons with a Davy's lamp to discover a Tory party, he would find only three pure Tories—Mr. Newdegate, Mr. Bentinck, and Lord Palmerston. The names of Whigs and Tories were becoming by-words; and he could not see why some new combination should not be tried. He asked if there was any statesman more liberal in voting, speaking, and writing than Lord Stanley, and why he was to be deterred from voting for Lord Stanley because he sat on the opposite benches? The time, he said, would come when a change would take place, and the Government chariot of moderate progress and sensible reform would go on its way.

Malton.—The continued prevalence of fires in stackyards has caused inquiry to be made by some of the insurance offices into a current report that these fires occur only in the stackyards of farmers who have used reaping machines. It is said that threatening notices to that effect have been found in some places, but there is no tangible shape for the rumour. It has, however, had the effect of alarming some of the insurance offices. No alteration of rates has yet been made, but in certain cases the insurance agents have been instructed to inquire of their customers whether they use reapers, which tend to lessen the demand for labour.

Manchester.—A notice has been issued from the office of the Public Works Act in this city, urgently recommending the civil authorities throughout Lancashire and Cheshire, who have received loans under the provisions of the Act, to proceed with such work as will afford employment for the largest number of indigent factory operatives.

Newcastle on Tyne.—It will be remembered that the case of Mr. Bewicke, the Northumbrian magistrate, who suffered ruinous hardships in consequence of being convicted of a felony on the evidence of perjurers, was investigated last session by Parliamentary Committee, who reported that Mr. Bewicke was entitled to no more compensation than the restitution of 400*l.*, the proceeds of the sale of his goods. The Treasury, however, have since taken up the matter, and it has spontaneously awarded to Mr. Bewicke an additional sum of 750*l.*

Norwich.—On Tuesday morning Sir John Walsham, inspector of the Poor-law Board, opened an official inquiry into the allegations preferred against the Rev. E. A. Hillyard, chaplain of the workhouse, of having neglected his duties, and "identified himself with Brother Ignatius and the English Order of St. Benedict." The inquiry took place in the Guildhall. Among the witnesses examined was the Rev. Gideon J. Ouseley, who signed his name with a cross, and appeared in a long black robe. He created much laughter by stating that he was ordained in Ireland by the Bishop of Down and Connor on the "Feast of St. Peter," and that he arrived in Norwich on "St. Alban's Day." On being asked what were the dates of these days, he said that they would be found in the Prayer Book, the former being the 17th and the latter the 30th of June. Sir J. Walsham asked if the latter was not the 29th, upon which he begged pardon and said it was. He stated that he had been assisting at a private school at Bognor before he came to Norwich—a school for the education of girls in "the Catholic faith"—not the Roman Catholic faith, but the Catholic faith, which was of course connected with the Church of England. He came to Norwich to assist Mr. Hillyard and the monks of the Church of England, and since then had "celebrated the sacrifice" daily in the monastery. On Wednesday Mr. Hillyard and several clergymen of the city were examined, and their evidence threw a good deal of light on the proceedings of the monks at Norwich and elsewhere. At the conclusion of this evidence Sir John Walsham said that he would make his report on an early day.

Oxford.—The Fellows of Balliol College have adopted a resolution which will henceforth admit Roman Catholic undergraduates to that College.

Plymouth.—Sir Robert Collier, the Solicitor-General, addressed his constituents in this town on the 20th inst. in a speech of great length, in which he reviewed the domestic and foreign policy of the Government, and particularly the various international questions with which they have had to deal. The following is an abstract of his remarks on the American and Danish questions:—

"The present times have been particularly trying times for the law officers of the Crown. A much greater amount of labour and a greater amount of responsibility has been thrown upon us than is usual; and that greater amount of labour and responsibility has chiefly arisen from the American war. That war has given rise to questions of very great importance—to international questions of the highest importance, some of them, indeed, governed by authorities, but others for which lawyers will search precedents and search the books in vain. A great number of new questions have arisen which could be determined only by reference to the general principles of international law, and I may add to the general principles of common sense and of justice, upon which all laws ought to be founded. Under these circumstances we have been loath to give that advice to the Crown which we deemed inconsistent with law. You are aware that we are not consulted upon questions of policy, but only upon questions of law. Now, I believe that the whole country approves of the determination of her Majesty's Government to maintain a strict neutrality between the two belligerents. But it is one thing to say that you will have neutrality, it is another to act in perfect impartiality as a neutral—it is, as leaving nothing to steer a course you have to navigate between a number of rocks and quicksands. There is, however, a third thing more difficult still, and that is, so to act that you shall not be accused by either party of want of neutrality, which I venture to say is impossible—for the more eager partisans on both sides require all the questions that arise to be decided in their favour—a species of neutrality which resembles that sort of Irish reciprocity which is said to be all on one side. Now, I think it is some testimony to the real neutrality of the Government that we have been complained of by both sides. I expected that such would be the case; for if we were really neutrals, it was almost inevitable and unavoidable. You are aware, that in most of the great wars which have desolated the world in modern times, England, unfortunately for herself, has been a belligerent. In this, the greatest, and perhaps the most distressing of all, we occupy the comparatively novel position of neutrals. I think that you will agree with me that it becomes us as a great nation, now that we are neutrals, to submit to those rules which we laid down when we were belligerents—for nothing would be more unworthy of us, nothing would tend more to the discredit of this nation among the nations of the world, if it should be said that we laid down different rules of law according to the accident of our position—in one case being neutrals, and in the other belligerents. In order to protect our belligerent rights, we, as belligerents, laid down certain rules which to some extent threw a burden upon neutrals. That burden which we threw upon others it is our duty ourselves to bear; and upon that principle—a principle of fairness and justice which everybody will acknowledge—my colleague and myself have acted in tendering the advice which we have given to her Majesty's Government. I may say this on behalf both of my colleague and myself, that, although we are not so presumptuous as to suppose that we have always been in the right, this I will assert, we have dealt with every question which came before us in an impartial and judicial spirit, determined to the best of our judgment not to allow ourselves to be influenced by sympathy with either belligerent—by either partiality for the weaker or fear of the stronger—but where we have had reason to think that the Federal Government have violated the international law, where they have unduly stretched the rules of international law, we have invariably thought it our duty to remonstrate, and require redress. I think it but fair and proper for me to say that, as far as the decisions of the American prize courts are concerned, I think that we have no great ground of complaint. The cases have been fairly argued by counsel on both sides; the American judges have paid the greatest respect to the decisions of our courts and of their own; and although I do not commit myself so far as to say that I agree with every proposition of international law which has been laid down, or with the view of the facts always which has been adopted by the courts, yet I think it but fair to say that upon the whole the judgments have been well considered, and given with a desire to do justice. With regard to the Alexandra she was seized before I became a law officer of the Crown, but I altogether approved of the seizure of that vessel. Unfortunately it has happened—and I deeply regret it—that the decision of that case turned upon a technical question, so that the real construction of that portion of the Foreign Enlistment Act applicable to the case has not been arrived at. That such was the fact I regard as a reproach to our laws. I think that her Majesty's Government were right in preventing the steam rams from sailing from Birkenhead. In that case we have come to a compromise, and I probably you will think with me that discretion was the better part of valour, knowing the difficulties by which one is surrounded in dealing with matters under this Foreign Enlistment Act. Considering those difficulties, we thought it well to put an end to the matter by buying those vessels, and they therefore are now part of the effective navy of this country, instead of having issued from our ports to prey upon the commerce of nations with which we are at peace, and possibly to involve us in hostilities; for the object of the Government, I may say, has not been to punish or inconvenience the individual, but to prevent and punish cruisers issuing from our ports. With regard to Denmark and Germany, I will not attempt to give you the history of the published correspondence further than to say that it amounts to this:—Both parties put forward incompatible pretensions, and Lord Russell endeavoured most earnestly and anxiously to keep peace between them. That is the sum of the whole correspondence; and I venture to say that any man who will read that correspondence candidly will admit that the documents which are the shortest, the tersest, and the most to the point, are the letters of Lord Russell. I think further that this fact ought to be dwelt upon rather more than it has been hitherto:—In September, 1862, Lord Russell made a proposal to Denmark for the government of the Duchies—a proposal altogether consistent with the honour and integrity of the Danish monarchy, and which could have been accepted by Denmark without humiliation. That proposal was actually agreed to by the German Diet, and if it had been agreed to by Denmark, would have put an end to the whole dispute. Denmark would have escaped the humiliation which she has suffered, the thousands who have fallen would have been spared, and the feelings of Germany would never have arrived at that state of exasperation which they have reached. I cannot help thinking that it was most unfortunate that this proposition was at that time rejected by the Danish Government—and, I will say further—for I believe it is now generally admitted—that Lord Russell in making the proposal at that time was entirely in the right. I venture to assert that there has been no occasion in his whole life in which he has been more completely in the right, and yet there never was an occasion on which he was more abused. Well, following up the Danish question, finally, as you know, a Conference was proposed; and I venture to think that that was the last chance—and a good chance—of obtaining peace; for when matters had proceeded so far that the dispute was only with regard to a strip of territory not very many miles broad, there was every reason to hope that the two parties would come to an arrangement—and it is most unfair to judge by the event. It is most unfair to judge anybody by the event; you must judge by the conduct, and by the circumstances under which that conduct was pursued. Without any desire to impute blame to Denmark, I must express a deep regret that the Danish Government did not then accept the conditions obtained by Lord Russell, and which were infinitely preferable to those to which she has since been obliged to submit."

PORTLAND.—The Bishop of Salisbury held a confirmation at Portland convict establishment on Sunday week, when 58 prisoners and 17 young persons, the sons and daughters of the officers connected with the establishment, were admitted to the holy rite.

PRESTEIGN.—A determined attempt at murder was made on Friday week at the village of Kinsham, close to the borders of the county of Hereford, on the Radnorshire side. It appears that for some years past an idle and dissolute fellow named Joseph Morris, a terror to the neighbourhood, has resided in a cottage within a short distance of Coombe Moor, an extensive morass surrounded by preserved forests, his poaching depredations upon which have several times caused him to be an inmate of the Hereford County Gaol. He was married to a decent woman, who had frequently endeavoured to dissuade him from his evil courses. On Friday morning, during the absence of his father-in-law, he stole a shilling from the old man's pocket and then went off. He returned in the evening about 6 o'clock, and then found his wife near a well, about 150 yards from the cottage. While she was in the act of washing her hands at the spring, he suddenly made his appearance on the bank overhanging the well, armed with a gun, which he deliberately fired at her. The charge struck her head, literally carrying away the scalp. She fell down insensible, but as she was a woman of strong constitution she soon recovered and cried for help. On her removal to the cottage she was examined by a surgeon, who gave no hope of her recovery. Morris is supposed to have hidden himself in the great Coombe Moor. He has been in the 7th Hussars, from which regiment he deserted no less than four times, was consequently branded as a felon and a deserter, imprisoned for nine months, received 50 lashes, and finally drummed out of the regiment. He was under the impression that his wife had given such information of his whereabouts after his desertion as led to his arrest, and the act which he has just committed is attributed to a desire for vengeance.

PRESTON.—The gaol chaplain difficulty at the Preston House of Correction is likely to be amicably settled. It was recently rumoured that opposition had been raised to the application of a grant of 40*l.* made at the last quarter sessions for the purchase of vestments, &c., for the Roman Catholic service in the above gaol. Since then Dr. Goss, the Roman Catholic bishop, has written to Mr. T. B. Addison, of Preston, to the effect that the vote will not be accepted, and that the money needed for the purchase of articles required in the service will be provided by the Catholics themselves.

ROCHESTER.—A special meeting of the corporation was held a few days since, the Mayor presiding, for the purpose of adopting the necessary measures for bringing under the notice of Government the danger likely to arise to the inhabitants of this city and of Chatham from gunpowder explosions. After some discussion, it was unanimously resolved to present a memorial to the Secretary of State for War, directing his attention to the extreme danger consequent upon the storing of large quantities of gunpowder, and other explosive materials in the vicinity of populous places, and particularly to the danger which arose to the inhabitants of the populous towns of Chatham and Rochester from the large supplies of gunpowder and other explosive materials now in store at Upnor Castle, and urging the absolute necessity of putting a stop to the practice of building gunpowder stores in the neighbourhood of populous places. The memorial also stated that the corporation had reason to believe that as much as 30,000 barrels of gunpowder were occasionally in store at Upnor, and should an explosion ever occur, the dockyard and other Government establishments at Chatham, together with a great portion of that town and Rochester, would undoubtedly be destroyed. The corporation, therefore, expressed a hope that measures would be at once taken by the War Department to have the large stores of gunpowder distributed, and that such other measures should be adopted as would appear effectual to lessen the probability of an explosion, and the consequent large destruction of life and property.

WHITECROFT.—On Monday night a burglary and attempted murder were committed at Whitecroft, in the Forest of Dean. The house of Mr. Wood, haulier, was attacked during the night by a party of five men, one of them dressed in women's clothes, and all wearing black masks over their faces. Mr. Wood's son confronted the burglars, when they fired at him, and it is feared that he is mortally wounded. The robbers then ransacked the house, and carried off two 5*l.* notes and some gold and silver money, the surviving inmates being too much terrified to offer resistance. The burglars got safely away with their booty, and no trace of them has yet been discovered.

WIGAN.—Considerable excitement has been caused in this town by the proceedings of two men called Rowe and Horrocks, who have taken possession of an old unoccupied place known as the Manor House in a part of the town called Scholes. On effecting an entry the men fortified themselves in the building, stating that they were acting as the authorised representatives of James Horrocks, a grocer of Spinning Moor, Durham, to whom that house, the adjacent property, and land around, to the extent of 50 statute acres, all belonged. The Manor House for the last 40 years has been held by persons of the name of Heaton, and the trustees, under the will of the late head of the family, determined to attempt an ejectment. This was successfully done on Wednesday week, but the attacking party leaving the back door open, the ejected party again entered, and was not again removed. On Saturday a grand siege was arranged to take place. An attacking party of about a score went to the spot and commenced an assault upon the house, in which they might perhaps have been successful had not the police interfered to stop the breach of the peace, and taken their leader into custody. For some minutes the scene was a most exciting one, the besieged hurling bricks and stones upon their opponents, who were armed with picks, bludgeons, and axes. Between the two great damage was done. It has now been determined that peaceable means shall be taken to determine the ownership of the house. The executors of the late tenant, Mr. Burns, have a right to the occupancy of the premises, and they purpose proceeding against the claimants from Durham under the acts of 15th Richard II., c. 2, and 8th of Henry VI., c. 9. In order to do this, it was necessary that a justice of the peace should view the house to satisfy himself of the "forcible retainer;" and accordingly on Saturday the spot was visited by Mr. Joseph Meek, J.P., and the holders will be summoned to appear before the magistrates at petty sessions. The property which Horrocks claims is very valuable. Fifty statute acres around the Manor House includes land belonging to Earl Crawford and Balcarres, to the executors of the late Mr. Roger Anderton, the executors of the late Mr. Ralph Greenough, and other leading landowners in the neighbourhood. Most of it is thickly covered with houses, and the mines beneath are very valuable.

YARMOUTH.—The Ontario steamer has become a total wreck. Before she broke up the Yarmouth boatmen were applied to to bring the crew ashore in the life boat, but they refused to go off unless they were paid 500*l.* The boatmen of a neighbouring station went off for 100*l.*, but the sea was so high that they were obliged to return without reaching the ship. The crew, 68 in number, subsequently left the wreck in one of the ship's boats, and reached a steamer, which landed them at Yarmouth on the same night. The captain and six of the officers refused to abandon the vessel until Friday, when they left her in the ship's life boat, and were landed by a steam tug on the same day. The value of the vessel was upwards of 120,000*l.*, but she was only insured for 90,000*l.*

TRIAL OF THE CARRICK WITCH.—A woman named Mary Doheny, known as "the Carrick Witch," was tried at the Clonmel Quarter Sessions on the 21st inst., for fraudulently obtaining goods from Joseph and Mary Reeves, at Carrick-on-Suir, on the 1st June last. Mary Reeves deposed that the prisoner had attempted to cure one of her children with herbs boiled in new milk, and continued attending the house for the purpose nearly every day during ten months. She said she used to see her dead father and other dead members of the witness's family in the Moate at Ballydine; and, as a proof, prisoner said that witness was to get a note from them, which Captain James Power was to write for them. Witness's child was sent for the note, and several letters were received purporting to come from the deceased relatives. The prisoner next said she wanted bread, butter, and tea for the people in the Moate, and these were daily supplied during four months. Witness also fancied that she saw her own deceased father. He was sitting in a chair opposite the door, quite near her, having on a blue coat, knee breeches, and a hat. He said three times he was going, and that he would return with plenty; and the prisoner said he was going with "the gentry," but would return. The prisoner often asked the witness for wine and spirits. Since her arrest there was no appearance from the other world. The husband of this woman, Joseph Reeves, a sub-constable, now stationed at Kilmainham, near Dublin, was as great a dupe as his wife. He deposed that he saw and knew his father-in-law, who was only 20 yards from him. He believed that the man had come to life, and thought he had a ghostly appearance. He never saw a dead man standing before. He saw his son also in an empty house where he was brought by the prisoner. Evidence was then given ... the prisoner paying for his passage to New York, and ... Mr. Briggs junior was next called, and identified the property as having belonged to his late father. Mr. Degance, hatter, of the Royal Exchange, proved that the hat found on the prisoner had been sold by him to Mr. Briggs and cut down, so as to close the notice. The actual maker of the hat confirmed this fact. The Solicitor General said that this was the case for the prosecution. Serjeant Parry then addressed the jury for the defence, contending that the evidence had failed to bring the charge home to the prisoner, and that in a case of such doubt he ought to be acquitted. At the close of his address the Court again adjourned to this morning. It is not expected that the trial will be concluded before Monday. The excitement out of doors was very great both on Thursday and yesterday, but the crowd at the entrances of the Court was less yesterday than on the previous day. Thomas Long Lethbridge Littleton Hare, described in the calendar as being a farmer, was indicted for unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously sending to Viscount Curzon a letter or writing, threatening to kill and murder the said Viscount Curzon, then well knowing the contents of the said letter. The prosecutor of this indictment was Viscount Curzon, the eldest son and heir of Earl Howe, and the prisoner was the son of a female who formerly had been the tenant of one of the noble earl's farms in the county of Leicester. It would appear that the prisoner had taken great offence because, owing to the embarrassed circumstances of his mother and her family, the farm had been taken out of the mother's hands and let to another person. Under this fancied grievance it would appear that the prisoner, before the commission of the offence with which he was charged in the present indictment, wantonly and maliciously broke the windows of Earl Howe's town mansion in South Audley Street, and having been apprehended on the spot was brought before a magistrate and sentenced to a month's imprisonment. As soon as he came out of prison, after serving that term of incarceration, he wrote and sent the letter on which this indictment was based. The letter was addressed to Viscount Curzon, and was in the following terms:—"Curzon,—Twenty months have elapsed since I stated in a letter that your father was a liar, a robber, and a shabby fellah and would turn like a weathercock. When I wrote the letter to you, then living at Pen, in the Amersham division, God only knew my motive, which I now refresh your memory with for so doing. Bone of his bone, you treated that with disdain. I expect Cancell? but for that monster of a villain Thynne; but be it as it may, I shall be on the watch strictly for you and your father and Thynne to put my menace into execution. You may sneer at this, but by God I carry that with me in the streets of London as rid the earth of tyrants; and I let you know I belong to that stamp of men as stands to his principles, and determined to shoot my of you down, and think no more of it than you did in shooting a hare on the farm in the year of grace 1840. Remember, it has entered so deep into the soul that it only calls for its execution. I mean, tie me up by the neck in the heavens. You may rely on this. Pencil, ink, and parchment are for some men; but I declare to God you have had every chance to remedy and redress Father Lynch. Now it is my turn, and by God beware. What I mean I say and what I say I mean. To-morrow, if I have a chance, I actually will blow out your brains and throw your body into the slur hole." Viscount Curzon was then called, and on being shown the letter in question proved that he received it the 8th February last. The father of the prisoner had been tenant under witness's father, Earl Howe, of a farm called Shackleston, in the county of Leicester. The prisoner, when asked by the Court whether he had any questions to put to this witness, replied, "Oh, yes! several," and in a most irrelevant manner proceeded to cross-examine the noble prosecutor, who in reply to interrogations put by the prisoner replied that he (witness) had no previous knowledge of him, and to the best of his belief he had never seen him until he was in custody on the present charge. He believed that the prisoner's father had held the farm in question from the year 1811, and then it fell into the hands of his widow. He had heard that stated, but did not know it of his own knowledge. Police-sergeant Henry Beard, of the metropolitan police force, was next examined, and proved that he received the letter, which has already been read, from Mr. Parker, on or about the 2d or 3d of August last, and in consequence he proceeded to take the prisoner into custody. He admitted that his name was John Hill, and then witness told him that he had a warrant to apprehend him for sending a letter to Viscount Curzon threatening to kill him. The prisoner at once said—"I sent it, and I have sent one to Earl Howe too." The witness further stated that he then showed the prisoner the letters, and asked him if he had ever seen them before. The prisoner took them in his hand, and having looked at them replied, "Yes, I sent them." In the envelope received by Viscount Curzon were two envelopes, one the letter written in ink, and the other written in pencil. These were the two letters shown to the prisoner, and admitted to have been sent by him to the prosecutor. The witness proceeded to prove that after he had taken the prisoner into custody he found upon him another letter, or rather the draft of a letter, addressed to Earl Howe, and dated the 11th of July, 1864, and was in these terms:—"Richard William Penn Curzon, a name paid for, but better known as Earl Howe: the 28th day of December, the year of grace 1860, I sent you a letter, and you must know that there was something behind. Earl Howe, are you aware that you have been a trespasser on the farm since 1814? Are you aware that since 1855 you have been an outlaw, a felon, and a robber? If the communication is worth a modus, the curse of heaven lies at the door of Gopsall ready to work on." The document on being put in showed a rude drawing of that which the learned judge designated as a horoscope of the Howe family rudely depicted, but evidencing a most revengeful spirit on the part of the prisoner. The prisoner put several questions to the witness, charging him with falsehood, and asserting that he (witness) had offered him 50*l.* to go out to Australia, but that he had said he would not go there at any price. Several witnesses were called, who proved that the letters in question were in the handwriting of the prisoner, with which they were well acquainted. The prisoner, when called upon, went into a rambling statement, in which he averred that his family had been unjustly removed from the farm in question but admitted that he had destroyed and demolished the windows of Earl Howe's mansion in the way which had been described. He however denied the authorship of the letter in question, but alleged that he knew of a letter having been written by his brother on the same subject in the year 1861. He declared, in an incoherent and rambling tone, that he was innocent of the offence imputed to him by this indictment. The jury, after a short consultation in their box, returned a verdict of Guilty, accompanying their verdict with a recommendation to mercy, on the ground that the prisoner, at the time he wrote the letter, was labouring under a fancied grievance. Mr. Justice Willes, in passing sentence, said that in this country, if a tenant had a complaint against his landlord for a grievance, it must be enforced in a court of law, and not by having recourse to threatening letters. Nobody who had heard the case could doubt that the prisoner was an exceedingly silly, foolish person. This case was certainly a degree worse than that of the same character which had been disposed of that morning, and the Court would make a distinction. The sentence upon the prisoner was, that he be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for two years. The prisoner was removed protesting his innocence in a singularly incoherent manner.

Obituary.

The Dowager Lady Shelborne died on the 21st inst. at Bradwell Grove, in her 84th year. Her ladyship was the only child of the second Lord Stowell, and married in 1807 the second Lord Sherborne, by whom she had issue the Countess Dowager of Ducie, the present Lord Sherborne, the Hon. John Thomas Dutton, and the Hon. Ralph H. Dutton, M.P.

Lady Boswell died at Culdees on the 15th inst. She was the widow of Sir A. Boswell, vice-lieutenant of Ayrshire, the eldest son of Dr Johnson's biographer, and like his father—and unlike his grandfather, old Lord Auchinleck—a Tory of the Tories. He was called out by Mr Stuart, of Dunearn, for writing a political song of an offensive nature. Mr. Stuart was attended by the Earl of Rosslyn, and Sir A. Boswell by the Hon. John Douglas, brother of the Marquis of Queensberry. The duel was fought at Auchtertool, near Balcurvie, in 1822. The ball of Mr Stuart struck Sir A. Boswell on the shoulder and entered the spine, and he died shortly afterwards at Balcurvie House. Mr Stuart was tried for murder, defended by Lord Jeffrey, and acquitted. But the sensation caused by this avowed political duel was immense. Lady Boswell had lived in retirement for the last 42 years.

Mr. William George Howard died in Dublin last week. He was the son of the late Hon and Rev. Francis Howard, nephew of the Earl of Wicklow, and heir to his title and estates. On Friday the 21st ultimo he had an interview on the body. It was proved that he had died several days previously in a low and disreputable house in Dolphin's Barn, and indulged to excess in intoxicating liquors. His death was caused by dysentery acting on a broken down constitution, and the jury found a verdict to that effect. The deceased was only 39 years of age, and was married.

Major Weyland, formerly M.P. for Oxfordshire, died at his family seat, Woodrising Hall, Norfolk, on the 14th inst. He was born in 1789, and was the second surviving son of Mr John Weyland, of Woodrising, by the daughter of Mr John Nourse, of Woodeaton Hall, Oxfordshire. He studied for a short time at St. John's College, Cambridge, but obtained a commission in the 16th Light Dragoons, and served with that regiment through the Peninsular war. He succeeded, under the will of his maternal grandfather, to the Woodeaton estate in 1825, and was high sheriff of Oxfordshire in 1832, in which year he was elected M.P. for the county in the Reform interest, and continued to represent it until 1837. In 1854 he succeeded to the Woodrising estate on the death of his elder brother, and resigned the Oxfordshire property to his eldest son. He married, in 1820, the daughter of Mr. Charles Gordon, of Cluny, Aberdeenshire, widow of Sir John Lowther Johnstone, of Westerhall, Bart. He leaves two sons and a daughter. The daughter married, in 1844, the present Earl of Verulam; and the elder son, John, born 1821, married, in 1853, Lady Catherine de Burgh, daughter of the Marquis of Clanricarde. Sir Frederic Johnstone, Bart., is the major's grandson by marriage, and Sir William Bowyer Smijth, Bart., is his nephew—his sister's son. Major Weyland was very popular both in Norfolk and in Oxfordshire, and as a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant of both counties he was universally respected.

Captain Becher, the well-known sportsman, the father of steeplechase riders, and whose deeds in the saddle, some 30 years back, have immortalised him in the annals of that sport, died on the 11th inst. He was born in Norfolk, and was the son of a farmer in that county, who was very conspicuous as a horseman, and the last of the leather breeches school. Captain Becher commenced his career on a pony, and was remarkable both for the boldness of his riding and for the judgment he displayed in the hunting field. Being popular with the noblemen and gentlemen in his neighbourhood, he received the appointment of captain in a yeomanry regiment, which gave him a status among his contemporaries of much benefit throughout his career. He first became known as a steeplechase rider in 1830 at St. Albans, and continued the most successful rider of his day till 1838, when he retired, his frame requiring rest from the many severe accidents he encountered during his career, and which caused him to walk lame. In appearance Captain Becher was strong as a Hercules, and he could endure any amount of labour and fatigue. In knowledge of pace he was second to none, and in finding out the weak parts of a country he was very clever. Against his integrity nothing was ever alleged, but he failed to make hay while the sun shone, and retired into privacy upon a competency on his wife's side, which rendered the close of his checkered career calm and placid.

Mr. Morgan Thomas, Inspector General of Hospitals, died at 2, Queen's Terrace, Woolwich Common, on Saturday, in his 80th year. He entered the army as an assistant surgeon in 1804, and served in the campaign in Italy in 1805-6, including the occupation of Sicily, the descent on the coast of Calabria, the battle of Maida, and siege of Scylla Castle. He afterwards accompanied the expedition to Sweden, under Sir John Moore, and the subsequent expedition to Portugal and Spain up to the retreat to Corunna. In 1815 he was present at the capture of Guadaloupe. He became assistant inspector in 1836; deputy inspector general in 1841; and inspector general in 1850. He had received the silver war medal with two clasps for his services.

Mr. Thomas Young died on the 11th inst., at his residence in Eaton Square, at an advanced age. He was descended from highly respectable parents in a small country town in Scotland, and was for some time in the navy, but left that service, and afterwards accompanied the Duke of Devonshire as secretary in his embassy to the coronation of the Emperor Nicholas. He was subsequently for several years private secretary to Lord Melbourne, and by his tact and conciliatory manners rendered good services to his administration.

Pastor Theodore Fliedner, the founder of Protestant deaconess institutions, died at Kaiserswerth on the 4th inst. Englishmen have a peculiar interest in Kaiserswerth, not only as being the scene of Miss Nightingale's training for the Crimea, but also that, in some sort, the whole idea may be said to be of English origin. Early in 1823 Pastor Fliedner visited this country, when he became acquainted with Mrs. Fry. The interest which her benevolent labours excited induced him, on his return to Prussia, to establish a society in aid of discharged prisoners. He began the experiment in a small summer-house in his garden at Kaiserswerth, and from this small beginning arose the present institution, consisting of schools, hospital, lunatic asylum, Magdalene house, &c., served by upwards of 350 deaconesses and probationers, who spend their time in ministering to the poor and sick. Besides the central institution there are upwards of 30 independent institutions in various parts of the world, as Berlin, Smyrna, Jerusalem, Pittsburg, Paris, &c., numbering in the aggregate upwards of 2000 deaconesses. These institutions form a union, and, though independent, are in close communication—a circumstance of some importance in the event of an European war, as many deaconesses would be found in the military hospitals nursing the wounded, as indeed was the case both in the Crimean and Danish wars. The last conference of the union was to have been held on the 4th inst., at Kaiserswerth, under the presidency of Pastor Fliedner, but he died on the very day the deputies should have assembled, in the 64th year of his age, and the 28th of the foundation of his institution. He may be said to be a remarkable instance of a man contending against difficulties and prejudice living to see his system fully acknowledged.

BRITISH WOOLS.—LONDON, Oct. 28.

A rather better feeling has manifested itself this week in consequence of a demand for the supply of current wants, in addition to the apprehension that monetary matters have seen their worst, and more business has been transacted.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Oct. 24.

The number of Beasts is considerably smaller than on Monday last, yet however it is large. Choice qualities are still scarce, and full prices are obtained for them. The supply of Sheep is also smaller, but fully equal to the demand. Trade is very dull, and it is only in a few instances that higher prices are realised. Calves are selling about the same as on Thursday. From Germany and Holland there are 4060 Beasts, 9280 Sheep, 335 Calves, and 110 Pigs; from Spain, 140 Beasts; from Ireland, 560; and 1840 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Oct. 27.

The number of Beasts is much smaller than last week, and consists principally of inferior quality. The few choice qualities on offer maintain Monday's quotations. The supply of Sheep is also small, but the demand is equally so. Best descriptions met with customers at fully late prices, but it is difficult to find purchasers for middling qualities. Calves are selling about the same as on Monday. Our foreign supply consists of 980 Beasts, 1830 Sheep, 399 Calves, and 100 Pigs.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Oct. 24.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and taken slowly at the prices of this day se'nnight; the attendance was limited, and the inquiry for foreign Wheat was quite of a retail character at about the same terms as last week. Barley, Beans, and Peas brought last week's quotations. The Oat trade was steady, and in some instances a trifling advance was obtained. For Flour there was but little demand.

FRIDAY, Oct. 28.

The weather from the 21st inst. to the afternoon of the 23d was very boisterous, with heavy storms of rain and south-westerly gales; from the 23d until the evening of the 26th it was finer, but dull with the exception of the 24th, which was very bright and warm; during the night of the 26th it rained easily, and some showers fell yesterday; this day is fine.

The trade during the week has continued to be very inactive for grain of all descriptions, and where any change has occurred in prices, either of Wheat or Spring Corn, it has generally been against the sellers. Notwithstanding the small supplies of English Wheat to this market, it has required a demand for Yorkshire to take them off at late rates The finest malting Barley continues to be sought after at full prices, and although the late values of Spring Corn have been realised with the exception of Maize, which is about 6d. to 1s. per qr. lower, the tendency of prices generally throughout the kingdom has been downwards. Flour has been less inquired after. Since Friday last 50 vessels have been reported off the coast. A fair business has been done in Wheat, which has improved 6d. per qr. in value. Maize found a fair sale at late rates. No change can be reported for other descriptions of grain. Paris, Oct. 27.—The Flour trade has remained very limited at unaltered rates. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 31,000 cwt. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 30s. 9d. per 280 lb. The finest qualities of Wheat are taken at late prices; in other descriptions, however, scarcely any business has been done, buyers pressing for a decline of 9d. per 480 lbs. The arrivals of Irish Oats this week have been good, but of all other grain and Flour small. To-day's market was thinly attended. The English Wheat fresh up was held for Monday's prices, and business in foreign was quite of a retail character at that day's quotations. The value of Barley, Beans, and Peas is unaltered. Oats support previous rates.

LIVERPOOL: Oct. 25.—Much more confidence has been exhibited in our market to-day, and, compared with the lowest point of Friday last, we quote a recovery of 1d. to 2d. per cental on Wheat, with a fair amount of business passing. Flour is more saleable, but cannot be called dearer. Indian Corn finds more buyers, and with less quantity offering we report it fully 3d. per qr. in sellers' favour. Oats and Oatmeal very dull. Beans, Peas, and Barley fair sale at late rates. Market closes with a good tone.

FRIDAY, Oct. 28.—There was an average attendance at market. Wheat very firm at Tuesday's rates Flour rather a better inquiry. Indian Corn steady; mixed, 27s 6d.; Galatz, 26s. 6d. Beans, unchanged; Oats and Oatmeal, moderate sale at late rates.

PATENT GUTTA PERCHA SOLES.—IMPORTANT TO GARDENERS.—The Gutta Percha Company have the pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of the following letter from G. GLENNY, Esq., the celebrated Florist:—

"Gentlemen,—I have worn Gutta Percha Soles and Heels these two years, and being so much in a garden as I necessarily am in all weathers, and with the ground in all states, I would on no account be without them. As a matter of economy I would recommend Gardeners to use them, for they may repair the worn part at all times by warming the material at the fire, and pressing it from the thick parts to the worn parts, as easily as if it were so much dough. I think it the duty of all persons who must occasionally wet their feet to adopt a material that completely defies damp. Many a gardener would escape colds and rheumatism by the use of Gutta Percha Soles.—I am, obedient servant, "G. GLENNY."

Every variety of Gutta Percha articles, such as Mill Bands, Tubing, Soles, Sheet, Pump Buckets, Fire Buckets, Basses, Union Joints, Flasks, Bottles, Bowls, Chamber Vessels, Toilet Trays, Sponge Bags, Curtain Rings, Galvanic Batteries, Calbotype trays, &c., manufactured by the Gutta Percha Company, and sold by their wholesale dealers in town or country.

News of the Week.

THE Emperor NAPOLEON returned to St. Cloud on Monday evening from his visit to the EMPEROR of RUSSIA at Nice. In passing through Marseilles on his return, the EMPEROR had an interview with the KING of the BELGIANS. The EMPEROR of RUSSIA left Nice soon after the departure of the Emperor NAPOLEON, and proceeded to Potsdam on a visit to the KING of PRUSSIA. The report which was current on Monday that the interview of the two EMPERORS would result in a joint invitation to the other Sovereigns of Europe to assemble in a Congress, is now said to be without foundation.

The treaty of peace between Denmark and Austria and Prussia was signed in Vienna on Sunday afternoon. It consists of 24 articles, but the chief stipulations are as follows:—The KING OF DENMARK cedes in favour of the KING OF PRUSSIA and the EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA all his rights over the Duchies of Lauenberg, Holstein, and Schleswig, the Jutland territory of Mogelhonden, and the Islands of Amrom, Föhr, Sylt, and Römsee. As an equivalent for the Jutland territory and the four islands, Denmark is allowed to retain a narrow strip of territory in Northern Schleswig, and the peninsula of Stenderup. The new frontiers are to be settled by a mixed commission of Prussian, Austrian, and Danish plenipotentiaries. The Duchies are to pay 29 millions of rix-thalers as their share of the Danish debt; and Denmark is to restore all the merchantmen she has captured during the war, and to indemnify the owners of those that have been sold. The treaty is to be ratified within three weeks, and Jutland to be evacuated within the three weeks following the ratification. The only question now remaining for settlement is the disposal of the Duchies. The Danish Rigsraad is summoned to meet to-day for the ratification of the treaty.

The Italian Chamber of Deputies reassembled on Thursday, when the Committee presented their report on the Bill for the transfer of the capital to Florence, and recommended the adoption of the Bill in the form submitted by the Government. After a short discussion the debate on the Convention was adjourned, and Monday next was fixed for the discussion of the Bill for the transfer of the capital.

A telegram from Suez announces that the Allies after three days fighting have destroyed the forts of Prince NAGATO, and forced the Straits of Simonosaki. The loss of life was small, and no officers were killed. The Japanese, who fought hard, have sued for peace, and the Straits are open. On the 5th ult. Calcutta was visited by a terrific hurricane, which inflicted great damage to the shipping in the river, and to property on shore. One of the telegrams states that a great part of the city and many of the villages bordering on the river were inundated, and 12,000 persons drowned.

From the United States we learn that General GRANT, since his return to the army, has made an attempt against the Confederate works near the Darby Town Road, and that his troops, amounting to two divisions, were repulsed with considerable loss. At daylight on the 19th ult. General LONGSTREET surprised and attacked the army of General SHERIDAN at Cedar Creek, and drove it back in total confusion, four miles to Middletown. In the afternoon, General SHERIDAN, who was absent at Winchester, returned, re-organised his army, confronted the Confederates with his whole line, and succeeded in driving them back beyond the lost ground, and re-capturing Woodstock. Darkness at length put a stop to the contest. There was great loss on both sides, that of the Federals is estimated at 5000 men. General PRICE, in Missouri, has captured Glasgow, and is receiving a vast number of recruits to his army, which is now assuming formidable proportions. The Southern journals state that General SHERMAN's position is such that the evacuation of Atlanta may daily be expected. President LINCOLN has made a speech disclaiming any purpose of interfering with the operation of the constitutional law, whatever may be the result of the forthcoming Presidential election. The Pennsylvania election is not yet decided, the soldiers' vote, as had been anticipated, showing a large Republican majority. In Maryland there was a majority of 1500 against the adoption of an anti-slavery constitution, but this result was neutralised by the soldiers' vote, and an anti-slavery constitution adopted. Judge HOLT has reported to the Secretary at War that an extensive conspiracy against the Union exists, with a design to form a North-Western Confederacy.

Accounts from the Brazils announce that the Confederate cruiser Florida has been captured by the Federal steamer Wachusetts while lying under the guns of the Brazilian forts in the harbour of Bahia.

PRINCE ALFRED on Friday morning went to Dover, and presented new colours to the 13th Light Infantry, and in the evening embarked for Ostend on his way to Bonn.

THE PRINCESS LOUISA, whose indisposition detained the Court at Balmoral somewhat longer than had been originally intended, broke her journey at Carlisle on Friday night, when the Queen travelled to Windsor. Her Royal Highness stayed at the County Hotel, accompanied by Dr. Jenner, Lady Jocelyn, and the Hon. Colonel de Ros, and having passed a tranquil night, resumed her journey south on Saturday morning at 11 o'clock, arriving at Windsor in the evening shortly before 8.

CABINET COUNCIL.—Summonses have been issued for a Cabinet Council on the 15th inst., at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—At the Council held by the Queen at Windsor on Tuesday last, Parliament was further prorogued from Friday, the 11th of November, to Friday, the 13th of January. The election for the Carmarthen boroughs took place on Monday, when Mr. William Morris was elected in the Liberal interest without opposition. There is a vacancy in West Suffolk, caused by the death of the Marquis of Bristol, and the consequent elevation of Earl Jermyn to the House of Lords. Lord Augustus Hervey, brother of the retiring member, and Sir Edward C. Kerrison, of Brome Hall, are mentioned as probable candidates for the vacant seat.

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON has received direction to separate, and the ships have proceeded to their respective stations to refit and lay up for the winter season. The Edgar (flagship), Warrior, Hector have returned to Portsmouth, and the Prince, Defence, Prince Consort, Research, and Enterprise have returned to Plymouth, where the two will be prepared for service in the Mediterranean.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor left Paris on the 28th for Nice to visit the Emperor and Empress of Russia. His Majesty reached Nice on the following day in perfect health, and was loudly cheered by the people. In the evening his Majesty, accompanied by General Fleury, took a walk in the town, which was splendidly illuminated. At 10 o'clock on Friday morning the Emperor received the Council-General and the municipality, and was preparing to proceed to the Villa Pauline when the Emperor Alexander came in uniform, accompanied by the persons of his suite, to pay a visit to the Emperor of the French. The Emperor Alexander wished to make the first visit, in order to express his thanks for the kind reception given him in France. At half-past 10 the Emperor Napoleon visited in his turn the Emperor and Empress of Russia. He afterwards took a walk in the town, and was everywhere received with acclamations. At noon the two Sovereigns reviewed the troops of the garrison. The rain coming on prevented the proposed visit to Villafranca, where the Russian squadron and the French Imperial yacht L'Aigle were at anchor. The Emperor Napoleon dined with their Majesties of Russia, and in the evening there was a grand representation at the Italian Theatre. On Saturday morning the Emperor Napoleon left for Toulon, where he reviewed the experimental squadron, and witnessed a sham attack of the forts. His Majesty slept at Toulon at night. On Sunday morning the Emperor left for Marseilles, and, after visiting the principal buildings of the city, proceeded to Lyons, where he passed the night. On Monday morning his Majesty reviewed the garrison of that city, and then left for St. Cloud, where he arrived at 6 in the evening. A Cabinet Council was held on Wednesday at St. Cloud. It is stated that the Emperor will go to Compiègne on the 7th inst. The next series of visitors is expected to arrive there on the 15th. The Constitutionnel of Thursday publishes an article signed by M. Paulin Limayrac, pointing out the great enthusiasm with which the Emperor was received by the population on his journey through France to pay a visit of courtesy to the Emperor and Empress of Russia.

ALGERIA.—Several columns are to take the offensive about the 5th inst., to make simultaneous attacks upon the insurgents of the south from different sides, and thus to cut off their retreat. This plan is expected to produce decisive results. General Yusuf received the submission of the greater part of the civil tribes of Boghar on the 21st ult.

SPAIN.—General Espartero has written a letter declining the presidency of the Progressista Committee, but he approves the policy of abstaining from voting. It is said that as explanations have been refused by Peru, diplomatic relations between that country and Spain are entirely suspended. Admiral Pareja left Madrid on Wednesday for the Pacific. The Correspondencia states that he goes not to replace Admiral Pinzon, but with diplomatic powers to supersede Señor Salazar y Mazarredo. A Royal decree has been issued raising the pay of subalterns and soldiers of all arms 10 reals per month. The new Ministers have presented a long report to the Queen on the proper mode of educating the Infanta Prince of the Asturias. In this report they remind her Majesty of the grandeur and power of the Spanish Monarchy in the 16th century, the struggle it has since passed through, and the great wars waged with a view to the equilibrium of Europe; and predict that those wars, "how disastrous soever they may have been, are but the light prelude to those which may yet be dreaded and expected." They therefore recommend the appointment of seven officers from every branch of the land service, to give the future Sovereign an education suited to his rank, and fitting for putting himself at the head of his armies—because, they add, Spain was great so long as the Spanish armies were commanded by the King in person, and she must again become so. They then proceed to state that "religion is the soul of Monarchs;" that it "stifles evil tendencies and checks the passions;" and that "the religious education of Princes should be directed more philosophically and more profoundly, morally speaking, than that of private individuals, however high their social or official position." They conclude by saying that the careful and perfect education which her Majesty has hitherto given to her august son, and the exquisite tact which her Majesty has shown, naturally inspired her Ministers with the desire that her Majesty should reserve for herself the supreme direction of the Prince's education, which will be the "greatest and most precious guarantee of its perfection." In accordance with this report the Queen has issued a Royal decree directing that the professional education of the Prince is to be proceeded with in all its different branches according to the development of his abilities; that it [illegible] shall propose to her Majesty such professors as they shall consider suitable to conduct his education, and reserving to herself the chief personal superintendence of his education and instruction. Another Royal decree appoints the following staff of Professors exclusively for the military education of his Royal Highness: Major-General Antonio Sanchez Osorio, Director-General of Studies; Emilio Bernaldez, Colonel of Infantry; Fernandez de Filguera, Lieutenant-Colonel of Engineers; Martin Moreno, of Lucena, Lieutenant-Colonel of the Staff; Enrique Sola, of Valls, Lieutenant-Colonel of Infantry; José Sanchez, of Castella, Major of Artillery; and Cæsar Tournelle, of Belgium, Captain of Cavalry, to be preceptors.

DENMARK.—The Treaty of Peace was signed on the 30th ult. It contains 21 articles, and a few supplementary ones. The following is a summary of the details:—

Art. 1 simply reproduces the corresponding article of the Preliminaries, in which the King of Denmark cedes all rights to the Duchies of Schleswig, Holstein, and Lauenburg in favour of the King of Prussia and the Emperor of Austria. As equivalent for the Jutland territory of Mogelton-moor, the island of Amrom, the Jutland portions of the islands of Fehr, Sylt, Romsee, &c., which Denmark has ceded to the Duchies, a portion of Northern Schleswig has been restored to Denmark. The peninsula of Stenderup, opposite Fahnen, is included in Danish Schleswig. In granting this compensation for the Jutland enclaves, which was earnestly desired by Denmark, owing to the strategic position of the ceded territory, the German Powers have wished to show that the separation of Schleswig from the Danish monarchy was not the first step towards the dismemberment of Denmark. On the other hand, the treaty contains no stipulation guaranteeing to the Danish population living in German Schleswig the use of their national language. Art. 6 stipulates for the appointment of a mixed commission of Prussian, Austrian and Danish Plenipotentiaries to settle the details of the new boundary line upon the spot. Art. 7 contains arrangements respecting private landed property which will be bisected by the new frontier. The following articles are devoted to financial matters. The portion of the Danish debt which falls upon the Duchies amounts to 29 million rigsdalers. The manner in which this sum is to be repaid to Denmark by the Duchies is stipulated by the treaty. Denmark further binds herself to return the captured German ships, with their cargoes, wherever the same have not been already sold. In such cases Denmark undertakes to compensate the owners.

The Rigsraad has been convoked by Royal letters patent for the 5th of November for the ratification of the Treaty, but the Prussian troops will not evacuate Jutland until the expiration of 21 days after the ratification, during which period Prussia will continue to retain all her former power in the province. The Dagbladet of Sunday says:—

"The Minister of the Interior has informed the representatives from Jutland to the Rigsdag that the complaints made by the Danish Government to the neutral Powers concerning the violation of the preliminaries of peace by Prussia have always been fruitless."

JUTLAND.—A proclamation of General Falkenstein, dated the 2d inst., has been published. It concludes thus:—

"An alleviation has taken place only on the supposition that the conclusion of peace will be ratified in Copenhagen within the fixed period. Should, however, contrary to expectation, the ratification be delayed, all ordinances will immediately be again put in force with greater severity."

FRANKFORT.—In the sitting of the Federal Diet on Thursday, the memorial of the Grand Duke of Oldenburg, substantiating his claims to the Duchies, was referred to the Committee for the affairs of Holstein. The Duke of Augustenburg has supplemented his memorial with a further document, explanatory of certain points in the former one, which was presented to the Diet on Thursday.

PRUSSIA.—The Czar, accompanied by the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, arrived at Potsdam on Wednesday afternoon, and dined with the King at Sans-Souci. They attended the ballet at Berlin in the evening. The Czar had accepted an invitation to join a hunting party at Letzlingen yesterday and to-day. Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia will not be present at this party. The Emperor of Russia will leave this evening. Prior to his reception by the King for his farewell audience, his Majesty conferred upon the French Ambassador, Prince Talleyrand, the Order of the Black Eagle. The Prussian Ambassador at Paris, Count Goltz, has been decorated with the First Class Order of the Red Eagle. Count von Bismark arrived at Berlin on Saturday evening, and proceeded direct from the railway station to the residence of the Minister of War. A conference of Ministers took place on Sunday, after which Count von Bismark had an interview with Prince Gortschakoff. The Minister was then received by the King, and, with Prince Gortschakoff, dined with His Majesty in the evening. It is stated that Prince Gortschakoff, during his short stay in Berlin, held several consultations in reference to the pending political questions, the successful solution of which must interest both Russia and Prussia. A Paris letter in the Oesterreichische Zeitung of Sunday states that Count von Bismark only obtained at Paris the consent to the annexation of the Duchy of Lauenburg on condition of its being effected after coming to an understanding with Austria, and under the title of compensation for the expenses of the war. Count von Bismark, however, expressly declared that Prussia had no intention of annexing the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein. The semi-official Nord-Deutsche Zeitung of Thursday says:—

"Prussia, Austria, and Holstein can scarcely be expected after the final conclusion of peace to pay for the maintenance of the troops of the other German States who may chance to occupy territory ceded to the great German Powers. In what manner Hanover and Saxony will settle the matter with the other minor States is not for us to discuss. It is asserted that Herr von Ahlefeld will bring forward some acceptable proposals for the annexation of the Duchies to Prussia."

AUSTRIA.—The Treaty of Peace was signed at Vienna on Sunday at 2 P.M. The ratification is to take place in three weeks, and the evacuation of Jutland will follow within three weeks from the time of the ratification. The official journals of Wednesday declare that since the resignation of Count Rechberg the ministerial crisis has come to an end, and that every statement of further changes in the Cabinet imminent is an invention. They also assert that the resignation of Count Rechberg has no connection with questions concerning the relations existing between Austria and Prussia. They say:—

"Count Mensdorff is convinced that to further the common interest of Germany a really intimate relation of the two Powers is necessary, in which view the Emperor of Austria fully coincides. The Austrian Government has, therefore, hastened to assure the Cabinet of Prussia that the change of Ministers in no way affects the relations of the two Powers. Prussia and Austria having to occupy the provinces ceded to them, will shortly enter into negotiations with the Federal Diet for the withdrawal of the Federal troops now quartered in the Duchies."

The following is said to be a correct analysis of a despatch addressed by the Cabinet of Vienna to that of the Tuileries on the 12th inst., in reference to the Convention of the 15th Sept. last:—

"Although the Austrian Cabinet feels great regret that the Roman Government was not consulted prior to the conclusion of the convention, it has yet received with satisfaction the assurance that France has had the preservation of the Papal authority exclusively in view. It is in the fact of the signature of the convention by France that Austria sees a guarantee for this authority. Owing to the manner in which the Government of King Victor Emmanuel has hitherto trodden under foot the most solemn treaties, the Cabinet of Vienna would not have considered this guarantee to exist simply from the fact of those obligations being contracted by the Italian Government; but France is sufficiently powerful to protect the Roman territory efficaciously, even when the last French soldier shall have left. In other respects full liberty of decision will naturally remain with the pope as well as with every Power placed outside the convention. Equally as the Pope has the incontestable right of invoking the protection of the Catholic Powers in case he should find himself threatened, the Catholic Powers upon their part would also in that case claim the absolute right of granting this protection to his Holiness as they might think fit and suitable in a political point of view. Under such circumstances Europe may assuredly hope that Austria and France would act together."

ITALY.—The Chamber of Deputies reassembled on Thursday, when the Franco-Italian Convention came on for discussion. Signor Boggio thought the diplomatic documents communicated to the Chamber were insufficient. He demanded that the Notes exchanged between Italy and other Powers since the first despatch of Chevalier Visconti should likewise be brought before the House. General Della Marmora, in reply, said that the Government had already considered that question, and did not think it necessary to communicate other documents than those already submitted. Signor Petrucelli asked the Government whether the statements made in the note of Chevalier Nigra really represented the true state of affairs. In reply, Signor Lanza stated that it was not becoming to throw doubt upon a solemn diplomatic act from simple assertions of newspapers. The note of Chevalier Nigra was true, and substantiated in every particular. It was also recognised as such by the two contracting parties. Signor Monca brought up the report of the committee upon the transfer of the capital to Florence. Signor Ferrari proposed that the Chamber should first discuss whether it was necessary to bring in the Bill for the approval of the Convention. After a short discussion the debate upon this previous question was adjourned, and Monday next fixed for the discussion of the Bill for the transfer of the capital. The report of the committee upon that Bill, in conclusion, recommended its adoption conformably to the draught submitted by the Government. The Minister of Public Works has left Turin for the purpose of being present at the inauguration of the new railway from Pracchia to Pistoja. He will then proceed to Florence to take the necessary steps for the early transfer of the capital to that city. It is asserted that the Minister of Public Works has entered into negotiations with the British Government for the purpose of establishing a new Indian postal service, by means of special trains on the Susa and Brindisi lines, as soon as the Brindisi lines shall have been finished. The Prefect of Turin has annulled the resolution of the Turin municipality whereby the conclusion of the inquiry into the September events was approved. Several journals have been seized for publishing a proclamation of a committee requesting assistance for Venetia. It is announced that the King, convinced of the necessity for the introduction of great economies in the public administration, and desirous of co operating in the difficult task of the Ministry, has renounced three millions and a half of the Civil List in favour of the State. A telegram from Rome states that all the documents relating to political trials preserved in the archives of the Tribunal of the Sacred College have been burnt by order of Monsignore Sagretti. Cardinal Antonelli has resolved upon not disbanding the Pontifical army, but intends transforming the troops of the line into gendarmes. The Roman Government and the French authorities have complied with the request of the Italian Government for the extradition of the brigand Carnevale.

RUSSIA.—The Invalide Russe of Wednesday, in reply to an article of La France referring to the interview of the Emperors of France and Russia, says:—

"Russia, preferring liberty of action, has likewise no desire for an alliance. The visit to Nice was simply an act of courtesy, and was devoid of any political bearing. The advice of La France to avoid approximation between the two countries was superfluous, as no attempt with that object is likely to originate with Russia."

GREECE.—Advices from Athens state that since the King's Message the National Assembly has discussed the Constitution with calm serenity, and that addresses have been received from all the Greek provinces, enthusiastically approving the Message. The Assembly terminated its discussion on the 28th, and the draught was read over and adopted on the following day. The Constitution was definitively passed by the Assembly on the 31st, and the King will speedily give his assent to it. The country is tranquil.

INDIA.—A terrific cyclone broke over Calcutta on the 5th October, causing enormous destruction of property. 110 ships were wrecked. The Nemesis lost her topmast and bowsprit, and was driven on shore, but was expected to be got off in time to leave with the next mails. The Bengal also got on shore, but was supposed to be uninjured, and it was uncertain when she could be got off. The Nubia was dismasted. The Sydney, Punjab, Madras, and Moulmein steamers belonging to the British India Steam Company, were driven ashore, and only two of them had been got off much injured. The Persia steamer, belonging to the same company, was lost in the same gale off the Sandheads, and only two of the crew saved. The total loss is estimated at 200,000,000 francs. A great portion of the city was inundated, and the villages bordering on the river were under water. One of the telegrams says that 12,000 persons lost their lives.

JAPAN.—The Admiralty have received a telegram stating that the Straits of Simono Saki are open, the passage having been forced by 16 vessels of war after three days' fighting. All the batteries have been destroyed, and sixty 24 and 36-pounder bronze guns have been embarked. The loss of life has been small, considering the result, and no officers have been killed. The Japanese have asked for peace.

WEST INDIES.—Considerable sickness prevailed at Trinidad, principally fever. Small-pox continued its ravages at Jamaica, and was rapidly extending over the island.

CANADA.—Quebec despatches state that the Conference had decided on confederation, which will be submitted to the existing Parliament without direct reference to the public.

UNITED STATES.—General Grant, after visiting Washington, has returned to Petersburg. Secretaries Stanton, Seward, and Fessenden have since gone to General Grant's head-quarters to urge upon him the political necessity of his achieving some decisive military success previous to the Presidential election, and to authorise him to concentrate troops from any and every quarter in furtherance of that object. Two divisions of Grant's army made a reconnaissance on the 13th to Darbey Town Road, where they found a new formidable line of Confederate works. They assaulted them, but having been repulsed they withdrew, pursued by the Confederates. The Federal loss was 400 men. General Lee reports that the assault was easily repulsed, with a slight Confederate loss. It is rumoured that General Grant has removed Generals Warren and Meade for protesting against his orders to assault the Confederate works in their front, which are of great strength. On the morning of the 19th ult., in a dense fog before daylight, Generals Longstreet and Early attacked and surprised General Sheridan's army, which was posted on the north bank of Cedar Creek, near Strasburg (which, during the absence of General Sheridan at Washington, was under the command of General Wright), and drove it in confusion, with the loss of many prisoners, 24 cannon, and much other materiel, to Middletown, four miles distant. A pause in the conflict occurred, apparently on the part of the Confederates, to prepare for a final charge, during which General Sheridan arrived on the field. He immediately resumed the command, reorganised his forces, repulsed the Confederate assault, countercharged with nearly his whole line, and after an obstinate contest forced back the Confederates beyond the lost ground and recaptured Strasburg. Darkness terminated the battle, and during the night the Confederates retired towards Woodstock. No official report of the killed and wounded upon either side has yet been published. Newspaper correspondents state the Federal loss at 5000. Sheridan claims to have captured 1600 prisoners and 50 guns. The Federal General Bidewell was among the killed, and Generals Wright, Grover, and Ricketts were wounded. The Confederate General Ramseur was wounded and captured, and has since died. Despatches from Georgia report that General Hood recaptured Resaca on the 12th and Dalton on the 14th, taking prisoners the entire Federal garrisons at both places and destroying large sections of the railway. On the 16th he occupied Lafayette, from which place, according to a report from General Schofield, at Chattanooga, he retired southward on the 17th. Southern despatches indicate that the object of this movement is to change his base of operations to North Alabama, where Hood will be joined by Beauregard, for the prosecution of the campaign against Huntsville, Alabama. The Southern journals continue to represent Sherman's position to be such that the evacuation of Atlanta may daily be expected. Forrest has invaded Western Kentucky. The Confederate General Price in Missouri, after occupying Sedalia, Danville, and Lexington, has captured Glasgow, and is recruiting his army, which is now assuming formidable proportions. General Curtis has engaged Price's advance, and General Rosecrans was marching against him. A Federal force has also been concentrated at Kansas city to attack him. Twenty-five armed gueri'las arrived at St. Alban's, Vermont, robbed the bank, killed two citizens, and afterwards left in the direction of Canada. They have since been captured, and the money recovered. The Canadian authorities assisted in arresting them. The steamer Roanoke has been captured by the Confederate Lieutenant Brain, who took her to Bermuda, where he landed the passengers, and burned the Roanoake off the harbour. Afterwards Lieutenant Brain returned to Bermuda with his crew in boats, when he was arrested by the British authorities. In Pennsylvania, where there was a large Democratic majority on the home vote, the soldiers' vote showed a large majority for the Republicans; the result therefore is not yet decided. In Maryland the elections showed a majority of 1500 against the adoption of an anti-slavery constitution. This was defeated by 3000 soldiers' votes, and an anti-slavery constitution was adopted. The Governor of Maryland, however, decided to throw out the soldiers' votes as unconstitutional. The New York World publishes a statement showing that the public debt, including the appropriations to be made by the next Congress, amounts to 4,000,000,000 dols. The steamer Constance has been sunk off Charleston. The Democratic Presidential electors of Tennessee recently waited upon Mr. Lincoln and petitioned the modification of Governor Johnston's test oath and the guarantee of non-interference by the military in the November elections. They were summarily dismissed with the assurance that Mr. Lincoln "intended to manage his side of the Presidential contest in his own way, and that he expected the friends of George B. M'Clellan to manage their side in their way." President Lincoln has since made a speech, stating that some persons have construed some remarks of Mr. Seward into a threat that if he was defeated in the Presidential election he would do what he could to ruin the Government; while others interpreted the fact of the Chicago Convention not adjourning sine die as an intimation that if their nominee were selected he would at once seize the control of the Government. The people he said need not be uneasy on the latter point, since their will, constitutionally expressed, must be law for all. Several dry-goods and other merchants in Washington and Baltimore have been arrested and imprisoned in Washington, by order of Mr. Stanton. The charge against them is believed to be contraband trading. Judge Holt has issued a report to the Secretary of War asserting that an extensive conspiracy against the Union exists, and for the formation of a North-Western Confederacy throughout the West. The Tribune publishes a letter from Mr. John Bright, M.P., to Mr. Horace Greeley, recommending the re-election of Mr. Lincoln and the prosecution of the war. The Richmond Enquirer recommends a conscription, and also, that all negroes arming should be made free. The paper thinks the people will call upon the next Congress to provide for it by law. The Confederate Government of Louisiana also recommends arming the slaves.

BRAZILS.—The Confederate steam-ship Florida was captured on October 7 by the Federal steamer Wachusetts, in the harbour of Bahia. At the time of her capture the Florida was lying under the guns of the Brazilian forts and of the Brazilian fleet, and Captain Morris, her commander, was on shore. Captain Morris is now on board the West Indian packet on his way to London. Great excitement has been caused in Bahia by this alleged breach of faith on the part of the American Consul, Mr. Wilson. The Brazilian Ministry has been completed by the appointment of Senhor Dias Vieira as Minister for Foreign Affairs.

THE PACIFIC.—In the northern provinces of Chili large deposits of guano had been discovered, which will yield 25 per cent. of ammonia. Ex-President Moutt has proceeded to Peru as Plenipotentiary from Chili, to take his place in the proposed South American Federal Congress, and to represent Chili in aiding Peru, if necessary, to repel the Spaniards from her territory. The Spanish squadron lies peaceably at the Chincha Islands receiving abundant supplies. The only inhabitants left on the islands are Chinese labourers. Provisions are at war prices. The Peruvians are still actively engaged constructing their navy, and their monitors are being completed with vigour. The Government has decreed that no charters for the exportation of guano are to be entered into after the 1st of October till further notice, in order that the large stocks in Europe may be wrought off.

THE BOARD OF TRADE.—The report of the Committee appointed to inquire into the arrangement between the Foreign Office and the Board of Trade in reference to trade with foreign nations has been issued. The present arrangement between the two offices contemplates that the Foreign Secretary should refer all matters connected with trade that come before him to the Board of Trade—for instance, they relate to questions on which he has to advise publication if they relate to information which it desirable that the Government should make public. With the exception of some correspondence with consuls under the Mercantile Marine Act, there is, as a rule, no direct communication between the Board of Trade and the members of the diplomatic or consular services. With regard to the representations of the commercial community to Government on foreign trade, there appears to be no rule or practice defining to which department they should be made; but if they are made to the Board of Trade they are forwarded thence to the Foreign Office, and if to the Foreign Office the opinion of the Board of Trade is generally taken respecting them. In the Board of Trade there are officers whose peculiar duty it is to attend to foreign commerce, but in the Foreign Office there are no such officers, that department apportioning almost all its business among clerks geographically. These arrangements have given rise to much dissatisfaction, the committee have carefully considered the suggestions made to them, which have tended in two distinct or rather opposite directions—on the one hand, that the Foreign Office should be self-sufficing for commercial as well as for other matters, and should no longer refer them to the Board of Trade; and, on the other hand, that the present relations between the two offices should continue, but should be improved. In relation to the former they think there is much force in the arguments that would not serve the interests of our foreign commerce to leave them without the support and protection of a special department in the Government. Upon the latter position, then, that the Foreign Office continue to consult the Board of Trade, the committee had brought before them two suggestions:—1, that there should be attached to the Foreign Office itself an officer or officers who should take special charge of the correspondence of the Board of Trade; and 2, that the Board of Trade be put in direct communication with the members of the diplomatic and consular services, and that such communication be carried on through the Foreign Office, with such provisions as shall prevent collision between the two offices. The committee adopt both suggestions, and recommend that the Board of Trade be placed more nearly upon an equality with the Foreign Office than it is at present, in order that its opinion, when asked, may have more weight, and that its chief be always a member of the Cabinet. They think that if the Board of Trade were enabled to carry on communication through the Foreign Office, that Department would be more quickly informed of such facts as it is its duty to publish, would be able more speedily to serve the interests of individual merchants, and in transactions in which its opinion is asked by the Foreign Office to obtain that full information without which its opinion is of little value. In the course of their report the committee state it to be their opinion that, in order to secure harmonious action of the Government upon commercial matters, if the Board of Trade be consulted by one office, it should be by the other—as, for instance, by the India and Colonial Office as much as by the Foreign Office, in relation to the duties levied upon British goods.

METROPOLITAN HOUSELESS POOR.—The new directions have been sent by the Poor-law Board to the Guardians of the Metropolitan Unions and parishes with regard to the Act providing for the Metropolitan Houseless Poor, passed at the close of the last session. The Act has been received with great favour by the union and parochial authorities; but they applied to the Poor-law Board to issue a circular explaining the provisions of the Act:—

"Poor-law Board, Whitehall, S.W. (&c.

"Sir,—On the 4th of August last the Poor-law Board addressed to the guardians of the several unions and parishes within the metropolis a circular letter, directing attention to the provisions of the Metropolitan Houseless Poor Act then passed during the last session, and requesting to be informed of the nature and extent of the arrangements which the guardians proposed to make with the view of securing the objects of the Legislature in passing that measure. The Board have recently received several communications requesting information on various points connected with the Act, &c.

it appears desirable, therefore, that they should state, for the guidance of the guardians generally, their views upon the [illegible] matters which have been brought under their notice. In the first place, it is important to observe that the poor persons included within the operation of the Act are destitute wayfarers, wanderers, and foundlings, being the class of paupers provided for by the 11th and 12th Victoria, cap. 110, sec. 4, and thereby rendered chargeable upon the common fund of unions. As the present statute only refers to paupers relieved during the night, the Board think that there will not be much difficulty in deciding what cases come within the provisions. The objects to be relieved will be houseless persons, but the Board think it right to observe that they were advised by counsel on a question arising under the former statute, that no person could be considered as a destitute wayfarer or wanderer within its meaning if he applied for relief in a parish where he was legally settled. The Act does not extend to the resident poor, who ought always to be received into the workhouse in the usual manner, and should never, except under some peculiar circumstances, be admitted into the ordinary vagrant wards. In the next place, it is proper to remark that the relief for which the guardians will be entitled to be reimbursed is such only as shall have been administered between the hours of 8 o'clock at night and 8 o'clock in the morning. But it is a condition before obtaining reimbursement under the Act that the Poor law Board shall have certified that proper wards or other places for the reception of the classes in question have been provided by the guardians. Without undertaking to prescribe with full detail what provisions should be made, the Board desire to offer the following observations on the subject:—With regard to the nature of the accommodation, they consider it necessary that there should be at least two separate wards, one for males and another for females and young children. There should be a yard containing a bath room and water closet attached to each department, and in the yard of the male department a shed should be provided for the vagrants to work in. The most convenient form for a vagrant ward is, perhaps, a parallelogram, and each ward, besides being of sufficient capacity with respect to width and height to accommodate the number of persons required to sleep in it, should be fitted up with a sleeping platform or barrack bed, of adequate depth along each side of it, with a convenient gangway down the middle. The platform should be divided by means of boards, and the space allotted to each person should be at least 2 ft. 3 in. wide. Above the head of each platform there may be a shelf the whole length of the room, and divided into corresponding spaces for the deposit of clothes. The ventilation should be effected by means of openings at proper intervals, and placed as near the ceiling as practicable on each side of the room. Means should be provided for heating the wards in severe weather, either by hot-water pipes, gas, or other stoves. Hot-water pipes will be found preferable to open fire places or stoves. The bedding, which should be sufficient for warmth, may consist of clean straw or cocoa fibre, in a loose tick, with a rug, or rugs, for each person, but for the women and children some additional covering should be provided. Where the admissions are likely to be numerous, the wards for each sex should be placed under a superintendent, a male for the men and a female for the women, and the Board consider that a reasonable allowance for the necessary remuneration of such superintendents would properly fall within the terms of section 4 of the Act. Without more precise information than they now possess, the Board are unable to lay down any exact rule as to the extent of accommodation which should be provided in each union or parish, but they may state generally that the wards should be large enough to receive such a number as, having regard to the peculiar circumstances of the locality, and the maximum number of applications on ordinary occasions, would be likely to require relief. Any excess over the ordinary number of applicants occasioned by unforeseen circumstances should arise, so that the accommodation provided by the guardians should be inadequate, and the guardians should have to provide temporary accommodation for such cases by making arrangements for their reception in lodging houses, the Board would not sanction any such lodging-house as within the provisions of the Act, unless it were registered, and thus brought under the inspection of the police. The food supplied to the inmates of the vagrant wards should be sufficient for their actual necessities, but not such as, either in quantity or quality, would tend to increase the number of applicants, or encourage imposture. The Board consider it expedient that a task of work should be required from each able-bodied person relieved, in return for his food and lodging, in conformity with the 5th and 6th Victoria, cap. 57, sec. 6, and where the guardians have not prescribed a task of work, the Board recommend that they should at once do so, and forward their resolution to the Board for approval. The Board are enabled to state as the result of their experience that in those unions where a task of work has been systematically enacted, in pursuance of that statute, vagrancy has sensibly diminished. In many unions, however, a practice has crept in of dispensing with the task of work when the vagrant prefers to leave the workhouse without receiving an allowance of food in the morning. The Board consider this practice very objectionable, and calculated, as the result shows, to encourage vagrancy. A task of work suited to the age, strength, and capacity of the pauper should always be exacted, whether food be required in the morning or not, and a notice should be hung up in some conspicuous place near the entrance to the wards, that any person refusing to perform such task will be liable to be imprisoned under the Act lastly referred to, and kept to hard labour for one calendar month as an idle and disorderly person. The Board likewise consider it very advisable that the persons of vagrants should be cleansed on admission, according to the regulations of the workhouse. Care must, of course, be taken that no person who appears to be in such a state of health as to be likely to suffer from being placed in a bath should be subjected to that treatment. The Board think it expedient that a separate admission and discharge book should be kept by the master of the workhouse, or under his supervision, for this class of paupers, in which book the following particulars should be recorded—viz., the date and hour of admission and discharge; the name, presumed age, and occupation of each pauper; where the pauper slept on the preceding night, and where he or she is going to, and the quantity and cost of the food or other relief supplied to each person within the hours prescribed by the Act. At the same time it must be recollected that no relief in money given to any such person can be reimbursed under any circumstances. The Board having thus stated generally their views with reference to the provision which should be made for the relief of the classes in question, trust that the guardians will experience no difficulty in speedily making such arrangements for that purpose as will enable the Board to certify that proper wards or places of reception under suitable regulations have been provided in conformity with the intention of the legislature.—I am, your obedient servant,

"C. Gilpin, Secretary."

The Visit of M. Berryer.—The Benchers of the Middle Temple Have granted the use of their splendid old Hall, in which they lately entertained the Prince of Wales, for the dinner to be given by the English Bar to M. Berryer on Tuesday next.

General Todleben visited Woolwich Dockyard on Monday morning, and was received by Commodore Superintendent Dunlop, C.B. He then embarked in the Admiralty steam-vessel Vivid, and proceeded down the river to Long Reach to see the works now in progress for the southern sewage outfall, and the scene of the recent gunpowder explosion at Erith. On Tuesday he visited Chatham, accompanied by General Sir John Burgoyne, Inspector-General of Royal Engineers; Captain the Hon. G. Wrottesley, General Sir J. M. F. Smith, M.P.; Mr. Reed, Chief Constructor of the Navy; and an Attaché from the Russian Embassy in London. He was received on his arrival at Chatham by Major-General Sir Robert Walpole, commanding the garrison, accompanied by Colonel Collinson, R.E., Captain Moorsom, and other staff-officers. At the dockyard he was received by Captain Stewart, the captain superintendent, who conducted him round the yard, where he examined the Lord Warden and the iron ship Bellerophon with marked attention. He then proceeded to the Royal Engineer establishment at Brompton, and after taking luncheon in the messroom, inspected the companies of Royal Engineers, the hall of study for the officers, the schools, the museum, and the depot field-works. He then returned to town by the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, expressing, before his departure, the pleasure which his visit to Chatham had afforded him. On Wednesday he left town for Portsmouth, on a visit to General Lord W. Paulet, the commander-in-chief of that garrison.

Experiments at Shoeburyness.—Some experiments were made a few days since at Shoeburyness to test the penetrating powers of Mr. Whitworth's 70-pounder gun. The object fired at was the old Warrior target at a distance of 400 yards. The shell fired was of an entirely new pattern, but it failed to penetrate further than to a depth flush with the armour-plate, where it lodged without doing further harm.

The Late Explosion at Erith.—The adjourned inquest on the sufferers by the Erith powder magazine explosion was resumed on Tuesday, but no fresh facts were elicited, the principal witnesses being persons employed about the magazine or in the factories, whose evidence related exclusively to the way in which powder was brought up in barges and taken into the magazines.

The Convict Müller.—On Monday morning the Sheriffs of London, accompanied by the Under-Sheriffs, the Ordinary of Newgate, and Governor, visited Müller in his cell, and announced to him that Monday, the 14th of November, had been fixed for his execution. The convict received the intimation with calmness. The Sheriffs exhorted him to make the best use of the interval which remained to him to live, and he appeared to understand the full force of the entreaty. During the interview he acknowledged that he had had a fair trial, but was understood to say, in effect, that the evidence in support of an alibi had done him more harm than good. He spoke in broken English and in a low tone, and his remarks on that subject left somewhat different impressions on the minds of the deputation. By some he was understood to refer to the prejudice which his case had suffered by having recourse to the evidence of two women of immoral character, and by others he was supposed to have questioned a line of defence which, though undertaken with the best intentions, tended, in the result, to weaken his case, as it previously stood on its merits, and was eventually used to strengthen that of the prosecution. He was told by one of the Sheriffs in effect that but for the alibi the case for the prosecution would have remained practically unanswered, and that his counsel were justified in resorting to it if they believed, as no doubt they did, there was anything in it, and in sifting it to the bottom. He appeared to adhere to his own opinion upon the point, and the conversation was not further continued. He has not yet made any confession. At a meeting of the German Legal Protection Society on Wednesday evening, it was resolved to present a memorial to Sir George Grey, praying for a reprieve on the ground that the evidence was not conclusive.

Mysterious Death in the Green Park.—On Friday an adjourned inquest was held at the Westminster Hospital respecting the death of George King, late gas inspector in the employ of the Chartered Gas Company. It appeared that he had been found lying in the Green Park some evenings before, and was carried to St. George's Hospital. He was there supposed to be drunk, and was handed over to the police cells. Having been bailed out thence he was taken home, and soon afterwards was removed to the Westminster Hospital, where it was found that his head was covered with blows and bruises, of which he soon afterwards died. Two men deposed that they saw deceased stagger and fall heavily in the park, and one of them assisted in sending him to the hospital. Others supposed that he had been stupefied by gas fumes which he inhaled in the course of his occupation. The surgeons of St. George's Hospital stated that none of the wounds on the man's head were observed when he was in that institution, and the surgeons of Westminster Hospital clearly proved that the injuries must have been inflicted by blows; but there was no possibility of tracing their infliction. The jury therefore returned a verdict that deceased died from a fractured skull, but how caused there was no evidence to show; and they unanimously expressed their opinion that the medical authorities ought to have detained him at St. George's Hospital, and not handed him over to the police.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week which ended Saturday, October 29, were 1409. The average number in the corresponding week of 10 years, 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1199. The present return is therefore 210 above the average. During the week the births of 1044 boys and 987 girls, in all 2031 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1926.

Provincial.

Carlisle.—On Saturday morning the Metropolitan Board of Works, including Mr. Thwaites, the chairman, Mr. Freeman, chairman of the Main Drainage Committee, and about 25 members of the Board, and accompanied by Mr. Bazalgette, their chief engineer, arrived in this town to inspect the works in operation for the utilization of the sewage of the city. They first proceeded to the Town Hall, where they were received by the Mayor and a small deputation of the Local Board of Health, and were joined by Mr. Lawson, M.P., Mr. Potter, M.P., and other gentlemen. They then proceeded to the Willow Holme, near the main outlet of the sewage of the city, where the works conducted by Mr. Alexander M'Dougall, chymist, Manchester, are in operation, and that gentleman explained to the Board the manner in which the sewage is applied to the land he has in hand, the area actually irrigated being about 60 acres. The Board were first taken to a small engine-house, near which is sunk a deep well, into which the sewage is run, and where it is disinfected. The process of disinfection is very simple. In two barrels, placed in a covered house, carbolic acid, which is insoluble in pure water, is dissolved in lime water, and then runs into a third barrel. This is the disinfecting liquid, and it runs slowly into the well below, in which the sewage is collected, and there it is mixed with it, and then pumped into canals which convey it on the land. A broad canal is run round the field, which can be stopped up at any point, and sewage diverted into movable iron channels, from which it is shed upon the land. Mr. M'Dougall stated that the principal part of the sewage of Carlisle is thus utilized. But the sewage of one district of the town enters the main outlet sewer lower down than his works, and that part is not made use of by him. By the erection of another engine this also could be made available for the land; but as the district in question is one in which there are few water closets, Mr. M'Dougall does not consider the sewage of sufficient value to warrant the expense of an additional engine. Speaking in rough numbers the population in the district of which the sewage is not utilized, but is run into the river, is about 7,000 or 8,000; while that of the whole of the other districts of the town (all the sewage of which is applied to the soil) is 22,000 or 23,000 people. Mr. M'Dougall stated that there had not been any complaints made of the slightest smell from his land or works, and the Metropolitan Board verified this by their own personal inspection and observation. As the Board walked over the land Mr. M'Dougall made some interesting statements as to the effects of the application of disinfected sewage to the land. He had found that, whereas in places where sewage has been applied in a putrefied state the finer grasses are destroyed and rank coarse grass takes its place, the application of disinfected sewage had not been attended with a like result. The fine grasses were still preserved. Fears had been expressed by practical farmers that although they might do to depasture milch cows upon, yet, when these meadows came to be used for sheep feeding, the animals would be ruined by the disease of "flukes in the liver." Experience had shown these fears to be groundless, the deodoriser acting as a preventive. Nor had any foot-rot been experienced. Indeed, the disinfector being an antiseptic, any sheep slightly affected with foot-rot were cured by being put upon the irrigated land. There is one portion of the land leased by Mr. M'Dougall which is not irrigated. The stock are free to roam over both portions of the holmes, and it was found that they much preferred the irrigated part; indeed, they had to be penned on that not irrigated if it was thought desirable to keep them there; and the Board, by contrasting the colour of the grass in the two parts of the land, saw how much more luxuriant was the grass on that which was irrigated. Mr. M'Dougall stated that he considered the produce on the irrigated meadows to be about four times as great as that on the land to which the liquid sewage is not applied; and in some parts, where the irrigations had been made more frequently, five times as great. According to the plan usually followed, the sewage is pumped on each section of the field for four hours at a time, and as it takes about four months to go over the whole area in this way, each section is irrigated three times a year. Mr. M'Dougall expressed his opinion that the best way to make the application and sewage profitable would be to cut the grass and carry it away for stall-fed oxen, the manure of which should be taken away to fertilise an arable farm where winter food could be grown. Having finished their inspection of the works, the Board returned to the city, and learnt from the butcher by whom the land is rented (Mr. Moffat Hetherington) that he considered the application of the sewage most beneficial. Experience had shown him that it was twice as valuable to him as land otherwise of equal value which had not been irrigated. The Board, who expressed themselves much pleased with what they had seen, left for Edinburgh in the evening, and purpose extending their tour to Glasgow.

CHATHAM.—The Government authorities intend to make alterations of an important character in the storing of gunpowder, so as to diminish the chances of disaster at the great magazines. Two old ships are preparing at this dockyard for use as floating magazines for storing powder discharged from ships of war ; and it is expected that one or two more of the ships now lying idle in the Medway will be made available for the same purpose.

COSELEY.—A meeting of colliers was held at Coseley on Saturday, at which it was agreed that, with some exceptions, the strike should terminate and the men return to their work. It was admitted that the men had endured great privations during the strike, which has lasted for 17 weeks. The examination of the 19 colliers charged with unlawfully assembling, intimidation, and conspiracy, was resumed on Friday morning at Bilston before the stipendiary magistrate of the district. After hearing counsel on both sides, the magistrate fully committed the prisoners for trial.

HUDDERSFIELD.—A young man, named Haigh, who has just completed his articles to a solicitor in this town, was on Saturday lodged in Chester police-station on a charge of forging cheques in his brother's name to the amount of 2000*l.* on the Huddersfield Bank. The forgery was discovered on Friday, and it was then ascertained that Haigh had absconded. Officers were despatched to Manchester, from whence they traced him to Crewe, and finally apprehended him in a first class railway carriage in Chester, just on the point of starting for Holyhead. Only 20*l.* was found upon him.

LIVERPOOL.—The Canadian steam-ship Jura, on entering the Mersey in a fog on Thursday morning, ran ashore near Crosby Point, and broke her back. It is feared that she will become a total wreck. — The new Act of Parliament for closing public-houses between the hours of one and four in the morning was adopted on Monday by the Town Council of Liverpool, after a brief discussion.—On the 27th ult. the wife of a labouring man named Dawson, residing in Wellington Road, during a fit of mental aberration killed one of her children, a girl one year and ten months old, by cutting its throat with a table knife. She then seized another and older child, and would have destroyed it had not its screams aroused the attention of the neighbours. She then seized a third child, but being prevented while in the act of attempting to cut its throat, she inflicted a severe wound upon her own neck and throat. She was removed to the main bridewell, where she tore off the plasters from her throat, and caused violent hæmorrhage. She is still in a critical condition. It appears that she has not been long liberated from a lunatic asylum.

OXFORD.—At a meeting of the Hebdomadal Council on Thursday it was proposed by the Vice-Chancellor, that in consideration of the labours of Mr. Jowett, the Regius Professor of Greek, a salary of 400*l.* a year be paid to him. On a division this motion was lost by a majority of one, the numbers being 11 to 10. The opponents of the motion were the Provost of Oriel, President of St. John's, President of Magdalen, Warden of All Souls, Warden of New College, Professor Heurtley, Professor Mansel, Mr. Michell, Mr. Hansell, Mr. Turner, and the Senior Proctor. The supporters of the motion were the Vice-Chancellor, the Dean of Christ Church, Master of Balliol, Professor Pusey, Professor Jacobson, Professor Wilson, Professor Price, Professor Bernard, Mr. Eaton, and the Junior Proctor.

PRESTON.—At the last meeting of the Town Council, Alderman Miller intimated his intention of presenting to the town a plot of ground for a public park to join the very beautiful park in Avenham Valley, which has just been laid out by Mr. Milner, the well-known landscape gardener. Alderman Miller has given between 2000*l.* and 3000*l.* for the land, but it is stated that if it had been brought into the public market for sale it would have realised between 4000*l.* and 5000*l.* The gift is made subject to the condition that the Corporation shall make a yearly grant of 40*l.* for the foundation of a scholastic exhibition in the Preston Grammar School.—On Friday, Joshua Bond was tried at the sessions for an offence of a very unusual character. He was charged with stealing two 50*l.* notes, belonging to his employers, the New Fylde Timber Company. Four years ago these notes were paid to a clerk of the company, named Mayor, and as they were missed after being paid to him, he was charged with stealing them, examined before the magistrates, and acquitted. He languished however under the charge, and almost ever since his acquittal he has been bedridden. Two months since the notes were found in a pocket-book, which Bond acknowledged to be his, though he denied all knowledge of them. On Friday he was tried for stealing them, and was acquitted. The trial lasted between eight and nine hours.

THE MURDER AT RATHMINES.—Mr. Odell, the barrister who shot a bailiff who had been sent to take his goods in execution, was tried before the Criminal Court of Dublin last week. The trial lasted three days. There was no dispute as to the facts of the murder; but it was contended for the defence that the prisoner was insane at the time he shot the man. The jury, after a long consultation, on Saturday returned a verdict acquitting the prisoner on the ground of insanity.

FATAL RAILWAY ACCIDENT.—On Saturday evening the train from Dublin to Galway ran off the line near Ballinasloe, when a carriage was overturned and two persons were killed—Mr. Glenville, a builder of Ballinasloe, and Thomas Henry, a servant of the company. Three harvestmen sustained fractured limbs, and about 20 others were slightly injured.

THE OUTRAGE IN DONEGAL.—The local papers state that Mr. Wilson is progressing favourably, and that the best hopes of his ultimate recovery are entertained by his medical attendants. Nothing has yet been effected towards the discovery of the assassins.

Law.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT: The Trial of Muller.—On Saturday morning Serjeant Parry, in accordance with his statement on the previous day, that he would call witnesses to show that the prisoner was elsewhere at the time the murder was committed, called Mr. Lee, of Hackney Wick, an omnibus driver, and two women called Jones and Eldred, for that purpose, but the evidence of the former was of no value, and that of the latter merely showed that the prisoner was at Camberwell on the evening of the murder, and rather strengthened the case for the prosecution than otherwise, by showing that it was possible for him to have returned to London by the same conveyance as Mr. Briggs. The Solicitor-General having replied on the whole case, the Lord Chief Baron summed up He said that it was his duty to state to the jury any point of law that might arise, and for them to draw their own conclusions from the facts, and there could be no doubt that Mr Briggs on the night of the 9th July was murdered. He would say nothing of the manner in which the murder was committed ; but of the fact there could be no doubt. He would state to them the facts as they had been brought before them, and it would be for them to form their own opinion. It had been argued that it was a case of circumstantial evidence. It was so in almost every case tried in a court by evidence of that nature. The majority of criminal offences decided in the courts of this country depended upon circumstantial evidence. Direct evidence might be mistaken in various ways, in the person, or in many other ways. The indirect testimony of a number of facts, all concurring to the same direction, does away with the idea that there can have been perjury or a mistake. There was another question he would go into, which was the degree of certainty with which they ought to agree. Serjeant Parry had said they must not find the prisoner guilty unless they were as satisfied as if they had seen him commit the act. He did not think that was exactly the certainty they ought to feel. It was only necessary to have that certainty with which they would transact their most important concerns, although the present inquiry was a most important one to the prisoner. To require more would not tend to lessen crime in the country. Serjeant Parry had said it was better that many guilty should escape than one innocent should suffer. There were instances where innocent persons had been confounded with the guilty and had been convicted as such. The only rule to be laid down was to use the utmost vigilance, and take care if a man be innocent he should be acquitted. The jury should take the facts of the case and separate those which they believed from those they did not believe, and draw the conclusions which result from these facts, and whatever be the conclusions arrived at, he thought they might rely upon a safe issue. There could be no doubt if the case for the prosecution did not bring home to their minds the satisfactory conclusion that the prisoner was guilty, he was entitled to be found not guilty. It was said that the prisoner was not of such stature and strength as would be required to commit the deed. If they believed he could not have done it, he was entitled to a verdict of not guilty. And the third line of the defence was in the nature of an alibi. If they thought that there was a satisfactory case on the part of the prosecution, and this were met by an alibi, the alibi should be weighed against the case for the prosecution. It became their province to sift the alibi, and to weigh it well with the case for the prosecution, and they were called upon to decide to which side the truth leans. Mr. Briggs appeared to have got out at London Bridge from an omnibus, and to have gone to the Fenchurch Street station intending to go to Hackney, and he was seen at the Bow station. His lordship commented on the evidence of Mr. Lee, and said he thought the prosecution were right in not calling him. [Mr. Briggs was found about one-third the distance from Hackney-wick upon the line, his head towards Hackney-wick. He drew the attention of the jury to this because it showed that Mr. Briggs must have been put out of the carriage feet foremost. He informed the jury that whether Mr. Briggs jumped out or not it would make no difference to the person charged with the murder, as it was clear he had received several desperate wounds before leaving the carriage, and if he left the carriage from the fear of the violence of whoever was inside it would be equal; but Mr. Briggs's hat was gone and another left in its place, and his watch and chain were gone. On the following Monday Mr. Death exchanged a chain; and, in consequence of suspicions, persons were sent out to anticipate the arrival of Muller in America, and in the prisoner's box was found the watch and a hat also, which was at first said was not Mr. Briggs's, because it was too low; but it turned out to have been cut down. The hat found in the carriage and the watch and chain are the three links in the chain of evidence for the prosecution, all of which were distinctly apart from each other, and if any one of them were made out, it would be for the jury to say whether he had given a satisfactory account. The prisoner was in possession of the chain on the Monday; but there was no evidence that he had the watch at that time. The prisoner had never said he had bought the watch and chain at the docks. (Serjeant Parry said the counsel for the prisoner had stated so after an interview with the prisoner.) The Lord Chief Baron said that was his counsel's suggestion. The prisoner himself had said he had the watch for two years. His lordship then alluded to the hat, which was said to be the hat of Mr. Briggs, and said it was proved, as far as it possibly could be, that it did belong to Mr. Briggs, and it would be for the jury to say whether they were satisfied of the fact. He remarked that if half the industry that had been exercised in finding all the old hats of Mr. Digance had been devoted to finding out the person of whom the prisoner bought it, he could have been found. (Serjeant Parry reminded his lordship that Mr. Digance had said he would not swear it was the hat he supplied to Mr. Briggs.) The Lord Chief Baron said that was undoubtedly so; but it was for the jury to say how far what that witness had said led them to the belief that that was the hat. The circumstances connected with the second hat were certainly of rather a peculiar nature. The hat had a remarkable lining, of which Mr. Walker had very few, not more than two, of the description. With regard to the alibi it was a matter so entirely for the consideration of the jury that he should say but few words, and he briefly alluded to the evidence given by the witnesses, and said it was for the jury to consider the whole facts spoken to by them, and say whether it established it without doubt in their minds. He remarked that the prisoner might have returned to Camberwell by the same route as Mr. Briggs to the city, or he might have gone the same route from the city to home. His lordship said they were in the facts to which he thought it necessary to draw the attention of the jury. He wished to have the whole of the evidence read over before he did so. The jury said it was not at all necessary. His lordship, in conclusion, said the verdict was to be entirely theirs, and he urged upon them, if they had gathered from his remarks anything that would prejudice their minds, to dismiss it entirely at once. He had endeavoured to be as impartial as possible, and he was sure they would acquit themselves of their task in a manner conducive to their conscience and their duty to their God, and might the God of all truth guide their deliberations to a verdict according to the truth and the case. The jury then retired, and were absent about 20 minutes, when they returned into court. The prisoner had been seated during their absence, then placed in front of the dock. On the question being put by the Clerk whether they found the prisoner guilty or not guilty, the foreman said that they found the accused "Guilty." The Chief Baron having conferred for a short time with Mr. Martin, the usual question having been put by the Clerk as to whether he had anything to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon him, Muller showed no indication of emotion was seen in the slight twitching of his compressed upper lip, replied "I submit to judgment." Mr. Baron Martin having put on the black cap, addressing the prisoner, said,—Franz Muller, you have been found guilty by the jury of the murder of Mr. Briggs. It is no part of our duty to express generally our opinion with respect to the verdict of the jury. It is theirs and theirs only to decide upon your guilt or your innocence. It is the duty only for the Judges to state, in passing sentence, if they entirely concur with the verdict, and they do so for two reasons. It is satisfactory if the opinion of the Judges concurs with that of the jury, and I am authorised by the Chief Baron to say, as I state on my own behalf, that we are perfectly satisfied with the verdict, and had I been on the jury I would have found it so in it. And there is a second reason for the statement. It is to remove entirely from your mind any idea of the possibility that you will live in this world much longer. Within a short period you will be removed from it by a violent death. I therefore beseech you, avail yourself of what I have said, which will be afforded you—the means, so far as you can, of making your peace with your Maker, and be prepared to meet your fate which very shortly awaits you. I forbear going into the particulars of the case ; but there are a variety of circumstances in it which if the evidence had been gone into more fully would have more and more tended to establish your guilt. The whole evidence as to your movements during the day of the murder points to that conclusion. You left the city for Blyth about 11. You continued at the house of Mr. Blyth between 7 and 8, when, according to the testimony of Mr. Blyth, who was evidently favourable, you started at a quick pace, telling him you were going to Camberwell to see a certain woman Eldred. You went there. It may be that the jury supposed she was telling the truth when she stated you were there after 9 o'clock, but in my opinion she was mistaken. From the time you left the city it was earlier; you had time to return by omnibus towards the Fenchurch Street before the train started, where, observing Mr Briggs with his exhibiting this watch and chain, you formed the design to rob him. There are other circumstances which tend to the same conclusion. What is your history during the week? You exchange the chain of Mr. Briggs for that of Mr. Death's You immediately proceed to pledge it in order to receive a sum of money upon it. Having got you take out of pledge your own watch and chain, and having got them, you proceed to pledge them again at another shop for a higher sum and sell the ticket. If these facts were known, I have no doubt it would be found that the Devil, and for the purpose of getting money to America, you robbed Mr. Briggs of his watch and chain with these contrived, with assistance from your friends, sufficient money to pay your passage. That, I have little doubt, is the true history of the transaction. to these facts for the purpose of removing from your all idea of there being any possibility of a commuted sentence. I must say, after listening to all the which has been adduced, I feel no more doubt that committed this murder, than I do with regard to occurrence of any other event of which I am aware which I did not see with my own eyes. The sentence now to pass on you is not that of the Chief Baron, my sentence ; it is the sentence which the law imposes on all persons found guilty of murder, and that you be taken back to the prison whence you thence to the place of execution, and there be hanged neck until you are dead, and that your body taken down and buried in the precincts of the prison you were last confined before this sentence of execution passed upon you, and may the Lord have mercy on your The last solemn words were scarcely uttered when the warders standing immediately behind Muller came remove him from the bar. The prisoner, who did display surprising firmness and self-possession, said English, "I wish to say I am satisfied with my trial I have been convicted by your law, but not upon the ment—by false." The prisoner had not completed sentence when the self command which he had shown throughout the trial with an imperturbability which him capable of the most desperate deeds, entirely and he left the dock dissolved in tears.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Oct 31.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was short, and of Spring Corn only moderate. English Wheat found a steady sale at the prices of last Monday. The demand for foreign Wheat was in retail, at no quotable variation in the value of any description. Good malting Barley sold quietly on former terms; secondary sorts dull. Beans were easier bought. Peas sold at as much money. Oats were taken off to a fair extent at the quotations of this day week. Linseed was a slow sale, and Rapeseed. The value of town Flour was unaltered; country marks were steady in price; American brands remain firm. The floating trade was unvaried for any article, with a moderate demand.

FRIDAY, Nov. 4.

The weather from the 28th to the 31st ult. was damp and dull; it has since been dry with a lower temperature, last night frosty. The Wheat trade has continued to be devoid of animation, and the sale restricted to the millers' immediate requirements. Prices are unaltered. The previous rates have been maintained for the finest malting Barley, but all other qualities are more difficult of sale, and consequently the turn lower in value. Beans are quoted rather cheaper in several markets. Oats and Peas have not undergone any alteration in value. Flour has been in limited demand at our quotations. Since Friday last 60 vessels have been reported off the coast. A moderate business has been done in Wheat during the week, and the cargoes left off the coast are held for higher prices; Maize has been active at late rates. Linseed is rather higher in value. Paris, Nov. 3.—Wheat and Flour have remained unaltered in value, but the market shows a little more steadiness, and buyers at late rates begin to come forward. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. per 280 lb. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 32,260 cwt. The arrivals of English Wheat and Barley are moderate, of Oats good, of foreign Barley small, of Wheat and Oats large. The attendance at this morning's market was unusually small, and the little English Wheat fresh up was disposed of at Monday's prices, which were repeated for foreign, but the transactions were only of nominal amount. Spring Corn of all descriptions was difficult of sale at about Monday's prices.

LIVERPOOL: Nov. 1.—We have had a fair attendance of the trade at our market to-day, but we have found only a very moderate demand for Wheat at last Friday's prices. Flour being scarce is held with much firmness. Indian Corn may be called the turn stiffer, with a limited inquiry. Oats and Oatmeal command full rates. Beans are the turn dearer. No change in Peas or Barley. Market closes steady but without animation.

FRIDAY, Nov. 4.—The market was thinly attended. Wheat quiet, at Tuesday's rates. Flour 6d. dearer. Indian Corn steady. Beans unchanged. Oats and Oatmeal quiet.

The Furnishing of Bed Rooms.
HEAL AND SON have observed for some time that it would be advantageous to their customers to have a larger selection of BED-ROOM FURNITURE than is usually displayed, and that to judge properly of the style and quality of different descriptions of Furniture, it is necessary that a collection should be placed in separate rooms. They have therefore erected large and additional Show Rooms, by which they are enabled not only to extend their show of Iron, Brass, and Wire Bedsteads and Bed Room Furniture, beyond what they believe to be usually attempted, but also to provide several small rooms for the purpose of keeping complete suites of Bed Room Furniture in the Wood.
Japanned Deal Goods may be seen in complete suites of different colours, some of them light and ornamental, others of a plainer description. Suites of Stained Deal Goods, Polished Deal, Oak, and Walnut, are also set apart in separate rooms, so that customers are able to see the effect as they would have it in their own rooms. A Suite of very superior Gothic Furniture will generally be kept in stock, and from time to time new Furniture in various woods will be added.
Bed Furnitures are fitted to the Bedsteads in the Factory, so that a complete assortment may be seen, and the effect of any particular pattern ascertained as it would appear on the Bedstead.
A very large stock of Bedding (HEAL & SON'S own make) is placed on the Bedsteads.
The stock of Mahogany goods for the better Bedrooms, and Japanned Goods for plain and Servant's use, is very large. The entire Stock is arranged in eight rooms, six of which are 100 feet long), and two large ground floors, the whole forming a complete an assortment of Bed Room Furniture as can possibly be desired.
Every attention is paid to the manufacture of the Bedding, and they have just erected large Workshops on the premises for the purpose, that the manufacture may be under their own care.
Their Bedding trade receives their constant and personal attention, every article being made on the Premises.
They particularly call attention to their Patent Spring, the Sommier Elastique Portatif. It is portable, durable, and lower in price than the old Spring Mattress.

News of the Week.

THE Danish Rigsraad was opened at Copenhagen on Saturday. The Speech from the Throne deplored the unhappy result of the war and the hard conditions which the German Powers had imposed upon Denmark. The Treaty of Peace was read a first time in the Folkething on Tuesday, and was adopted on Wednesday by a majority of 75 to 21. All the deputies from Schleswig and from the enclaves which have been ceded by the treaty to Germany, voted against its adoption. The treaty was then sent up to the Landsthing, and was expected to be adopted by that body at a public sitting yesterday.

The Moniteur of Saturday published a despatch addressed by M. DROUYN DE LHUYS to the French Ambassador at Turin for the purpose of correcting what he calls the "erroneous impression" of the negotiations leading to the Franco-Italian Convention conveyed in the despatches of the Cavaliere DI NIGRA, the Italian Minister in Paris. It appears that Cavaliere DI NIGRA in his narrative of the negotiations which had been conducted by Count PEPOLI and himself on behalf of Italy, observed that the negotiators had received from their Government formal orders not to accept any conditions opposed to the "rights of the nation" and "national aspirations." M. DROUYN DE LHUYS complains that these terms, as repeated in the Italian Chambers and Italian journals, appeared to imply some secret design, and he therefore wishes it to be understood that Florence is not to be considered as a stage on the way to Rome, and that in the event of the withdrawal of the French troops leading to a spontaneous revolution at Rome, France retains her liberty of action, such a contingency not having been contemplated by the Convention. To this despatch the Italian Minister has replied that Italy as well as France reserves to herself entire liberty of action in the event of the outbreak of a revolution in Rome, and that the words "national aspirations" imply the employment of no means except those of civilization and progress, while they contemplate a reconciliation between Italy and the Papacy on the basis of a free Church in a free State. The publication of these despatches has created great interest in Paris, and it is currently reported that M. DROUYN DE LHUYS, having dissatisfied the Italians and failed to propitiate the clerical party, will retire from office and be succeeded by M. THOUVENEL.

The discussion of the Bill for the transfer of the capital to Florence commenced on Monday in the Italian Chamber of Deputies, and is still in progress.

The latest news from the United States informs us that General GRANT on the 27th ult. made a reconnaissance in force against General LEE's right, while General BUTLER simultaneously advanced against the left. The Confederates, who were fully prepared at all points, after an obstinate contest repulsed both attacks with the loss of several hundred killed and wounded, and took a number of prisoners. General GRANT lost 1500 killed and wounded, and General BUTLER's losses were still heavier. The accounts of the military movements in Georgia and Missouri are very confused. It is reported that General SHERMAN has evacuated Atlanta, and though the report is not confirmed, it is certain that his position is considered untenable, and that General HOOD is again threatening an advance into Tennessee. The defeat of General PRICE is not confirmed; and it is now said that he is merely retiring to Arkansas with the spoils of his late campaign in Missouri. Gen. FORREST is threatening Columbus and Paducah in Kentucky.

At a convention of the Governors of the Confederate States held at Augusta, Georgia, on the 17th ult., it was unanimously resolved to authorise Congress to place in the military service every able-bodied man, irrespective of colour. It is reported that in accordance with this resolution the Confederates will arm 300,000 negroes for the spring campaign. President DAVIS has made a speech at Columbia, South Carolina, in which he announced that General BEAUREGARD had gone to Georgia to aid General HOOD, and that with the forces over which they would have command, General SHERMAN'S escape from defeat or disgraceful retreat will be impossible. President DAVIS has appointed the 16th inst. as a day of thanksgiving for the late successes of the Confederate arms.

On Sunday their Royal Highnesses arrived at Antwerp from Brussels, and embarked at an early hour on their return home. The Prince and Princess landed at Woolwich at 2 o'clock on Monday afternoon, and immediately proceeded to Marlborough House. The Duchess of Cambridge and the Duke of Cambridge visited their Royal Highnesses shortly after their arrival. On Tuesday the Prince and Princess left Marlborough House to pass a few days with her Majesty at Windsor Castle. On Wednesday, being the Prince's birthday, the shops of the royal tradesmen and several of the clubhouses and public institutions were illuminated. THE ARMY.—The colonelcy of the 12th Foot, vacant by the death of General Bentinck, has been conferred on Lieut.-General Colvile; and the colonelcy of the 80th Foot, vacant by the death of General Robbins, has been conferred on Major-General Young.

THE IRON CLAD FLEET.—The Warrior, 40, iron-clad frigate, is ordered to be paid off on the 22d inst. Much surprise has been expressed at the Admiralty paying off a ship in such excellent condition, but it is supposed that they require her men for the Victoria screw three decker, the new flagship for the Mediterranean, for which there is great difficulty in obtaining men.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor and Empress left St. Cloud on Monday for Compiègne. The King of the Belgians, accompanied by the Duke of Brabant and the Prince of Orange, left Paris on Thursday for Compiègne. The Italian Minister, Signor Nigra, is among the guests invited to participate in the festivities at that place. The Papal Nuncio, Monsignore Chigi, was received by the Emperor and Empress at St. Cloud on Sunday. State Councillor Persil has been appointed Senator. M. Boudet, Minister of the Interior, has been nominated Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour. The Moniteur of Saturday published a long despatch from M. Drouyn de Lhuys, written with the view of correcting what he calls the "erroneous impression" of the negotiations leading to the Franco-Italian Convention conveyed in Cavaliere di Nigra's recent despatch. M. Drouyn de Lhuys maintains that Florence is not to be considered as a stage on the way to Rome, and points out that in the event of the withdrawal of the French troops leading to a spontaneous revolution at Rome, France retains her liberty of action, such a contingency not having been contemplated by the Convention. He refers to the terms "rights of the nation" and "national aspirations," which have so frequently been used in the Italian Parliament and the Italian press, as indicating "underhand ways among certain parties," and "aspirations at variance with the declared object of the Convention," and says that it is difficult to explain how Italian Royalty is to find itself some day at Rome when it seemingly forbids itself to go there. He declares that the moral means of which Italy has reserved to herself the use, consist solely in the forces of civilisation and progress; that the only aspirations which the Court of Turin can consider legitimate have for their object the reconciliation of Italy with the Papacy; that the transfer of the capital is a solemn pledge to France, and that to suppress the pledge would be to annul the contract. To this despatch Cavaliere di Nigra, the Italian Minister in Paris, has replied in a despatch stating that the Italian Ministers have done and said nothing to give rise to the supposition of underhand ways, that they have expressly reserved the national aspirations, and that in the event of the Papal Government being unable to subsist by itself, the two Governments would have full liberty of action upon either side. These sentiments have since been repeated in an enlarged form by General Della Marmora, the Italian Minister for Foreign Affairs, in a despatch referred to in our Italian news. The Constitutionnel of Thursday considers this despatch of General Della Marmora as a fresh proof of the good understanding between the French and Italian Governments. The diplomatic convention, regulating the sugar legislation, was signed in Paris on Tuesday by the representatives of England, France, Belgium, and Holland. — A double murder has been perpetrated this week at Boulogne. A man called Leduc, who had separated from his wife in France, had two illegitimate children by a woman in London, where he had been living as a waiter. He took these children to Boulogne in the steamer a few days since, and drowned them in the harbour. He then went to his wife's house, but finding that his clothes were wet, and hearing that two bodies of children had been found drowned, she charged him with the murder, upon which he absconded to a country village of which he was a native. He was traced and apprehended, and on being brought back to Boulogne he confessed the crime.

SPAIN.—The Politica of Friday states that Admiral Pareja is the bearer of an ultimatum to Peru, demanding from the Peruvian Government prompt and full satisfaction, and that if he does not obtain it the Spanish squadron is at once to take possession of the principal ports of the Republic, and to destroy its fleet. The municipal elections have terminated. They have resulted in the election of half of the candidates of the Progressista and half of those of the Moderate party. By a Royal decree published on Saturday the increase of pay conceded to the other troops is extended to the artillery, infantry, and the navy. Señor Bravo Murillo has published a pamphlet against the holders of the certificates of the Passive Debt, who, he says, have no right to provoke solemn declarations and promises on the part of the Government, as the Chambers have always rejected their exaggerated demands. The Correspondencia asserts that the Government will shortly introduce a new and more liberal press law. The British schooner Mermaid, from Cardiff to Ancona, was fired into a few days since from a Spanish battery at Ceuta, and sunk. The master and crew saved themselves by taking to their boats. The Spanish authorities require all vessels to show their colours when passing within range of the fortress, and the firing is attributed to neglect of this rule.

SWITZERLAND.—The trial of Dr. Hermann Demme and Madame Sophia Trumpy, accused of poisoning the husband of the latter, terminated on Saturday night, when the jury, after two hours deliberation, returned a verdict of Not Guilty.

DENMARK.—The President of the Council opened the Rigsraad on Saturday. The speech from the Throne deplored the unhappy result of the war waged against the great German Powers, and the hard conditions of peace which had been imposed upon Denmark. The speech expressed the King's hope that the Rigsraad would resign itself to the heavy misfortunes which have befallen the country, and said that his Majesty will shortly submit to that body a bill for making the necessary changes in the November Constitution. Immediately upon the meeting of the Rigsraad the treaty of peace was laid before the house by the Government. In the evening there was a private sitting of both houses which lasted until midnight. On Monday the Rigsraad held three sittings with closed doors. On Tuesday the Treaty was read a first time in a public sitting of the Folkething (Lower House) of the Rigsraad. After a very short debate it was unanimously resolved that it should be read a second time. The final vote was taken on Wednesday, when the treaty was approved by 75 to 21 votes. One member abstained from voting, and four others were absent. All the deputies from Schleswig and the enclaves ceded by the treaty to Germany voted against the adoption of the Treaty. The Bill was immediately sent up to the Landsthing (Uppper House) of the Rigsraad, in which the debate commenced on Thursday with closed doors, and was expected to be concluded yesterday in a public sitting. The Government will thus be enabled to forward the ratification to Vienna to-day.

AUSTRIA.—The official journals state that the scheme of a congress is again under discussion, and that confidential interviews on the subject have taken place between the representatives of some Courts. It is said that the King of the Belgians takes an interest in the success of the scheme, and that the principal difficulty is the position of Austria in the Italian question. A new State loan for 25,000,000 florins, bearing 5 per cent. interest, was officially announced on Wednesday. The issue price is fixed at 87. The following is said to be a correct summary of the contents of a despatch addressed to the Roman Government by the Austrian Cabinet, on the Franco-Italian Convention.

"The interests of Austria will not allow her to interfere in the affairs of Italy, and the Holy See must not reckon upon her assistance with respect to the stipulations of the Convention. The Government of the Pope, on the contrary, will act in conformity with its best interests in profiting by the two years' delay to make efficient arrangements for being able to protect itself at the end of that period."

VENETIA.—Official advices from Venice announce that an armed band of insurgents has been discovered on Mount Rauth, in Friuli. They fired a few shots, wounding three soldiers, and then disappeared. A band of about 50 men, probably not the same, entered Venzone on the 7th inst. At Ponteba, a large village on the road, they seized the post horses, and withdrew towards Carnia. Troops have been sent in pursuit.

ITALY.—General Della Marmora on Monday addressed a note to Cavaliere di Nigra, Italian Ambassador at Paris, in consequence of the publication of the despatch of M. Drouyn de Lhuys in the Moniteur. He says:—

"The Government repels the thought of ever having recourse to secret dealings, but has entire confidence in the action of civilisation and progress. Both powers may have their own opinion upon the consequences of this act, but this cannot be the subject of practical discussion from the moment that Italy affirms that if her tendencies are to be realised it shall never be by the violation of the treaty. Whatever may be the national aspirations, independently of the question of a strict execution of the Treaty, this is a ground on which the King's Government cannot place itself. The aspirations of a people belong to its national conscience, and cannot form the subject of an international discussion. Reconciliation between Italy and the Papacy has always been an object of the Government, and the Convention will help to attain it. As regards the meaning of the transfer of the capital, facts will speak for themselves. Ulterior events cannot be discussed between the two Governments. It is for events to solve the problem. Italy deems her honour concerned in continuing the policy of Count Cavour. M. Drouyn de Lhuys having taken the initiative in mentioning the possibility of a spontaneous revolution in Rome, and of the fall of the temporal power, Italy reserves, as France does, her liberty of action for such a case."

The report of the committee of the Chamber of Deputies on the transfer of the capital to Florence, presented at the re-assembling of the House on Thursday the 3d inst, stated that the principal object of the Convention was to put an end to the French occupation of Rome. The national aspirations, it said, would not be satisfied by the Convention, but it would prepare the way for their fulfilment by the force of unavoidable circumstances, while it constituted the Italians the guardians of the principle of non-intervention in reference to Rome. It rejected the doubt that that principle would not be carried out loyally, and stated that for the present the Convention might possibly cause an increase of the expenditure. The transfer of the capital, it said, was an act of home policy, and was the cause and not the object of the stipulations of the Convention. It further stated that the committee had had regard to the different positions of the contracting Governments, and believed every declaration of principle to be both perilous and useless. In conclusion it recommended the adoption of the Bill, as proposed by the Government. Signor Ferrari proposed that the Chamber should first discuss whether it was necessary to bring in the Bill for the approval of the Convention. After a short discussion the debate upon this previous question was adjourned, and Monday fixed for the discussion of the Bill for the transfer of the capital. In the sitting of Friday the Minister of Finance made his financial statement, according to which 200,000,000 lire were required for the public expenditure to the end of 1864. He said that he did not intend to propose any fresh loans until the financial position of Italy had considerably improved. He announced an immediate reduction of 60,000,000 lire in the public expenditure, 42,000,000 lire of which will be introduced in the Naval Department; and said that still greater reductions will be effected by means of the fundamental laws of the kingdom. To cover the deficit of 200 millions he proposed a Bill, to come into force prior to the 25th November, from which he expects an increase of 40,000,000 lire in the proceeds of the tobacco, salt, and other indirect taxes. He asked for [illegible] the Chamber to certain contracts in re[illegible] Crown property, whereby at least 40 m[illegible] once accrue to the Treasury. He [illegible] that the landed property tax to the [illegible] 124,000,000 lire, payable either in [illegible] coupons of the public debt, should [illegible] pated, and that authorisation to issue Treas[illegible] to the amount of 36,000,000 lire should be [illegible] him. Finally, he announced, amidst genera[illegible] all parts of the House, that a Bill would [illegible] cated to the Chambers, by which the King s[illegible] renounces three millions of his Civil List. [illegible] Bills were then submitted to the Chamb[illegible] Ministry. A Bill for the transfer in the [illegible] accounts of the sum of 1,067,000 lire of R[illegible] credit of the town of Turin, as indemnity [illegible] change of the capital from there to Florence; [illegible] the transfer of the Court of Cassation from [illegible] Turin in 1865; and a Bill to permit public [illegible] to establish their head offices in other places [illegible] capital. The Minister of Justice stated that [illegible] withdraw the Bill on ecclesiastical property [illegible] it before the House in another form. S[illegible] declared that the contract for the sale of [illegible] Railways had been accepted by the Ministry, [illegible] it would be difficult immediately to submit [illegible] the Chamber for approval, obstacles having [illegible] by the contractors on account of the transfer [illegible] capital. In the sitting of Monday some explan[illegible] were exchanged between Signori Minghetti and [illegible] relative to the financial statement. Signor [illegible] spoke upon the previous question of the [illegible] the transfer of the capital, maintaining the [illegible] sity for a special Bill for the approval [illegible] Convention, which would imply a territorial [illegible] in the State and a charge upon the [illegible] Several other members also spoke on the [illegible] tion. Signor Boggio commended the Min[illegible] the note they had despatched to Cavaliere di [illegible] He thought he saw some disagreement in the [illegible] tation of the different notes, and moved the [illegible] of the debate upon the Convention until [illegible] had been restored between them. He stated [illegible] after the publication of the despatch of M. [illegible] Lhuys it was considered necessary to publish [illegible] Signor Boggio subsequently stated that he [illegible] press for a suspension of the debate on the Convention. In the sitting of Tuesday the debate on the transfer of the capital was resumed, when Signor Ferrari moved the previous question. The Minister of the Interior opposed the motion, affirming that no territorial change was implied by the Convention, nor any charge upon the finances. The Parliament, he said, was entirely free from any financial engagement respecting the Roman public debt. The Chamber then rejected the previous question and continued the debate on the transfer of the capital. Signor Miceli opposed the Convention as contrary to the national independence and the public right. Signor Visconti-Venosta stated what was the French and what the Italian policy in the Roman question. The Convention of the 15th September offered common bases for a loyal compromise between the two policies. He explained the clauses of the treaty, and stated that the reason of the transfer of the capital was a fact of home policy of which the Ministry took advantage to facilitate the negotiations. He described the character of the engagements taken and the reciprocal liberty of action reserved in case of unforeseen events, and said that the dignity and interest of Italy require the loyal execution of the treaty. By this great experiment the Government of the Pope would be restored to its normal condition, and he hoped that it would lead to a reconciliation between the Church and Italy. In the sitting of Wednesday, Signor Buoncompagni stated the grounds on which he was at first opposed to the Convention and the transfer of the capital. Considering, however, the almost unanimous wishes of Italy, he had deferred to public opinion by now voting in favour of the measures in question. He added that they must always proceed in unison with France, without sacrificing their policy to hers. They might be certain that France, once having left Rome, would return there no more. They should go to Rome at a distant period by means of civilisation, liberty, and justice. Signor Laporta opposed the Bill, considering it equivalent to a renunciation of Rome. In the sitting of Thursday Signor Lazzaro opposed the Bill. Signor Bufferio censured the tendency to Piedmontism. Signor Ferrari considered Rome for the capital as a [illegible] which could not be entered into at present. "We ought," he said, "to choose another city, such as Florence." By accepting the treaty with the transfer of the capital he considered he acted freely and [illegible] the sentiments and respected the dignity and interests of Italy. He said that every one would interpret the treaty after his own fashion. He himself was opinion that intervention might take place at Rome. He ardently desired the maintenance of the alliance with France, a nation which afforded a generous example to the whole world. Let them have faith. He would go where destiny called them. He believed in the future of the Latin world, and considered the treaty with France as a warning to the Sovereign Pontiff. Signor Cassinis spoke against the Convention.—Great damage has been caused in Tuscany by heavy floods, which have broken up the railways at several points. The lower parts of Florence were inundated, houses and furniture were destroyed, and the Arno rose to the level of the parapets of the quays. The Czarewitch arrived at Turin on Tuesday evening incognito, alighting at the Hôtel de Florence, where he was visited on Wednesday morning by the Duke d'Aosta and Prince Carignan. On the same day the King paid a visit to the Czarewitch, who at once returned it.

RUSSIA.—Intelligence has just been received at St. Petersburg of the opening of the telegraph line from Irkutsk to Kiachta. News may now be sent to Pekin in four days' less time than formerly by the ordinary post.

THE DANUBIAN PRINCIPALITIES.—The elections to the General Councils have terminated, and are favourable to the Government. Prince Couza has sent in a bill to the Council of State relative to the introduction of civil registry and civil marriage into the Principalities. A Roman Catholic seminary has been established by the Government at Varry.

INDIA.—By the Bombay mail we have particulars of the disastrous hurricane which passed over Calcutta on the 5th October, causing immense destruction of life and property. Of more than 200 ships in the Hooghly it is said that only 10 were left at their moorings after the storm, the rest having been stranded or sunk. The destruction of property on land was also great, and there is every reason to fear that the loss of life has not been overrated. The Viceroy and Governor-General left Simla on the 8th Oct. and reached Lahore on the 14th. There was to be a large gathering of Asiatic nobility at the grand Vice-regal Durbar on the 18th. His Excellency was to formally inaugurate the opening of the Lahore and Mooltan section of the Punjaub Railway on the 19th. The Bhootan Field Force will be ready to move by the 15th November. It is not to be a general officer command, but to consist of two brigades, under Brigadier General Mulcaster, operating from the right, and Brigadier-General Dunsford co-operating subordinately on the left. The Ameer of Cabool, after settling Toorkistan, intends to march against Candahar. The Secretary of State has instructed the Governor-General to discourage the native princes from sending costly presents to her Majesty.

EGYPT.—Advices from Constantinople state that all difficulties respecting the transport through Egypt of British troops have been removed.

JAPAN.—The following are the details of the action fought at Simonosaki by the allied fleets on the 5th and 6th September. The fleet consisted of the Euryalus, Conqueror, Tartar, Barossa, Perseus, Argus, Coquette, and Bouncer (English); Semiramis, Tancrede, and Dupleix (French); Metalen-Cruz, Djambi, Medusa, and Amsterdam (Dutch); and the merchant steamer Takiang, bearing the American flag. The Tartar, Dupleix, Barossa, Leopard, Metalen, and Djambi were the first vessels to open fire, and were immediately answered vigorously by the Japanese. In three-quarters of an hour the first battery was silenced by the heavy guns of the squadron, and shortly afterwards a storming party was landed, which carried the battery in a gallant style, and spiked the guns, although it was defended by 800 men. On the following day the whole squadron engaged the remaining batteries, and silenced them one after another, after which another storming party was landed, which succeeded in carrying several, after hard fighting. In these storming parties a body of our Royal Marines peculiarly distinguished themselves, and carried an entrenched camp, with a loss of 10 killed and about 30 wounded. The Japanese used arrows, which caused very troublesome wounds, as the heads remained in the flesh after the shafts had been withdrawn. The Perseus got on shore, but was able to use her guns with effect notwithstanding. On the morning of the 7th the Tartar, Metalen, Djambi, and Dupleix opened fire on the forts at Hakusima; then the Japanese sent off a boat bearing a flag of truce, and having on board one of Nagato's subjects who had recently returned from England. He expressed his regret at having fired on foreign vessels, but asserted that he had been acting under orders from the Tycoon and Mikado. He said he was willing to submit to any conditions, and pay any indemnity the allied Admirals chose to impose. Parties were landed from the fleet, who completely demolished the batteries, destroying 60 guns of large calibre and a number of smaller ones, and taking others more valuable on board the fleet. The Inland Sea was then opened. The ships suffered little or no injury, and comparatively few casualties happened on board. The loss of the English was 15 killed and 40 wounded—among the latter Captain Alexander, of the Euryalus, in the foot, which it is feared will have to be amputated; Lieutenant Edwards and Mr. Atkinson, of the same vessel, slightly; Lieutenant Brownlow, of the Tartar, badly, in the leg; and Mr. Wingfield, of the same vessel, badly. The casualties among the French and Dutch are very trifling. The following Convention was subsequently agreed on:—

"1. Henceforward all ships of all countries passing through the Straits of Simonoseki shall be treated in a friendly manner. Ships shall be allowed to purchase coal, provisions, wood, and water, and every other necessary. As the harbour of Simonosaki is subject to violent winds and currents, people suffering from stress of weather shall be allowed to land without opposition. 2. Not only shall new forts not be built, but no repairs shall be made to the old ones, nor shall guns be mounted thereon. 3. Although the town of Simonosaki might have been partly burnt for having fired on foreign ships, it was left standing. A ransom shall be paid for this, and, in addition, the whole expenses of the expedition shall be defrayed by the Prince—the sum to be settled by the Foreign Minister at Yeddo. 4. This agreement being merely for the cessation of hostilities upon this occasion, it has nothing to do with questions affecting Chosiu, which have to be settled between the Japanese Government and the Ministers of foreign Powers."

NEW ZEALAND.—Advices from New Zealand continue satisfactory. No hostile movements by the rebel natives have taken place. Many of them are surrendering their arms.

UNITED STATES.—Generals Grant and Butler, on the 27th ult. made simultaneous reconnaissances against General Lee's right and left, but found the Confederates fully prepared against attack upon all points. After an obstinate contest the Federal Generals were repulsed with considerable loss—that of Grant being 1500 killed and wounded, and that of Butler being still heavier. On the 30th the Confederates penetrated into Grant's lines for some distance between the 2d and 5th corps, taking numerous prisoners. They afterwards charged the breastworks, but were repulsed. The Confederates are reported to be in strong force and reorganising in the Shenandoah Valley. Their cavalry occupy Fisher's Hill, their main force being at Newmarket. Sheridan is at Cedar Creek. Confederate accounts state that in the attack on the 19th, Early captured and brought off 18 guns and 1300 prisoners. The Federals subsequently captured 30 guns, which became blocked in the streets of Strasburg. The Confederates lost less than 1000 men. The Southern papers assert that arrangements are making for the Confederates to occupy and hold Atlanta. General Hood attacked Decatur, Alabama, but was repulsed with the loss of four guns and 100 prisoners. He has retreated westward along the south side of the Tennessee river. The rumour that Sherman has evacuated Atlanta is not confirmed. A large force under Forrest has been concentrated on the line of the Tennessee river to attack Paducah and Columbus, Kentucky. Gen. Beauregard has issued an address granting an amnesty to absent soldiers returning within 30 days. He says that he joins the army full of hope and confidence in the struggle, to strike a blow which shall bring success to the Southern army and a triumph to the cause of peace and to the country. The Northern journals report that General Price's army has been routed, dispersed, and driven below Fort Scott by General Pleasanton, with the loss of many thousand men and all his guns but one, while two of his generals and a large number of men were made prisoners; but the news is not believed, and Price is said to be retreating to Arkansas, with the spoils of his late occupation of Missouri. The bombardment of Charleston is progressing. A large fleet of Federal vessels has arrived there. Another large fleet is concentrating at Hampton Roads to attack Wilmington, from which port the Confederate cruisers Tallahassee and Edith have left for a raid upon Federal commerce. Resolutions passed by the Southern Governments declare their firm, unalterable purpose to maintain the rights of self-government, establish their independence, and uphold the State rights and sovereignty, or perish in the attempt. The Indiana Democratic and State committee have issued a manifesto stating that the Republican party committed stupendous and systematic frauds in the late election. A resolution has been introduced in the Alabama Legislature declaring if the Democratic party be successful, Alabama will be willing to negociate on the basis of the Chicago platform if other Southern States concur. The military authorities have arrested the Democratic soldiers' electioneering agents in Baltimore and Washington, and closed their offices, on a charge of falsely signing and forging the names of officers and soldiers entitled to vote. At the examination before the military committee one agent pleaded guilty. The forgery of soldiers' names by the New York State agents at Baltimore has been proved, and the military commission have condemned Donahue and Ferry, two of these agents, to imprisonment for life. At a mass meeting of merchants and bankers, held at Wall Street in favour of M'Clellan, resolutions were passed declaring that the financial and commercial interests demand a change in the administration. Lincoln's abolition policy was denounced. The war democracy have held a meeting in New York. General Dix read an address refusing to support the Chicago nominee or platform, and recommending the reorganisation of the democracy. General Dix has declared that the military will protect the purity of the polls against the intentions of rebel agents and deserters who are entering the frontier States from Canada. Governor Bramlett of Kentucky has issued a proclamation declaring that he will tolerate no military interference in the approaching elections, and directing the sheriffs to arrest the offenders if any be attempted. A serious political riot has taken place at Philadelphia during a democratic procession, and numerous arrests were made. The National Democratic Committee have issued an address stating that Mr. Lincoln's unscrupulous supporters are determined to employ for his re-election a system of violence and fraud unknown in American history. The committee urge the people to let nothing prevent their casting a democratic vote. The Democratic press assert that the charges are manufactured by the Administration, the agent having pleaded guilty in the interest of the Government. They also state that it is part of Mr. Lincoln's way of managing the campaign to elect himself. Mr. Wendell Phillips has made a speech asserting that he was not willing to trust Lincoln with the future of the country. He admitted that Lincoln was the only candidate in the field, but he must do the people's will. Proceedings have commenced at St. John's, Upper Canada, for the extradition of the Confederate raiders who were captured after the attack on St. Alban's, Vermont. The prisoners have now been removed to Montreal, when their examination will be concluded. Lieutenant Young has written a letter claiming that he is a Confederate commissioned officer, and commanded an expedition in Vermont to burn towns and villages, in retaliation for the devastation of the Shenandoah Valley. He says he violated no Canadian law, and was arrested and delivered to the British authorities on Canadian territory by armed American citizens. The military at Buffalo are under arms, being apprehensive of a raid from Canada. President Lincoln has declined by letter to interfere with Governor Johnson's proclamation, requiring a test oath from Presidential electors. Mr. Pendleton, the Democratic candidate for the Vice-Presidency, has asserted in a speech and by letter, that the Democratic party is pledged to the restoration of a constitutional union. President Lincoln has proclaimed the Nevada Territory a State of the Union. President Davis has made a speech, stating that the Federals had repulsed all attempts at negotiation, and that foreign intervention and foreign recognition were an ignis fatuus, and victory alone could achieve peace and independence. He repudiated contemptuously any negotiation by separate States. He says that General Beauregard had gone to Georgia to assist Hood, whose army had increased in strength and confidence since the fall of Atlanta, and he hoped that within thirty days Sherman would seek a crossing on the Tennessee River. President Davis has appointed the 16th inst. as a day of thanksgiving for recent successes of the Confederate arms.

CANADA.—Quebec despatches state that the Conference had decided on confederation, which will be submitted to the existing Parliament without direct reference to the public. The constitution of the Confederation will, probably, provide for the appointment of the Governor General, with Cabinet advisers, by the Crown. The Crown will also appoint the members of the Upper Chamber for life. The members of the Lower House will be elected for five years. The Governor General is to appoint the Lieutenant-Governors of the provinces.

BRAZILS.—The excitement caused by the seizure of the Florida at Bahia was so great that the people tore down the consular arms and broke them in pieces. Mr. Wilson, the United States Consul, went away in the Wachusetts without appointing any one to act in his absence. The Governor of Bahia has suspended official relations with the Consul until the Brazilian Government has deliberated on the facts, and in the meantime has forbidden the admission of the Wachusetts into any of the ports of the province.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE NEW LORD MAYOR.—On Tuesday Alderman Hale, the new Lord Mayor, was publicly sworn into office in Guildhall, in the presence of the retiring Lord Mayor, the Court of Aldermen, the principal officers of the Corporation, and many of the citizens. On Wednesday, being Lord Mayor's day, he was escorted from Guildhall to Westminster according to custom, and presented to the Barons of the Court of Exchequer. The procession left Guildhall at half-past eleven, passing through King Street, Cheapside, St. Martin's-le-Grand, Aldersgate Street, Jewin Street, Redcross Street, Finsbury Circus, London Wall, Moorgate Street, Princes Street, King William Street, Cannon Street, St. Paul's Churchyard, Ludgate Hill, Fleet Street, Temple Bar, the Strand and Charing Cross, to Westminster Hall. It included the boys of the Marine Society, the bands of the London Militia, the Society for the Protection of Life from Fire, the London Rifle Brigade, the Grenadier Guards, the Artillery Company, and the mounted band of the 1st Life Guards. The Tallow Chandlers' Company (of which the new Lord Mayor is a member) attended in a number of carriages, accompanied by a military band. There were also six knights in armour, each attended by two esquires in appropriate costume, and an unusually large display of the flags and banners of the various livery companies, the rest of the procession being made up of the usual official personages, aldermen, sheriffs, City officers, late and new Lord Mayor, Lady Mayoress, and a military guard of honour from the 13th Hussars. At the Banquet in Guildhall in the evening the principal speakers were the Lord Chancellor, Lord Palmerston, Lord Brougham, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and M. Berryer. In returning thanks for her Majesty's Ministers, Lord Palmerston said:—

"It has been the practice of those who have had like myself to address the great assemblages met within these walls upon occasions like this to have to tell them something with regard to public affairs which might excite their interest, or perhaps be unknown to those who heard it. That, unfortunately, is not my lot upon the present occasion. Nothing can be more dull, nothing could be less calculated to excite interest in hearers than to tell them Europe is peaceful; that we anticipate no event which should disturb the general tranquillity of this part of the world; and that this country is in a state of progressive improvement and prosperity. But such is the statement which I have this evening to make. There is, indeed, one unfortunate exception to that general prosperity. There is a certain renewal of distress in part of our manufacturing population. I trust that that renewal arises from those vicissitudes to which great commercial transactions are liable—that it arises from those fluctuations of value and those uncertainties of calculation to which commercial countries must from time to time be subject, and that it is not any indication of any failure in the resources and future prosperity of the country. With regard to things abroad, I have nothing to say about Europe except that it is quiet, and we hope it will continue so. Events have occurred in the Eastern Seas by which we hope that the commercial transactions of Europe with Japan will be placed on a more safe and satisfactory footing than that upon which they have hitherto stood. We are glad also to know that in that vast empire of China, containing, as has been stated, one-third of the human race, our relations with the Government are greatly improved, and there is a fair prospect that the nations of Europe will enlarge from year to year their valuable commercial intercourse with that great and productive and most populous empire. There is one dark spot in the picture which the affairs of the world present. That dark spot lies on the other side of the Atlantic. We grieve, and every man of right mind must grieve, that that bloody and disastrous war which broke out three years ago among the kindred nations of the northern part of America still rages—still lays waste the fertile plains of that continent, still bedews with the blood of its people those forests and tracts of territory which ought to be cultivated and become the source of wealth, of pleasure, and of happiness to mankind. We may trust that human nature will not long permit that deadly and disastrous strife to continue; that the contending parties, within some period not remote, will find it better to be reconciled than to fight, and that those disputes which have bedewed that continent with blood will be settled by amicable arrangement between themselves. The beginning of that strife was expected to be attended in this country with the most disastrous results to our manufactures. These alarms have been found to be groundless. At all events, out of evil may come some good; and I trust that in future our sources of supply will be spread over a great portion of the globe, and that we shall no longer be dependent upon any one country for those materials which are so essential for the industry, the wealth, and prosperity of a great part of the population of the country. I congratulate you, my Lord Mayor, on the present occasion, upon the number of distinguished guests you have invited to your table. You have two men here present, eminent in their respective countries for their great intellectual attainments and for the services which they have rendered to mankind. The one is your fellow countryman; the other a native of that great nation which lies but a short distance from our shores. It is needless that I should say that the first whom I allude to is a man well known to this city as to all the country—I mean Lord Brougham—a man who has distinguished himself in every career of intellectual display, whether as an advocate most eloquent and successful, whether as a Parliamentary orator with eloquence and power never exceeded, whether as having distinguished himself in literature, whether as having trodden successfully all the various paths of science, or whether, not content with his own attainments, but anxious to spread the blessings of knowledge and instruction throughout the land, the promoter of the diffusion of knowledge and the education of all classes of the community. But you have also a most distinguished foreigner present—you have M. Berryer here, a man who has attained great eminence, the greatest eminence in his own country, whose name is known throughout all the nations of Europe, unrivalled in eloquence at the Bar, respected and esteemed for that dignity of character, for that elevation of mind, for that nobleness of sentiment which are essential when coupled with eloquence and talent to make the perfection of a legal or of any other character. I am glad that I have had the opportunity of doing homage to the talent and ability of France by your inviting to your table the man who is so worthy a representative of the intellect and, I would say, of the patriotism of his country. I trust that his visit to England—that this banquet will add another link to that bond of friendship which ought to unite, and which I trust does unite, two nations neighbouring to each other—nations who are worthy of each other—who stand foremost in the civilisation of the world—who are capable of inflicting on each other enormous injury as enemies, but who are able on the other hand to confer upon each other the greatest benefits as friends.'

M. Berryer, in returning thanks for the toast of his health, spoke as follows:—

"Milord Maire, Milords, Mesdames, Messieurs,—Je voudrais pouvoir vous remercier dignement de la faveur insigne qui m'a été accordée d'être admis dans cette solennelle et majestueuse assemblée. Je ne puis recevoir en ma personne et accepter pour moi-même les paroles bienveillantes et flatteuses que vous venez de faire entendre, et qui ont été développées par Lord Palmerston—avec une bonne grâce généreuse de la part d'un esprit aussi distingué que le sien; et je ne saurais mieux vous exprimer mes remercîments qu'en vous disant avec sincérité quelle admiration j'éprouve devant cette fidèle conservation des vieilles coutumes nationales. Heureuse la nation qui sait garder ainsi la tradition des vieux pères, et jusqu'à les usages qui peuvent paraître de peu d'importance, mais qui font revivre les ancêtres par une sorte de coexistence avec les générations qui leur succèdent; antiques souvenirs qui deviennent la base solide des progrès, des améliorations que les temps réclament. Il n'est pas de spectacle qui parle plus hautement à l'esprit, et qui émeuve plus les cœurs que celui que nous voyons en ce moment, et pour les yeux qui le contemplent il en est qui seraient bientôt remplis des larmes du regret. Je me livrerais ici à de trop pénibles reflexions, en voyant à la fois, maintenues à travers les siècles, la personne d'une reine bien aimée, l'autorité Royale respectée, et respectueuse elle-même de toutes la nation; près du trône ce grand corps [illegible] Chambre des Lords, où vivent, et les dignes [illegible] qui ont fait jadis la gloire de ce pays, et les hommes qui se sont illustrés par les grands services des [illegible] gences au sein d'une nation éclairée. Plus loin des Communes, composée d'hommes [illegible] représentants des interêts et des volontés d'un [illegible] ment et intelligemment interrogé; et cette grande municipale dont vous êtes, Milord Maire, le [illegible] able chef, et qui, avec une majestueuse autorité et indépendance, maintient les anciens droits et [illegible] lèges de cette antique cité. Ne vous étonnez pas, M. impressions pénibles que subit en ce moment l'honneur de parler devant vous. . . . Mais je suis en dehors de ma patrie, et je m'arrête, je salue, Milord, et je vous remercie."

THE BAR DINNER TO M. BERRYER.—On Tuesday evening M. Berryer, the illustrious French [illegible] and statesman, who arrived in England on Saturday a visit to Lord Brougham, was entertained by the of England at a sumptuous banquet in the Hall of the Middle Temple. More than 400 guests, including the leading members of the Bar, sat down to dinner, and had there been sufficient accommodation about 100 more would have been presents, whose applications for tickets the committee were obliged to refuse. The Attorney-General took the chair, and at the [illegible] on his right and left were M. Berryer, M. Dupin (the bâtonnier of the French Bar), Lord Brougham, Lord Kingsdown, Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, Lord Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord Justice Knight Bruce, Vice-Chancellor Wood, Vice-Chancellor Stuart, Baron Martin, Baron Pigott, Baron Bramwell, Justice Blackburn, Justice Byles, Justice Mellor, the Solicitor-General, Mr. Walpole, M.P.; Mr. Rolt, M.P.; Mr. Kelly, M.P.; Sir E. Ryan, Sir E. Wilmot, Sir Alexander, Mr. Ingham, M.P.; Mr. Roebuck, M.P.; Mr. M. Smith, M.P; Mr. Ewart, M.P.; Sir H. Cairns, M.P.; Mr. Stuart Wortley, Recorder of London, the Common Serjeant, Samuel Warren, Dr. Twiss, Dr. Deane, Peacocke, M.P.; Mr. Locke, M.P.; The Hon. Denman, M.P.; Mr. D. Seymour, M.P.; Mr. Pope, M.P.; Mr. Phinn, Q.C.; the Judge-Advocate General, Mr. Erle, Q.C.; Serjeant Parry, and Serjeant Ballantine. The general company at the lower tables was arranged according to their seniority, and altogether there has not been such a gathering of the legal profession in the memory of the oldest member. After the health of the Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Emperor of the French, the Attorney-General called upon the company to do themselves the honour of drinking the health of the illustrious citizen, the distinguished patriot, the great orator, and the unrivalled advocate whom they had the honour of [illegible] among them that evening. He described in detail the brilliant career of M. Berryer as a lawyer and statesman, and said that while he remained always faithful to his political principles, he had raised his voice in favour of moderation and justice when his party was triumphant, and had shown his impartiality and sympathy for misfortune of every kind by becoming in succession the advocate of Marshal Ney, Lamennais, Chateaubriand, the present Emperor of the French, and the Count de Montalembert. The toast was drunk with loud and continued cheering, and in reply, M. Berryer spoke as follows:—

"Vous me croirez quand je vous dirai que je suis profondément ému à l'aspect de cette imposante et presque fraternelle réception. Je me vois accueilli au milieu de la grande [illegible] Angleterre; vous ne vous étonnerez pas qu'il y ait [illegible] dans ma manière d'exprimer mes remercîments. [illegible] Monsieur l'Attorney-Général, je vous félicitais et je [illegible] grand et noble pays de voir l'Attorney-Général (spectacle pour nous) déployer un zèle aussi éclairé que sage à seconder les associations qui ont pour objet de perfectionner la loi. Aujourd'hui, comme avocat, je me sens ému de voir parler, comme chef du barreau, au nom des [illegible] Grand et beau spectacle, qui me rappelle que telle est la coutume de mon pays quand les Procureurs-Généraux et Avocats-Généraux s'appelaient eux-mêmes les généraux avocats. En me parlant au nom du barreau Anglais, daignez me complimenter sur les travaux de ma vie. J'avoue que je me sens humilié de ces compliments [illegible] je me rappelle ce que furent les avocats Anglais qui m'ont honoré de leur amitié; ce que fut [illegible] Lyndhurst, que nous pleurons tous, et cet autre grand homme qui a voulu m'initier à toutes les grandeurs de ce pays—ce noble propagateur de tous les progrès de toutes les institutions libérales même dans cette Angleterre, ce grand homme que je salue, Lord Brougham. Après 50 ans de travaux j'ai reçu de mes confrères de France un témoignage de fraternelle sympathie. Mais ici, au milieu des miens. J'étais soutenu par cinquante années de relations amicales. Encore une fois, j'étais auprès [illegible] mais près de vous je ne saurais dire ce que je sens. [illegible] moi dire ce que j'éprouve en ce moment; il me semble que c'est la voix de la postérité que j'entends tomber de [illegible] Il y a une pensée plus féconde pour l'avenir qu'[illegible] rendu à un seul homme. Il y a l'alliance des barreaux des deux nations les plus civilisées du monde. J'ai [illegible] toutes les cours de justice de votre pays, à toutes [illegible] tions judiciaires, j'ai été frappé de la situation qui est faite au barreau. Rien ne pouvait plus me toucher que ces [illegible] familiers entre le juge et l'avocat. Cela prouve à [illegible] l'attention qui lui est accordée, et j'y vois une [illegible] le sentiment d'indépendance qui doit appartenir [illegible] noble profession. Je fais des vœux ardents pour [illegible] ance des deux barreaux vienne à se cimenter [illegible] pouvons en France avoir de ces réunions que la [illegible] dans ce pays; mais nous pouvons nous mettre en [illegible] cation les uns avec les autres, et de ces communications naîtra, je l'espère, l'union des intelligences. Le barreau Français n'a pas, comme le barreau Anglais, [illegible] hommes à toutes les situations de la vie politique. Au milieu de nos révolutions, les hommes qui se respectent n'ont pas voulu accepter d'emplois. Le barreau est resté [illegible] ceux qui, froissés dans leurs convictions, n'ont pas fléchir. On comte parmi eux les hommes les plus [illegible] Nous possédons le libre échange; mais il ne faut pas [illegible]

[illegible] à l'échange de scieries et des cotonnades ; il faut que ce [illegible] échange des idées. Vous pourrez trouver chez [illegible] de bonnes à prendre. Nous rencontrons [illegible] des écrivains instruits, éclairés ; une presse puissante, [illegible] ne connaissons pas. Je vote pour l'alliance des deux [illegible] et je prie mon collègue de seconder mon vote."

The Attorney-General next proposed "the health of M. Desmarest and the Bar of France." In returning thanks, M. Desmarest said:—

"Je suis ému quand je me lève pour répondre au toast si [illegible] et si affectueux porté au barreau de France. L'union [illegible] deux barreaux a été le rêve de mon intelligence. [illegible] considère les choses du monde (même après un [illegible] aussi splendide) il est impossible de méconnaître [illegible] monde deux influences, la force et la justice. Je [illegible] pas sure de mal de la force ; quant à la justice, c'est [illegible] d'en dire du bien, devant votre gloire présente et [illegible] gloire ancienne ; permettez-moi d'ajouter, en [illegible] de ces deux porte-étendards du droit et de la justice, [illegible] et M. Berryer. Il existe une grande [illegible] dans leurs caractères. Tous deux ils ont porté bien [illegible] intellectuelle ; tous deux ils ont brillé dans les [illegible] publiques ; tous deux, enfin, sont membres de [illegible] Française. J'avoue que je serais troublé si [illegible] à apporter ici que le tribut de ma seule [illegible] ignorance. Mais aussitôt que j'ai été informé de votre [illegible] invitation, j'ai profité de ces réunions légales [illegible] en France pour dire à nos avocats l'honneur [illegible] fait. Tous, jeunes et vieux, m'ont [illegible], "Allez en Angleterre." Je n'ai pas eu le [illegible] consulter les membres de notre barreau de [illegible], mais tous m'auraient tenu le même langage—tous. [illegible] la grande image du monde judiciaire de France donnant [illegible] au monde judiciaire d'Angleterre, degré préliminaire [illegible] pour mener entre nous une alliance plus intime, selon la belle [illegible] de celui qui devrait être notre bâtonnier perpétuel, et qui [illegible] toujours notre bâtonnier moral. Messieurs, permettez-moi [illegible] dire mes chers confrères, vous nous avez donné l'exemple, [illegible] certain qu'il sera suivi. Un de vos hommes d'état, [illegible] notre Chancelier de l'Echiquier, disait dans une circonstance [illegible] avec cette incomparable éloquence qui rappelle les [illegible] jours de l'antiquité, que, dans le temps où nous vivons, [illegible] progrès de la civilisation devrait s'accomplir par des moyens [illegible] plus doux que dans les temps passés. Ces paroles, qui con[illegible] bien des difficultés, ont trouvé de l'écho en France. Je [illegible] avec vous un traité d'alliance qui servira à la conquête [illegible] pacifique du progrès."

M. Rodot also returned thanks on behalf of the junior Bar of France, The other toasts were acknowledged by Lord Brougham, Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, Lord Kingsdown, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Fitzroy Kelly and the Lord Justice Knight Bruce. M. Berryer left London yesterday morning for Paris, accompanied by Lord Brougham, M. Desmarest and M. Rodot. Owing to pressing professional engagements, he was unable to prolong his stay in England.

NORTH LONDON INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.—The Industrial Exhibition of Working Men which has been opened at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, for the last three weeks, was closed on Monday, when the Chancellor of the Exchequer delivered an address on the rights, duties, and dignity of labour. The Exhibition has been most successful, having been visited by about 250,000 persons, and the proceeds have not only been enough to pay all expenses, but to leave a surplus of more than 1000*l.* for future exhibitions. Another gratifying fact in connection with the Exhibition is that not a single article has been stolen or injured, and no single police case of any kind has arisen from it. The names of the successful candidates for prizes will be announced in the course of a few days, and the prizes will be publicly awarded by the Earl of Shaftesbury in January. The following is an extract from Mr. Gladstone's address:—

"No person can, even as a contemporary observer, reflect upon the recent history of this country without perceiving that it is fraught with the promise of most important results, not only to the community as a community, but particularly to the labouring classes, and the greatest lesson which our recent history ought to teach those classes—the great lesson which I will presume to say it has taught them, and is teaching them, after a dependence and thankfulness to the Almighty for the gifts and opportunities they enjoy, is the lesson of self-reliance. Now, I believe it is not possible in a well-organised society that any one class should make essential progress in any way except through its own exertions. I know—I trust I do not forget—that there are duties of class towards class, as there are duties of the individual man towards his fellow-man. But the duty performed by one class towards another, and especially by the higher towards the humbler classes, will be found generally to consist in the mitigation, possibly the removal, but more frequently the mitigation, of evils and abuses of a gross and galling nature. But the mere mitigation of abuses will never give energy and dignity of character to a class, and especially to the great labouring classes of the community. It is upon themselves they must depend in order to exhibit in the face of their fellow-countrymen those characteristics which constitute the true basis of greatness. I know that it is too true that the advance of civilisation and the improvements which have been made in our laws and institutions do not and cannot be said as yet to have touched the entire mass of the community. There are still those who are said to belong to the 'dangerous classes.' There are still those who, in much larger numbers, are said, and with truth are said, to belong to the helpless classes: those upon whom illness and bereavements fall, and not only such, but even whole classes of persons, particularly unmarried females, who, under the conditions of modern society, are in a social position still beset with difficulties [illegible] bulk of the labouring population in the great towns of [illegible] country, and particularly in this vast metropolis, consists [illegible] who being dependent upon their own labour have the means of making their labour as a general rule effective for their subsistence, even for their comfort, and the comfort of their wives and families. Now, much has been done by good, honest, and wise legislation towards setting free the industry of the labouring man and enabling him to carry that best and almost the only commodity which he can possess to the best market it can command. I am far from thinking that Parliament has as yet done all in that respect which we may reasonably hope for; but perhaps it would be true—I believe it would be true—to say we cannot look again for such vast and [illegible] improvements of the law, for such large and beneficial revolution in the condition of the labouring classes of this country at any future time as has been brought about within the last 20 or 25 years, partly by the progress of new gigantic and most useful inventions, and partly by a wise legislation in Parliament. Therefore, ladies and gentlemen, and you, my friends, whom I address in such numbers, of the working-classes, bear with me when I say that it is upon yourselves you must depend. If you are looking for improvement in your state, if you are looking for a larger admission to the direct rights of citizenship, if you are looking for the increase of the comforts of life, if you are looking to be able to make better provision for the education of your children, if you are looking to the making provision for the contingency of your sudden removal—for each and for all of those things, depend upon it that, under the favour of Almighty God, it is upon yourselves you must rely. And, therefore, ladies and gentlemen, it is that I cordially and sincerely congratulate you upon an Exhibition such as that we have witnessed here. A sentiment of admiration not unmingled with surprise will, I think, possess the mind of the impartial observer when he comes within these walls and sees, or has seen, the nature of the works they contain. We see here an evidence of the growth of the labouring class. I must say that in one point of view an interest attaches to what we see within this Agricultural Hall such as never attached to the more gorgeous Exhibitions of 1851 and 1862. Those great Exhibitions and their promoters will have reason to reckon among the many beneficial results of these Exhibitions the fact that without doubt they gave the first suggestion for the creation of a spectacle such as we now behold. But in these great Exhibitions we saw what the wealth of the world could do, we saw what were the resources of skill and industry, aided by the profuse employment of capital. But here we have drawn upon no such resources of capital. We see here as it were in its first formation the efforts of British labour, and we have reason to congratulate the country first of all for the possession of such skill as is here displayed; and, secondly, upon the disposition to use for such healthful and beneficial purposes the scanty leisure afforded after the hours of toil and the remaining energies which the beneficial exercise of labour has left unexhausted. As I have said, it is the property of these exhibitions to open before us a long vista in the future, as well as to supply us with most interesting suggestions for the present. But I see also in them a manifestation of the desire of the labouring classes to play out honestly and in the most conciliatory spirit the game of life. The labouring class, like every other class, has had its lessons to learn. It has had to learn how to bear the reverses of fortune, and how that lesson has been learnt the recent history of Lancashire will tell to our posterity. But the labouring class has also had to learn a lesson—I venture to say a still more difficult one to learn—the lesson of respecting, under whatever pressure, the rights, the independence, and freedom of choice of a minority of their own body. But that is a lesson with regard to which I ardently hope—nay, I confidently believe—great progress has been made. Sure I am that if the minds of the operative class be set upon a permanent improvement in the condition of its members, speaking from what I see within this Hall, I say they are walking in the right path. Let them show before their fellow-countrymen the gifts which they possess; let them continue to exhibit in every relation of life that obedience to law, nay, that love of law which they have shown within these walls; let them carry home more and more to the minds of every class of the community the conviction that we of this country are all one in heart, one in hope, one in desire, one in interest. Let them take for their motto the union and harmony of all classes one with another, and I am confident they will find that whatever improvements they may think they have a right to expect at the hands of those who are invested with the privilege of governing them, they may rest confident in the belief that such improvements will never be long or unduly delayed. It is with an earnest mind and heart I express to you a fervent desire that this exhibition, and all that has belonged to this exhibition, may be productive of happy results, not only in the present but also in future years. My concluding duty is to declare to you that this exhibition is closed, but when I say that it is closed I do not speak of it as of a thing dead and departed. If it be closed, it is closed like the year, which, when it dies away, by the very process of its dying makes preparation for another spring. It is closed like the corn which we drop into the earth, and which is placed there in order that its death may be the precursor of renovated life and of renewed fertility. That, happily, is not mere anticipation. Already there are indications upon every side that the example which you have set is a fruitful example. The example which was set to you some six months ago has been fruitful in the production of your exhibition, and the example you have set has already led to such results that I could give you a list of towns and places in which it is contemplated to hold similar exhibitions. Let us not, therefore, in speaking of this exhibition as having reached its natural termination in the sense that the doors of the hall will be closed, and the objects here collected will be dispersed—let us not forget that it still retains its moral force, and still promises to be, as we hope it will be, the happy parent of many children—of scenes like this, and, if possible, exceeding this It will help to confirm in the minds of the labouring community the useful lesson which they have already learnt, and will likewise prove to be an effective means of leading them onward in the path, not of illusory and unsubstantial, but of true and real progress and healthful and Christian civilization."

METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS.—At the last meeting of the Board of Works, Major Lyon asked who bore the expense of the deputation to Carlisle and Edinburgh, to inspect the drainage works of those places, and whether the Board paid for those members who stayed down there for their own pleasure. The Chairman said that the expense of the deputation down and back was borne by the Board, but the arrangement that was made was that there should be just sufficient time allowed to inspect the works, and return, and that those who chose to stay longer were to pay all extra expenses. Several members had availed themselves of the opportunity to take a little pleasure, and had paid the extra money for it. Mr. Crellin and Mr. H. Lowman Taylor, who were unable to go, expressed their satisfaction at the arrangement. The Chairman said that a report of their inspection would be drawn up and laid before the Board.

PROF. FARADAY AND SPIRITUALISM.—Prof. Faraday has sent the following reply in answer to a spiritual invitation:—"Gentlemen, I am obliged by your courteous invitation, but really I have been so disappointed by the 'manifestations' to which my notice has at different times been called that I am not encouraged to give any more attention to them, and I therefore leave those to which you refer in the hands of the professors of legerdemain. If spirit communications not utterly worthless should happen to start into activity, I will trust the spirits to find out for themselves how they can move my attention. I am tired of them. With thanks, I am very truly yours, M. FARADAY.—Royal Institution, Oct. 8."

GENERAL TODLEBEN last week visited the camp at Aldershott, accompanied by the Earl of Cardigan, and was present at an inspection and review of the whole of the troops at that station. During his recent visit to Portsmouth he was the guest of General Lord W. Paulet, and inspected the various objects of interest in and around Portsmouth, the lines of fortifications, the dockyard, the turret ship Royal Sovereign, the gunnery ship Excellent, &c. On Saturday he went to Plymouth on a visit to General Hutchinson, the commander in chief, and during his stay he inspected the new fortifications, the dockyards, and other objects of interest. On Wednesday he left for London to dine with Earl de Grey and Ripon, the Minister of War. Next week he will go to Liverpool, where he will be the guest of the Russian Consul.

OPENING OF SOUTHWARK BRIDGE.—On Tuesday last this bridge was thrown open to the public toll free, the Corporation having leased the bridge for the sum of 18340*l.* from the company for six months, with the option of extending the period to 12 months, on payment of an additional sum of 2750*l.* Lord Mayor Lawrence officiated on the occasion, as the last act of his official year. The ceremony included a procession with the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress in the state carriage, accompanied by his usual retainers, with a few members of the corporation in private carriages, and a few flags and steamers waved from the centre of the bridge. On the arrival of the Lord Mayor the barriers were thrown down, his lordship declared the bridge open free of toll, and the ceremony terminated.

FUNERAL OF MR. LEECH.—The funeral of Mr. Leech took place on Friday at Kensal Green Cemetary. It was conducted in a private manner, only the relatives and a few of his literary associates accompanying the body from the house; but a large body of friends and admirers of his genius met the procession in the cemetery. The grave in which he was buried is on the south side of the cemetery, and only separated by one from that of his friend Mr. Thackeray, whose funeral he had attended 10 months ago.

THE ERITH EXPLOSION.—The Coroner's inquest on the persons killed by the late explosion at Erith was resumed on Tuesday. The evidence related to what may be called an episode in the main inquiry. A witness at a previous sitting having stated that the Government magazines were conducted in a much more careless manner than private ones, the Marquis of Hartington sent some workmen from Purfleet to disprove that statement. These men described the mode in which the powder was dealt with, the unserviceable powder and the defective casks disposed of, apparently to the satisfaction of the jury. The witnesses further stated that the Government, often purchased new casks from the Messrs. Hall's cooperage, and nothing could be better than the casks obtained from that quarter. The inquiry was then adjourned for another week, the Coroner stating that he had no doubt that the inquest would then be concluded.

THE CITY AND THE SEWAGE.—A requisition, signed by almost every banker in the City, as well as by a number of the principal merchants, has been presented to the Lord Mayor on his accession to office, requesting him to call a meeting of the citizens of London to consider the best means to be adopted for securing the proper utilisation of the sewage in the interests of the ratepayers and of agriculture.

VALUE OF LAND IN THE CITY.—At the Lord Mayor's Court last week, before Mr. Commissioner Kerr and a special jury, a compensation case of "Hayward v. The Metropolitan Railway Company" was tried, in order to award a sum for the house 17, Barbican, in which Milton had for some time resided, and which is still standing. On the part of the claimant nearly 3700*l.* was demanded, and on the part of the company 1500*l.* had been offered, and the value given was from 1999*l.* to 2200*l.* As an instance of the value of property in the City of London, it was proved in evidence that as much as 2,000,000*l.* per acre had been given. The jury eventually awarded 3250*l.* At the Lord Mayor's Court on Saturday, before Mr. Karslake, Q.C. as assessor, and a special jury, a compensation case which has been pending some time, "Lawrence and others v. the Charing Cross Railway Company," was heard. The claim in this case was in respect of two houses, 5 and 6, Cannon Street, near Turnwheel Lane, which were built in 1852 by Alderman Lawrence, the Lord Mayor, and let respectively at 350*l.* and 450*l.* One was leased to Baron Rothschild and would expire in 1866, and the other to a public company and would expire in 1874. The principal question raised before the jury was the value of the reversion. All the witnesses admitted that property in the city had greatly increased in value within the last few years, and "enormously" so within the "commercial area." Several witnesses described the houses as worth respectively 650*l.* and 850*l.* a year. On the part of Alderman Lawrence the property was estimated by different valuers at from 29,000*l.* to 30,700*l.* On the other hand the valuers for the company estimated it from 21,000*l.* to 21,600*l.*, including the usual 10 per cent. for a compulsory sale. The jury assessed the value at 25,100*l.*, including 100*l.* for fixtures. Another Court was held on Saturday to assess the sum to be given in the case of "Elder v. The Metropolitan Railway Company," for some freehold land in Barbican. The claim was 8500*l.*, which was opposed by the Company. The jury awarded 8300*l.* for the property.

MARK LANE.—Monday, Nov. 7.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and there being some inquiry for Yorkshire it met with a ready sale at the prices of this day se'nnight. There was a moderate attendance, but only a trifling and very retail demand for foreign Wheat at late rates; with the exception of Russian, sales of which ex ship were pressed at a reduction of 1s. per qr., the arrivals being considerable. Prime malting Barley sold freely at the prices of this day week, but secondary qualities were difficult of sale and rather cheaper. In the value of Beans and Peas there was no quotable alteration. Oats were a slow sale at about late rates. Flour was unaltered in value.

Friday, Nov. 11.

The Wheat trade has continued inactive, but on the whole the tone was better than of late, and the supplies from abroad being moderate, former rates are fully maintained. The same applies to malting Barley, but grinding is a slow sale at low prices; the Scotch markets quote a reduction of 1s. per qr. for all sorts of this corn. Oats move off slowly. The value of Beans and Peas still tends downwards. Flour meets a good demand at extreme prices for best sacks and fine barrels for shipping, common and sour neglected. Since Friday last 51 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has been quiet, a moderate business has been done in Wheat and Maize at late rates, but a better tone prevailed yesterday, after the reduction of the Bank rate, and Wheat was improving in value. Paris, Nov. 10.—Business has not been very active, but prices have improved 6d. per sack for Flour and 1s. per qr. for Wheat. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 31,000 cwt. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. 6d. per 280 lb. The arrivals of English Grain during the week have been small, but good of foreign Wheat and Oats. There was a poor attendance at this morning's market and but few transactions took place in any article. We do not alter our quotations of Monday.

Liverpool: Nov. 8.—We have had a rather full attendance at our market to-day, and Wheat has commanded a fair consumptive inquiry at previous rates. Flour from scarcity is the turn against buyers. Indian Corn rules dull at 3d. per qr. decline. Oats and Oatmeal more saleable at full prices. Beans and Barley steady at previous rates.

Friday, Nov. 11.—Moderate attendance. Wheat in fair request at about late rates. Flour a turn dearer, with more inquiry. Indian Corn steady: mixed, 22s. 6d. Beans unaltered. Oats and Oatmeal fair sale. Prices hardening.

News of the Week.

The Landsthing of the Danish Rigsraad adopted the Treaty of Peace on Friday by a majority of 55 to 4. The Treaty was signed by the King on Saturday; and the formal exchange of the ratifications took place on Wednesday at Vienna.

The Emperor of Austria delivered a Speech from the Throne on Monday at the formal opening of the Reichsrath. His Majesty announced his intention, at the close of the present session, to allow the lesser Reichsrath to come into operation, and to promote constitutional activity in all his kingdoms, and throughout his whole empire. He said that, animated as he was by the earnest endeavour to assist in the preservation and maintenance of general peace, he congratulated himself on the good understanding and friendly relations existing between his Government and the other Great Powers of Europe, and should not cease to uphold these relations, and to do everything in order to preserve his empire from foreign complications. His Majesty made no allusion to Italy, but referred at some length to the question of Schleswig-Holstein, which had, he said, been settled "in the most honourable manner." He expressed his satisfaction that the courage of the allied troops and the navies of Austria and Prussia had "conquered that splendid prize," and that the "wise and just reticence of the neutral Powers" had facilitated the final understanding. The late events in Poland had necessitated exceptional measures for the maintenance of internal order, but these measures would be constantly relaxed as the popular excitement subsided, and would, he hoped, be entirely withdrawn at no distant period. His Majesty next adverted to the financial situation of the Empire, which he admitted to be extraordinary and precarious. Everywhere, he said, the money markets had been convulsed; the demands of the State had increased, and trade had suffered beneath a heavy pressure. He therefore recommended to their attention various financial and other measures, by which the arrangements of the financial year would have to be regulated on improved principles; the incidence of taxation would be so distributed that large results would be obtained through more equitable methods; tariffs favourable to foreign industry, yet beneficial to Austria, would be contrived; and the railway system be developed by special legislation and generous charters. His Majesty concluded by expressing his firm confidence that, with the counsel and assistance of the Reichsrath, he should succeed in conducting the empire entrusted to him by Providence with a strong hand towards a fortunate future.

The general debate on the Convention in the Italian Parliament closed on Wednesday, and the discussion of the articles commenced on Thursday. The rising in Venetia is considered so serious by the Austrian Government that 18 districts of the provinces of Friuli and Trevisa have been placed under martial law, and troops have been sent to guard the passes into the Tyrol. A severe engagement took place on Wednesday between the Italian troops and the Garibaldians, at Bagolino in Northern Lombardy, with great loss on both sides. The conflict terminated in the capture or dispersion of all the insurgents.

From the seat of war in Virginia we learn that General Grant's troops are engaged in building log houses, preparatory it is supposed to going into winter quarters. The Federal losses in the late attack of Generals Grant and Butler on General Lee's lines are said to have been between 4000 and 5000. Two entire brigades of General Butler's division were cut off from retreat by the fire of the Confederate batteries, and ultimately captured. General Hood has crossed the Tennessee river at the head of 30,000 men, and is moving northwards, while General Forrest is operating in Kentucky. The defeat of General Price is not confirmed; and it is now said that he is merely retiring to Arkansas with the spoils of his late campaign in Missouri. A mass meeting of merchants and bankers has been held at New York to denounce Mr. Lincoln's policy, and to call for a change in the Administration. From various States there is an outcry raised against the open violation of the liberty of voting by the military authorities. General Butler has suddenly arrived in New York, and it is supposed that he has been sent by President Lincoln to supersede General Dix during the elections.

The Prince of Wales went out shooting, accompanied by Earl Cowley. Princess Helena rode in the Riding School. Princess Louisa went out driving. On Thursday morning Princess Helena came to London. The Prince of Wales went out hunting with the harriers.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, in consequence of the illness of Lord Derby from a severe attack of gout, have indefinitely postponed their visit to Knowsley and Liverpool.

The Cabinet.—A Cabinet Council was held on Tuesday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street. Another Council was held yesterday.

Ministerial Appointment.—Lord Dufferin has been appointed Under-Secretary for India, in succession to Lord Wodehouse.

Diplomatic Appointment.—The Queen has appointed the Hon. Peter Campbell Scarlett, C.B., late Minister at Athens, to be Minister Plenipotentiary to the Emperor of Mexico.

COLONIAL APPOINTMENTS.—The Queen has appointed Major-General Sir Henry Knight Storks, G.C.B., to be Governor of Malta and its dependencies; and Rawson William Rawson, Esq., C.B., to be Governor of the Bahama Islands.

ABANDONMENT OF TRANSPORTATION TO AUSTRALIA.—The Times of yesterday announces that her Majesty's Government does not intend to enforce the rights of the mother country against the public opinion of the colonists; and that, subject to the approval of Parliament, transportation to the Australian Continent will cease within a limited period.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—Prince La Tour d'Auvergne has left for London. M. Thouvenel has been suffering from a serious indisposition, which has inspired great anxiety. He is, however, said to be out of danger. The Presse asserts that M. Fould on Wednesday signed the Budget for 1866, which shows a surplus of one million. The Patrie asserts that England intends calling upon the Powers to protest collectively against the capture of the Florida, and to support the claims of Brazil. The Constitutionnel of Tuesday, in an article signed by M. Paulin Limayrac, analyses the late speech of General della Marmora, to which it gives its entire approval. The Convention of the 15th September seems to be viewed with great disfavour by the French prelates. Mgr. Plantier, Bishop of Nismes, has issued a pastoral letter to the clergy of his diocess, in which he condemns, in no measured terms, the "declared enemies and hypocritical friends" of the Pope, and expresses his indignation against those who are anxious to see a reconciliation effected between the Holy See and Italy. He then enumerates the crimes of the Italian Government, and adds:—

"Such is the Italy which is authorised to assume a haughty bearing and to demand advances and reparation from Pius IX.; and if Pius IX. will make no concesssion, if the despoiled will not apologise to the spoiler, if the martyr will not ask pardon of the executioner for the blows received, the poor Pope will be convicted of blindness and obstinacy, and be considered doubly guilty because he can neither appreciate the gentleness of the monstrous outrages he has suffered, nor bless the parricidal hand which has inflicted all these injuries. By dint of calumnies, unjust reproaches, and arrogant counsels addressed to him, by dint of designating him as a fair prey for spoliation, and of speaking of him with brutality, though innocent, while Italy, so deeply guilty, is treated with all tenderness, the Pope has been driven to that extreme limit where a helpless Government only exists by a kind of miracle which holds it suspended over the gulf. Deprived of all serious support from within, since his army has been massacred; soon to be left without support from France, who is about to withdraw her troops; no longer connected with other crowns by any common bond, since most of the Governments have ceased to have either among themselves or with Rome any community of political doctrines or rights—all earthly hopes seem to have vanished."

Under the recent convention between France and Switzerland the export duty upon rags from France, which by the Treaty of Commerce with England was fixed at 12 francs, will be reduced, by successive diminutions spread over a period of three years, to 4 francs on 100 kilogrammes. Great Britain will of course participate in the advantages of this reduction.

SPAIN.—The Epoca of Friday, in an article on Spanish Finance, says:—

"According to news which we have received from London it is certain that a sum of 100,000,000 reals has been obtained in that city to meet the necessities of the Spanish Treasury. A like sum has been offered by several French capitalists. All the efforts of the Minister of Finance tend to bring as many foreign capitalists as possible into our market, seeing that a great part of the precious metals in our country is absorbed by the redemption of debt and by public works."

The same paper says that the Government has refused to allow a meeting to be held in Madrid by the Democratic party. A Royal decree has been issued appointing Admiral Pareja to the command of the Pacific squadron, in the place of Admiral Pinzon, who has been recalled. The whole Peruvian question is to be brought before the Chambers. Inundations have occurred near Valencia, whereby the irrigation of 27 villages has been destroyed, and much loss of life caused. M. Adolphe Barrot returned to Paris on the 16th inst. The adjudication on the contracts for the construction of the railway to the Asturias took place on the 10th inst. It is feared that the Spanish steamer Luis, which left Gibraltar for Malaga on the evening of the 26th of October, has been lost with all her crew and passengers.

DENMARK.—The Landsthing of the Rigsraad held a public sitting on Friday, when the Treaty was approved by a majority of 55, four members abstaining from voting. All the Schleswig members present voted either against the Treaty or not at all. A private sitting of the Council of State was held on Saturday, at which the King signed the Treaty. Count Moltke Hvidtfeldt, the Danish Plenipotentiary, immediately left for Vienna, in charge of the ratified Treaty. Three Royal proclamations were issued on Thursday. The first releases the inhabitants of the ceded Duchies from their oath of allegiance, and the second is a farewell address to the people of Schleswig and Holstein. The third is addressed to the Danes, and says:—

"The separation from the Kingdom of those inhabitants of Schleswig who were bound to Denmark both by sentiment and language is the most painful sacrifice of all. We have lost much, but have not lost hope. The future belongs to those who are in earnest!"

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.—In compliance with the terms of the treaty of peace, the Austrian and Prussian troops began their march homewards as soon as the ratification of the treaty had taken place. An address was presented on Friday to the Duke of Augustenburg by the magistrates and a deputation of Kiel citizens, on the occasion of the conclusion of peace. In his reply the Duke said:—

"We must, above all, thank the Sovereigns of the great German Powers and their armies. The Duchies of Schleswig-Holstein will always remember what they owe to the common German Fatherland, and especially to Prussia. If we do make a sacrifice in this direction, we act in our own most immediate interests. The Duchies could play an important part if their position and their sailors were made use of by the Prussian navy. I hope that my rights will soon be generally acknowledged."

The uncle of the Duke of Augustenburg, the Prince of Noer, has married an American lady named Lee, and has consequently been obliged to renounce his rights as member of a sovereign house, his bride having refused to consent to a morganatic marriage. At his solicitation, the Emperor of Austria has conferred on him the title of prince, and the children born of the marriage will bear the title of Counts of Noer. The prince can no longer lay claim to the title of "highness," and his agnatic rights will devolve on his only son by his first marriage.

SWITZERLAND.—The elections to the Grand Council of Geneva have resulted in a victory for the Independents, who will have a majority of 20 in that assembly.

BELGIUM.—The King returned to Brussels from Paris on Monday night, and was received at the station by the Duchess of Brabant and the Count of Flanders. His Majesty immediately proceeded to his palace at Laeken. The Count of Flanders will pass the winter at Ceylon, and not in Egypt as originally announced.

PRUSSIA.—Lord Napier, the new English Ambassador, arrived in Berlin on Wednesday from St. Petersburg. M. Benedetti, the new French Ambassador, is expected to arrive in Berlin to-day. The ratifications of the treaties relative to the entry of Bavaria, Würtemberg, Darmstadt, and Nassau into the Zollverein, were exchanged at Berlin on Saturday. On Wednesday, after the completion of the ratification of the treaty of peace with Denmark, the King of Prussia conferred on Count von Bismarck the insignia of the Order of the Black Eagle, as a recognition of his services. The Court of Assizes of Berlin has just been engaged in the trial of three prisoners, Louis Grothe, his mother, now a widow named Quinche, and a young woman called Marie Fischer, on the charge of having murdered Professor Grégy. The murder, which took place last spring under mysterious circumstances, caused great emotion at Berlin. In the evening of the 17th April Professor Grégy left his home, and although he generally returned at an early hour, was not seen again alive. Two days afterwards the body of a man was found in the Spree sewed up in a sack. The head was leaning on the chest, the legs were bent up, and a rope was drawn tightly round the neck. The body was that of Professor Grégy. Numerous marks of violence found on the body showed that he had fallen under the hands of several assailants. The head had no less than twelve wounds on it, most of which had penetrated to the brain. The right hand was also covered with wounds, and two of the fingers were wanting. The police, after long searches, discovered that the murder had been committed in a cellar inhabited by three persons of infamous character—the woman Quinche, her son Louis Grothe, and Marie Fischer, the son's mistress, with whom it is supposed Professor Grégy had an intrigue. The jury found them guilty and they were condemned to death. The prisoners have all made a full confession of their guilt.

AUSTRIA.—The formal exchange of the ratifications of the Treaty of Peace between the German Powers and Denmark took place at Vienna on Wednesday morning. The Reichsrath reassembled on Saturday. Archduke Rainer acted as President in the Upper House. He made a short speech, at the conclusion of which he called for three cheers for the Emperor. In the Lower House Herr von Schmerling occupied the presidential chair; 137 members were present, including nine Poles. Herr von Hasner made a long speech, in the course of which he alluded to the questions of the day, and concluded by expressing his conviction that the present state of things demanded the concentration of all their energies upon home affairs, in which it was imperative they should go forward without haste, as without delay. On Monday the formal opening of the Reichsrath by the Emperor in person took place in the great Hall of Ceremonies of the Hofburg. His Majesty delivered the following Speech from the Throne:—

"Honoured Members of my Reichsrath,—After arrangements have been made during the former part of the Session by which the Reichsrath, in force of its constitutional right, is enabled to treat subjects of legislation common to all my kingdoms and countries, I have convoked that body for the execution of this purpose, as the collective representation of my empire. While I now formally open its Session I greet you, the Archdukes and Princes of my House, most honoured and illustrious gentlemen of both Houses of the Reichsrath. It is my intention, so soon as the termination of your duties shall have brought this Session to a close, to allow the lesser Reichsrath to come into operation. I also expect that in the eastern portion of my empire the same constitutional activity which has so happily prevailed in my principality of Siebenburgen will everywhere begin afresh. To this object, which I desire shortly to see achieved, not only in the interest of those kingdoms, but also of my whole empire, the chief endeavours of my Government are directed. Confidence and real unanimity will conduce to blessed results. A series of events, important not only to my [illegible] also to the whole empire, has occurred [illegible] close of the last Session and the present [illegible] acceptance of the Mexican Imperial Th[illegible] consent, on the part of my brother, the Arch[illegible] Maximilian, now Emperor Maximilian I[illegible] rendered necessary a settlement of the rights of [illegible] thereby brought under consideration. For [illegible] executed a family compact at Miramar on the [illegible] the present year, which my Government is [illegible] municate to you. Animated by the earnest [illegible] assist in the preservation and maintenance of [illegible] I congratulate myself upon the good [illegible] friendly relations existing between my Govern[illegible] other great Powers of Europe. I shall not cease [illegible] these relations, and to do everything in order to [illegible] empire, at present occupied with so many [illegible] from foreign complications. A subject of d[illegible] years in the north of Germany has just been [illegible] most honourable manner. The representatives [illegible] will participate with truly patriotic feeling in [illegible] that a close which contains the fulfilment of the [illegible] tations has been put to the war between the Ger[illegible] and Denmark by the Treaty of Peace, signed at [illegible] the 30th of October, and the ratification of which is [illegible] in a few days. The courage of the allied troops and [illegible] of Austria and Prussia has conquered that splendid [illegible] the wise and just forbearance of the neutral Powers [illegible] facilitated the final understanding. The high [illegible] unanimity between myself and my august Federal [illegible] King of Prussia, has again been proved by mem[illegible] But I do not doubt that in face of the glorious [illegible] solution of the question by which Germany has [illegible] to her inmost core, the entire country will [illegible] concord which affords so powerful a guarantee [illegible] safety and welfare, as well as for the quiet and [illegible] Europe. To my regret, the unfortunate influences [illegible] in the Kingdom of Poland have recently exercised [illegible] countries bordering my empire have imposed upon my Government the necessity of undertaking exceptional [illegible] those countries for the preservation of internal [illegible] the protection of the persons and property of the [illegible] population. They have been accompanied with [illegible] results for the security of these imperilled interests [illegible] perceived with satisfaction that some of these measures [illegible] already shown themselves capable of being dispensed [illegible] and I gladly give myself up to the expectation that [illegible] be entirely withdrawn at no distant period. To [illegible] my kingdom will claim your special attention [illegible] not possible that the unfavourable conditions which [illegible] where govern the European money-markets [illegible] without obstructive influences on the progress of [illegible] politico-economical and financial development of [illegible] In this unmistakably difficult situation the [illegible] of the increased demands of the State has yet constantly [illegible] punctually provided for. The earnest striving to [illegible] affords satisfactory expectation that when the extraordinary [illegible] State expenses still at present existing have been [illegible] the disturbance in the finance and in the system of [illegible] Budget will at last be removed. Two Budgets will [illegible] tionally be laid before you in the present session—[illegible] the year 1865, and immediately afterwards that for [illegible] By this transitory measure it is intended to introduce [illegible] succession of time in the sessions of the Reichsrath [illegible] Provincial Diets, and also insure the possibility of [illegible] the labours of the Budget prior to the commencement of the [illegible] financial year. The first financial law constitutionally [illegible] has been included in the general Budget for 1866. It will [illegible] be laid before you in this session by my Government. I recommend to your especial attention the Bills to be laid before you for the regulation of the direct taxation, the speedy settlement of which is to be desired as much in the interest of the State as [illegible] and equitable partition of the burden of taxation on a provision better corresponding to the demands of the times. Your attention will also be directed to the consideration of other financial measures with the object of improving existing laws, and the partial, not unimportant, alleviation of the burdens of the taxpayers. I mention in this category [illegible] to lessen the poll-tax is my principality of Siebenburgen. For several years past the politico economical unity of the Empire, which is designated in the 19th article of the Federal Act as the object of the efforts of the Federation, has taken a more decided shape in later treaties, and one more in accordance with the requirements of the time. This question has claimed the full attention of my Government. To bring about a successful solution of this problem, which is of importance to the Federal Diet, and greatly concerns the interests of all, negotiations have become necessary, which are now being conducted by my Government with that earnestness befitting the subject. The result of these negotiations will be communicated to you by my Government, and I hope that they will not be without favourable influence upon the establishment of the new customs' tariff which is to come into operation in the course of this Session. Regarding the advantages which will accrue to my empire in every respect by the increase of means of communication, I have commissioned my Government at once to [illegible] uninterrupted and energetic labours to the preparation of a plan for the formation of a network of railways suitable to the wants of my kingdoms and principalities. Conformably to these views, my Government will bring before you a series of Bills in reference to the State guarantee to several railway undertakings. At any rate, in the course of the Session, and as soon as possible, a Bill will be submitted to constitutional consideration, having for its object the construction of a line to the principality of Transylvania and [illegible] interior of that country. With deep regret I have perceived the heavy pressure to which trade in my territories, as elsewhere, has been exposed; yet the advanced period already taken up induces me to hope that, should the blessings of peace, its own power and [illegible] lation, it will again attain a lasting and satisfactory [illegible] ment. Several Bills having reference to political interests, as well as other matters coming within the province of the assembled Reichsrath, are being prepared by Government to be laid before you, and will be brought under discussion in the course of the Session. It is my [illegible] fulfilment of which your devoted zeal is a guarantee. The question to which you are about to turn your attention must be speedily settled, since a series of important and [illegible] Bills have been prepared by my Government for the [illegible] tion of the lesser Reichsrath, whose return depends on this condition. Honoured Members of my Reichsrath, I now dismiss you with the assurance of my Imperial favour and grace to the consideration of the important questions before you, I am not unaware of their difficulties; but I have confidence that, with your counsel and assistance, I shall succeed in conducting the empire intrusted to me [illegible] dence with a strong hand towards a fortunate future. In this confidence from the love and fidelity, from the [illegible] and strength of my subjects, whom I recommend to the Almighty protection of Heaven, wishing from my [illegible] heart that their destinies may conduce to the happiness and fame of their common fatherland."

In the Lower House of the Reichsrath on Thursday Herr von Plener brought forward the Budget for 1866. The total revenue is estimated at 518 millions [illegible] and the total expenditure at 548 millions; [illegible] of the deficit will be covered by the indemnity to be paid by the Duchies for the Austrian portion of the [illegible] war expenses, and the remainder will be provided for by a loan. In reply to a question whether the Government intended to bring in a Bill on Ministerial responsibility, Herr von Schmerling promised an answer at an early date.

VENETIA.—On the 8th inst. a band of insurgents attacked the Austrians at Andreis, near Maniago. Several Austrians were killed and wounded, among the former being a lieutenant. The insurgents had one wounded, who remained a prisoner in the hands of the Austrians. On the 10th an engagement took place in the district of Carnia, near Moggio, between the Austrians and insurgents. Martial law has been proclaimed in 18 districts of the provinces of Friuli and Treviso. Sentinels and patrols are ordered to fire upon assemblages after the first summons to disperse. The penalty of death will be remitted in the case of those who voluntarily surrender themselves, or who are given up by the population. It is officially announced that a band of insurgents is proceeding towards the mountains of the Tyrol. Troops have been sent to guard the mountain passes. The official Gazette of Turin emphatically condemns this insurrection, and says that it is impossible for the Italian Government to permit a violation of the frontiers, or to allow itself on any account to be involved or compromised in the movement. A severe engagement took place on the 16th, between the Italian troops and the Garibaldians at Bagolino, in Northern Lombardy. Both sides lost many men in killed and wounded. The conflict terminated in the capture of a part and the dispersion of the rest of the Garibaldian band.

ITALY.—It is rumoured that certain modifications will probably take place in the Italian Ministry, General della Marmora and several other Ministers having only temporarily accepted their portfolios. In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Friday Signor Petruccelli spoke against the Bill. Signor Dondes stated that he should vote in favour of it, being convinced that Florence would prove the definitive capital of Italy. In the sitting of Saturday General Della Marmora addressed the Chamber to the following effect:—

"I do not wish to deliver a speech, but to make some declarations. Before the Convention was concluded I was opposed to it, fearing it would disturb the already cemented union of the Italian provinces, and occasion the renewal of conflicts at home. This I pointed out to M. Drouyn de Lhuys and the Emperor. On returning to Italy I was led, contrary to my intentions, to accept office under a difficult state of things; then, finding a treaty signed, I threw aside all apprehension, and prepared myself to support it in concert with my colleagues. I observed, contrary to my previous impressions, that there was no real danger of discord, no risk of a renewal of disturbances. I saw also that everybody in Italy regarded the engagements of September as serious, and the sentiments manifested by Parliament on the occasion of the recent exchange of despatches with France prove the loyalty with which the Convention is regarded. We have, therefore, been able to say that the Ministry will have the strength to execute the treaty — strength derived from your votes and the moral support of the country. The question of the transfer of the capital is a delicate one for me, a Piedmontese. Turin, militarily, cannot be the capital, but the public mind should have been prepared for the news of its change. I regret the suspicion which has been cast upon the intentions of France. I have been able to approach the Emperor on several occasions, and have found him disposed ever since 1852 to occupy himself at some time with Italian affairs. He persisted, notwithstanding certain opposition, that Italian affairs should be discussed at the Congress of Paris. You remember the Crimea and the glorious Italian war? The King having had an interview with the Emperor at Valleggia, the result was that the former only accepted the preliminaries of the Peace of Villafranca as far as he himself was concerned. On Count Cavour's death the Emperor generously recognised the Kingdom of Italy, thus rendering possible its recognition by the other Powers. In 1862 he sent his brother to compliment the King at Naples. Perhaps the Emperor had once doubts, as some of us have had, of the possibility of Italian unity, but now I am convinced that it makes our unity irrevocable. We will not take one step backwards; we will go forward prudently and slowly, but without intermission. The Roman question still remains perfectly clear in all men's minds. As regards the mode of solution, it is not undesirable to have time before us. I have great confidence in the Emperor, who has entirely devoted himself to the Roman question. I believe also that he will do as for Venice; I speak as a private person. Some solution will become possible with respect to Venice. I believe the intentions of the Emperor of Austria may be brought to fresh negotiations with this object. I renew the expression of my wish that you should approve the treaty."

Signor Musolino then spoke at great length against the Convention, which he considered fatal. He proposed to fortify Turin. In the sitting of Monday Signor Berti opposed the transfer of the capital, believing that it would lessen the strength of Italy. The Marquis Pepoli said that the Convention had relieved Italy, whose influence abroad the French occupation of Rome had diminished; and had asserted her stability and unity, because the transfer of the capital was a serious pledge that France would abandon her ideas of a Federation. It had freed the French Government from the responsibility of a reactionary policy at Rome and relieved the National party. Because Russia and Germany had settled the Schleswig-Holstein and Polish questions among themselves, France had solved in Italy the question of the occupation of Rome. He hoped the Convention would re-establish confidence between England and France, disturbed by the refusal of the former to participate in a Congress. The task of Italy was to further this alliance, which alone could secure the triumph of liberal ideas. He vehemently repelled the fear of a cession of territory. Signor Boggio attacked the Convention. General La Marmora said that the fusion of the Italians was a fact throughout the army. In the sitting of Tuesday General della Marmora explained a passage in his previous speech as follows:—

"When mentioning the Venetian question no menace or pressure was intended. He only expressed the hope that the Austrian Emperor might be led to the conclusion that the retention of Venice was neither required by his interest nor military honour. He deeply deplored the movement in Friuli, and blamed those by whom it was being fostered. The Ministry was placed in difficult circumstances. It was under the political and undeclinable necessity of accepting the Convention, whatever might be the opinion of its members. After mature consideration, they were convinced that it was to the interest of Italy to accept the treaty, notwithstanding the clause for the transfer of the capital, which was considered by France as the only serious guarantee under which the evacuation of Rome could take place. By this evacuation positive advantages are obtained. In mentioning the report that had been spread of a contemplated cession of Italian territory, he said France would never wish thus to disturb the peace of Europe. If the treaty should not have the result of opening the gates of Rome, it would yet greatly facilitate the solution of the Roman question. The attainment of Rome as the capital of Italy would be the effect of progress, not of force. Experience would prove if the temporal power could subsist by itself. Italy ought to show that she had no wish to trouble the Pope while giving that proof. Let them, therefore, confidently await the result. If the transfer were not bound up with the Convention, he would reject the transfer as the cause of serious derangements, and a great increase of the public expenses. He felt that he could invoke the support of the Deputies to overcome the difficulties in attaining their end."

Signor Mordini opposed the Convention, but supported the Bill for the transference of the capital. In the sitting of Wednesday Signor Tecchio spoke against both the Convention and the transfer of the capital. Signor Rattazzi declared himself in favour of those measures, and stated that the Convention consecrated the principle of non-intervention. He said that since the Liberals approve, and the Retrograde party reject, the Convention, he was the more convinced of its value. The general debate then closed. The discussion of the articles of the Convention commenced on Thursday, when Signor Mosca said that the Emperor had already declared that he did not regard Rome as the mortmain of the Catholic world. He interpreted the letter of M. Drouyn de Lhuys of the 31st of May in a sense favourable to the emancipation of the Romans. The Committee on the financial Bills have invited the Directors General of the Customs and PostOffice to be present at their sittings. The Committee entirely concur in the views of the Minister of Finance, and it is believed that the application of his financial measures will be far more easy than had been expected. The municipalities of Brescia and several other towns have declared their readiness to anticipate the payment of the land-tax for 1865 on account of their citizens. The generals and orderly officers of the households of the King of Italy and of Prince Humbert have spontaneously renounced the pay they received from his Majesty's privy purse. The sum paid to the generals was 4000 francs a year, and to the others 2000 francs. General Della Rovere, the ex-minister, is dead.

RUSSIA.—Lord Napier received the principal English residents in St. Petersburg on Saturday previous to his quitting the post of Ambassador at the Russian Court, and addressed them as follows:—

"If peace was preserved during the past year it was owing to the attitude of the English Ministry, who did not allow themselves to be carried away by the critical state of affairs. The British and Russian Governments are both convinced of the necessity of maintaining peace, and this has caused the great change in the feelings of England towards Russia. The relations between the two countries are now most satisfactory. He hoped that a further improvement would take place, by the extension of commerce between the two countries, by the development of the liberal tendencies of the Russian Government, and a more reserved policy on the part of that Government in the Eastern question. He further expressed regret that free-trade principles were not sufficiently acted upon in Russia, and hoped for a speedy change in the Russian commercial system."

POLAND.—The Governor of Galicia issued a proclamation on Friday, stating that, with the exception of high treason and rioting, the treatment of crimes and offences under the jurisdiction of the military tribunals during the state of siege will henceforward be transferred to the civil tribunals. The French papers state that preparations are making for an approaching insurrection in Galicia, for which purpose arms and money have been already provided.

TURKEY.—A convention has been concluded between the British Government and the Porte for the working of the Anglo-Indian telegraph. A Turkish office will be established in Fao, where the land and submarine lines meet. One wire from Constantinople will be exclusively used for Indian messages. The Brussels convention is to apply to the general service. The tariff for a single message from Constantinople to Fao will be 22 francs 50 cents. The budget for 1864-65 shows a revenue of 14737,231*l*. The expenditure is estimated at 14,571,238*l*. The increase in the latter over that of last year is occasioned by the public debt and the Circassian immigration. A reduction in the army and navy expenses to the amount of 37,758*l*. will be made. The dividend for the Consolidés has been provided for. The Ottoman Bank estimates the loss in the cotton crop from the late rains at 60 per cent.

THE PRINCIPALITIES.—Prince Couza has granted to an English company the concession for the construction of six iron bridges over the principal rivers in the Principalities. They are to be completed in three years. The new penal code and a decree rendering public instruction obligatory have been published.

TUNIS.—A dreadful accident has occurred at Tunis, by which 8 officers, 3 seamen, and 1 marine of Her Majesty's ship Orlando were drowned. It appears that a cutter, having on board Lieutenant Still, Surgeon Wood, Captain Pritchard, R.M., Midshipmen De Gama, Fielding, and Kemble, Master's Assistant Hadnill, and Assistant-Paymaster Stratford, with four seamen and one marine, left the ship in the morning on a picnic party, and while returning at three o'clock in the afternoon, under sail, a sudden squall struck the boat when about a thousand yards from the shore, and upset it. Seeing that all hope of assistance was impossible, one of the seamen, the coxswain, struck out for the shore, and was the only man saved. He was found the next morning completely exhausted and in a state of nudity, in an Arab hut, by another cutter of the Orlando, which, in tow of the French frigate Invincible's steam launch, had been sent in search of the missing boat. Up to the last accounts, nothing else had been found but a jacket belonging to Mr. Fielding and a portion of the mast of the boat, although the Orlando and Tyrian had been searching under steam for the missing bodies. The sudden calamity created universal sympathy in Tunis. All the foreign representatives displayed their flags half-mast high, and waited upon the English consul-general to express their condolence. Mr. Fielding, one of the officers who perished, was one of the few survivors of the wreck of her Majesty's ship Orpheus on the coast of New Zealand.

INDIA.—The details of the great storm at Calcutta confirm the first accounts of its destructive ravages. The Hooghly is still filled with wrecks and dead bodies; and it is estimated that between Calcutta and Diamond Harbour 5000 persons perished. The huge storm wave which came in during the cyclone was 30 feet in height at that point, and swept the country bare. From the accounts received from various districts it appears that the storm was about 100 miles in circumference, and that Calcutta must have been about 30 miles from the centre. Two centres have been certainly found—one at sea, and the other at Midnapore. From a knowledge of the law of storms, Captain Watson, of the ship Clarence, which was caught by the cyclone in the Bay of Bengal, saw its nature at once, put his ship about, and stood away from the centre of the storm, thereby delaying his ship for six days, but at the expiration of that time he brought her back without the loss of a single spar.

JAPAN.—The official list of the killed and wounded in the late action with the forts at Simonoseki, shows that the English squadron had eight killed and 48 wounded; the French squadron, two killed and nine wounded; and the Dutch squadron, two killed and three wounded. There were no officers among the killed. The English officers wounded were Captain J. Alexander, Mr. C. W. Atkinson, Mipshipman; and Lieutenant Frederick E. Edwards, of the Euryalus, the former dangerously, the two latter slightly; Lieutenant A. de V. Brownlow, of the Tartar, dangerously; Mr. E. J. Wingfield, Midshipman of the same ship, severely; Lieut.-Colonel Adair, Captain N. W. de Courcey, and Lieutenant J. W. Inglis, of the Royal Marines, the former slightly, the two latter severely. The Japanese Government has announced to the Swiss Federal Council the proximate arrival of a fresh embassy from that country, who will visit Switzerland in the course of their travels.

NEW ZEALAND.—The expectations of peace conveyed by the last mail have not been realised so fully as was anticipated. So far as concerns the east coast natives at Tauranga the submission has been complete; but it has not been followed by that of the Waikato tribes, and there is every reason to believe that as the spring advances these latter will once more be actively in arms. It was understood that William Thompson, who was in the neighbourhood of Tauranga, was only waiting to see whether the Governor would act with clemency or severity, but he has now declared that, come what may, nothing shall induce him to abandon the cause of the King while a vestige of Kingism remains. His followers, reduced by deaths in fight and from disease and hardship to a mere handful, are at present in the hilly country between Tauranga and Waikato, and although few in number they have it in their power to harass the semi-military villages that are forming on the Waikato frontier, and keep that class of settlers perpetually on the alert. The other branch of the Waikato natives, under Rewi Maniapoto, are still as defiant as ever, and are only waiting the result of a gathering now taking place at Taranaki to continue the war at whatever point may be there determined upon. In the meanwhile, the troops are still in winter quarters, and, as the only mode of employing them seems to be at Taranaki, a campaign in that district is to be commenced as soon as the weather settles.

AUSTRALIA.—A quarrel has broken out between the two colonies of New South Wales and Victoria, in reference to the collection of Customs' duties along the inland frontier. New South Wales claims the Murray as part of her territory, and therefore proposes to seize all goods which she may find on the river, unless customs duties are paid upon them. This arrangement is resisted by Victoria, and if the affair had occurred in Europe or in any countries possessing standing armies, the result would no doubt be war, but as the colonies are now circumstanced, the subject, it is supposed, will be brought before the courts of law, and will ultimately find its way to the Privy Council. The Anti-Transportation League continued to hold periodical meetings, and public feeling on this subject was strongly excited, the Council of the League being determined to proceed with their scheme of sending home all expirees. The young salmon have been safely deposited in Badger Creek, a tributary of the Yarra, about 40 miles from Melbourne.

UNITED STATES.—Further accounts of the combined attack of Generals Grant and Butler on General Lee's lines, state that General Grant threw forward three entire corps, the 9th, 5th, and 2d, with the expectation of carrying or flanking the entire Confederate works covering the Southside Railway. General Lee interposed a strong force between the 5th and 2nd corps, doubled up the right flank of the latter, and drove it back in confusion, capturing many prisoners. General Grant's loss in killed and wounded was 1500. General Butler's operations on the right were equally unsuccessful. Both the 10th and 18th Corps were repulsed with heavy loss in attacks upon what were considered weak points in the enemy's lines. Two brigades were cut off from retreat by the fire of the Confederate batteries. They were forced to throw themselves upon the ground to escape annihilation, and were captured in that position. Both wings of the army returned, under cover of the night, to their original position. The total Federal losses are said to have been between 4000 and 5000. The whole movement is set down as a stupendous blunder, although Grant and Meade were both on the field. General Lee has telegraphed that in the operations of the 30th General Mahon swept the Federal lines half-a-mile, capturing 230 officers and men, without himself losing a man. General Grant's troops are now building log-houses, which is suggestive of winter quarters. Commander Cushing, of the Federal gunboat Monticello, reports that he sank the Confederate ram Albemarle in Roanoke River, on the night of the 27th ult., by exploding a torpedo under her bottom. The vessel with which he made the attack was sunk by the fire of the Albemarle, and out of the crew of 14 only himself and one seaman escaped with life. General Hood, with 30,000 men, is reported to have crossed the Tennessee River, and to be moving northward. The Confederates have captured the gunboat Undine on the Tennessee River. Generals Forrest, Buford, Chalmers, and Bell, are concentrating their forces. They have 14 cannon, besides the captured gunboat. Deserters state that orders had been read to the Confederate troops to the effect that Hood would cross the Tennessee at Bridgeport, and march northward, while Forrest attacked Johnsonsville. Southern papers say that Hood is now probably in middle Tennessee. They anticipate great results from his movements. Beauregard's head-quarters are at Gadsen. It is rumoured that Sherman is moving eastward from Atlanta, the Federal garrison of which is reported to number 5000 men. Mr. Seward has informed the Mayors of New York and Buffalo that the State Department had information from Canada that a conspiracy existed to fire the principal Northern cities on the Presidential election day. The Mayor of New York informed Mr. Seward, in reply, that he had no fear of these incendiary threats being carried out. He was, however, prepared for the emergency. The Democratic press charge the Administration with fabricating the report in order to put the cities under martial law. Considerable excitement prevails at Ogdensburg, a raid from the Canadian frontier being apprehended. General Butler has arrived at New York, and it is reported from Washington that he will temporarily supersede General Dix, who will be retained to co-operate with him. Governor Seymour has issued a proclamation appealing to all parties to unite in allaying undue excitement during the election. The State officers will see that every man has a free ballot, and no military organisations will be permitted near the polls. Military interference will be resisted with the full force of law. General Dix has issued another proclamation, stating that no military will be embodied around the polls. The military will, if called upon, aid the civil authorities. Several Democratic electioneering agents have addressed reports to Governor Seymour, stating that the Administration and military authorities put every possible difficulty in the way of their obtaining soldiers' votes, and that they gave unfair facilities to the Republican agents. The Commissioners sent to Washington by Governor Seymour report that the Administration have refused their demands on behalf of the State of New York for the surrender of the State agents for trial by the State authorities. The Military Commission commenced the trial of these agents at Washington on the 3d. The Court denied the prisoners' plea of non-jurisdiction. The trial was adjourned until the 14th. The mob broke up the M'Clellan meeting at Baltimore. A meeting of merchants and bankers has been held at Wall Street in favour of President Lincoln. The blockade-runner Lady Stirling, with 900 bales of cotton, was captured by three blockaders off Wilmington on the night of the 28th ult. The vessel and cargo are valued at 800,000 dols. The privateer Olonstea has captured the bark Empress Theresa. The new Confederate cruiser Chickamauga, which escaped from Wilmington on the 27th, has burnt the ship Shooting Star and two barks off Cape Delaware. The Tallahassee has also destroyed several vessels off Black Island. The Richmond Sentinel, the organ of the Confederate Government, recommends the arming of the slaves. Vice-President Stephen's letter, in reply to General Sherman's invitation to visit Atlanta, is published. He asserts that he has no power to act without the consent of the Confederate Government, but he believes peace not to be impossible if based upon honour, right, and justice to all parties, provided truth and reason be permitted to have full sway. The Republican journals ridicule the numerously signed address recently sent from England to Governor Seymour, entreating the North to let the South go. The New York Evening Post says it is a kind of advice which the American people may take, perhaps, when the English free Ireland, Scotland, the Channel Islands, and India

CANADA.—The Vermont prisoners have been transferred from St. John's to Montreal, where the three judges of the Court of Queen's Bench have refused to grant a writ of habeas corpus for them, on the ground that they were still under the magistrates' jurisdiction, and that no commitment had been yet made. A judicial investigation into the affair, under the Ashburton Treaty, was in progress at Montreal. The delegates to the late Intercolonial Convention have been fêted in brilliant style in the leading cities of Canada West.

MEXICO.—Official advices from Mexico state the condition of affairs to be most satisfactory. The Emperor Maximilian continued his journey amid the enthusiasm of the populations. A great impression had been created by the capture of Matamoras. The Juarist troops had revolted and been disbanded, and since the fight of the 21st September Juarez had with him not more than 100 cavalry. He fled on the 27th towards Chihuahua.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE CORPORATION AND THE SEWAGE.—A ... Court of Common Council was held on Saturday ... Mansion House, to take into consideration a report ... the Coal, Corn, and Finance Committee of the Corporation on the utilisation of the sewage of the metropolis, which had been referred to them on the requisition of a public meeting of the inhabitants of the ... The Lord Mayor presided. The report stated that the committee, fully aware of the great importance of the subject, not only to the ratepayers but to all classes of the community, had attentively considered it in all its bearings, and had been favoured with the assistance and advice of Lord Robert Montagu, M.P., and Dr. Bowring, M.P., both of whom had acted as chairmen of Committees of the House of Commons on the utilisation of metropolitan sewage. It recognised the value of sewage manure, and adduced facts to show that it was commonly applied far too profusely. It stated that the committee were in favour of a plan of distribution to be carried out by a public company, the ratepayers to receive a fluctuating rent varying according to the profits realised by the company; but in the present state of knowledge of the subject, they thought that nothing should be done at present, and that further and thorough investigation should be instituted without delay, either by the sanction of Parliament or by the Government. Deputy Bone moved that the report be agreed to, and said that as the Metropolitan Board of Works was about to discuss some plan for the disposal of the sewage, the committee, of which he was the chairman, felt that there were not sufficient data to act upon, and that more information should be obtained before any decision was arrived at upon so important a subject. Mr. Isaacs seconded the motion. He believed that the plan proposed to be carried out by the Metropolitan Board of Works was to endeavour to reclaim ... 12,000 acres of sand on the shore of the German Ocean by depositing an enormous quantity of the sewage on that spot, and this was to be done in conjunction with a company who were to receive 7½ per cent. interest, and any additional profit that might be derived from the operation was to be divided between the company and the Metropolitan Board of Works. It seemed to him that this plan was one that was not likely to succeed, and that, instead of its treating the sewage as an article of great value and importance, it treated it as a thing to be got rid of. Mr. Harris, Mr. E. T. Philipps, Deputy Elliott, and Mr. Pedler supported the motion. Alderman Rose, M.P., said that there could not be the least doubt of the very great value of the sewage manure. What they wanted to do, now, was to prevent a certain body that had ... taxed the ratepayers of the metropolis to the extent of seven millions from spending two or three ... more in carrying out a chimerical scheme which ... not by any possibility be attended with any good ... Mr. H. Lowman Taylor said that though he was ... the representatives of the City at the Metropolitan Board of Works, he was at the same time of ... that this question was much more likely to be settled ... a manner satisfactory to the public and the ratepayers of the metropolis by a committee of the House of Commons than by the Metropolitan Board of Works. Mr. Norris, M.P., suggested that a Royal commission should be applied for to consider the subject. Deputy Saunders concurred in this suggestion. Deputy ... motion was then put and carried unanimously. Mr. ... next moved that the committee should be instructed to take the necessary steps to obtain a royal commission. After some discussion the Common Serjeant expressed [illegible] that it would not be prudent for the Corpo[illegible] to apply to the Government to issue a Royal [illegible] commission, as they had no power to control the scope of such a commission, and the result might be to [illegible]ously affect the principle of local self-government. Mr. Lawley upon this withdrew his motion, and [illegible] resolution empowering the committee to confer with the Government, and to take any other steps they might deem advisable in the matter, was agreed to.

The Board of Works and the Sewage.—A special meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works was held on Tuesday to receive the report of the Main Drainage Committee, relative to the utilisation of the sewage. Several communications on the subject of application of the sewage were read, with the report of the Chairman and other members on their recent inspection of the works for the utilisation of sewage at Rugby, Croydon, Carlisle, and Edinburgh; and the several tenders for taking the sewage, with the recommendations of the Committee thereon. A report from the Main Drainage Committee was then read, stating the opinion of the Committee that the tender of Messrs. Hope & Napier, for dealing with the sewage on the north side of the Thames, so far as their general scheme is concerned, offers the greatest advantages; and recommending the Board to refer the subject back to the Committee to negociate the precise terms upon which the concession may be granted to those parties. Mr. Freeman said that the only two real tenders were that of Mr. Ellis and that of Messrs. Hope & Napier. With regard to Mr. Ellis's, they had spent millions to take the soil to Barking Creek, and should they now spend millions more to bring it back to Hampstead Heath? As to the scheme of Messrs. Hope & Napier, it took the soil from the point to which they carried it and conveyed it farther from the metropolis; and it would be the means of irrigating the land through which it passed, for the farmers in Essex would be as ready to buy it as any other farmers; and in addition to that they would have an outlet to any amount of sewage that might be collected in their reservoirs. It had been proved that the soil was valuable as a manure, and the result of carrying out Messrs. Hope & Napier's scheme would be to reclaim Maplin Sands, comprising 20,000 acres of now useless sand. He had, under these circumstances, no hesitation in moving the adoption of the report. Mr. Doulton seconded the motion. Mr. Collinson moved as an amendment, that it be referred to the Main Drainage Committee to consider the best means of utilising a portion of the sewage of the metropolis, for the purpose of ascertaining its commercial value, and to report their recommendations to the Board, in order that application may be made in the ensuing Session of Parliament for the necessary powers to carry them into effect. Mr. Savage seconded the amendment. Mr. Tite, M.P., supported the recommendation of the committee. Mr. Legg and Mr. Saunders supported the amendment. Mr. Newton said that Mr. Ellis proposed to pump the sewage through iron pipes to Hampstead Heath, which would require 70,000*l.* for the necessary pumping power, 40,000*l.* for pipes, and 8000*l.* for reservoirs—a total of 118,000*l.* exclusive of his mains, which would cost 2,500,000*l.*, so that the expenditure in carrying out his plan would be something like six millions. But the proposal of Messrs. Hope & Napier was to carry the sewage down into the county of Essex by gravitation and by distributing it over some 5000 acres of land, there to stop till they had tried the experiment. No doubt the metropolitan sewage was valuable. The citizens of London had put it on record that it was worth 2,889,972*l.* Mr. Ellis said he could insure 30 per cent. return, and he proposed to take 5 per cent. himself and then divide any excess between himself and the Board; while Messrs. Hope & Napier proposed to take 2½ per cent. and then give the Board the remainder until they had arrived at 7 per cent. The expense of maintaining the great pumping power according to Mr. Ellis's plan on the north side would be 200,000*l.* annually, while the small pumping power of Messrs. Hope & Napier would only require an outlay of 20,000*l.* annually. Mr. Carpmael, Mr. Healey, Mr. Samuda, and Mr. Miller, M.P., spoke in favour of the motion. Mr. Roach opposed it. Mr. Doulton, M.P., said that the City had placed on record the opinion that the sewage was worth two millions and some odd thousand pounds. Now, he would propose to generously allow the City the two millions if the corporation would kindly pay the other portion of their estimate, and take the sewage off the hands of the Board. He supported the motion, and said that as the scheme would require an Act of Parliament, the members who voted for it would be voting for a fair and impartial inquiry before a Parliamentary committee. Mr. Lowman Taylor said that Messrs. Hope & Napier asked the Board to concede the sewage for 50 years, and on particular conditions, one of which was that the Crown made them a grant of the sands which it was their purpose to irrigate, and this, he maintained, it would not be prudent for the Board to agree to. Mr. Savage objected to any scheme which could not bind them for 50 years. After a few words from Mr. Dixon and Mr. Richardson, M.P., in support of the original motion, the amendment was put and negatived by a majority of 18, the numbers being 26 to 8. On the original motion being put, Mr. H. L. Taylor moved, as an amendment, that it is undesirable to accept any proposal that requires the concession of 50 years, and that other conditions in the scheme of Messrs. Hope & Napier render it impolitic to adopt it without further consideration. On a division the amendment was negatived by 25 to 9. Mr. Legg then moved another amendment that the Board should advertise for further tenders, which was also negatived by 26 to 9. The original motion was then put, and carried by a majority of 17—the numbers being 26 to 9.

Sewage Malaria at Woolwich.—A fatal epidemic has been raging for some time past at Woolwich. The most distressing cases have been among families connected with the Government departments of the Arsenal and Dockyard. The cause is supposed to be malaria, occasioned by the low level outfall of the sewage at Barking Creek. At two-thirds flow the surface of the tide is covered with a dark pestiferous matter, proved to be a remnant of the outfall, cast back before the ebb is sufficiently swept away. After each receding tide, and when the flood begins to make its appearance, the atmosphere along the river becomes insupportable.

The Widening of Park Lane.—At the meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works on Friday, Mr. Tite, M.P., called attention to the question of opening Hamilton Place, or some improvement at the southern end of Park Lane, and moved that the Streets Committee be authorised to give the usual Parliamentary notice. Mr. Roche seconded the motion. Mr. D'Iffanger opposed it, on the ground that there should first be a full inquiry into the compensation and the cost it would involve. Mr. Miller, M.P., supported the motion, and said that it left two courses open to the Board; if they did not give the preliminary notice they could not go to Parliament; if they did they could go to Parliament or not as they chose. After a few words from Mr. Newton and Mr. Healey, Mr. Tite framed a motion in distinct terms, pledging the Board to nothing beyond giving the preliminary notice to put them in a position to go to Parliament if it was thought desirable. This motion was carried on a division by 22 to 8.

Thames Embankment.—A special meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works was held last week, when a report from the Embankment Committee was read, recommending that the immediate backing of the embankment wall should be of material wholly obtained from the land, and that the remainder of the filling-in should be supplied from the land and from the bed of the river in such proportions as the engineer shall consider best suited to form a solid embankment. Mr. Newton moved that the order of the Board prohibiting the contractors from receiving any soil for filling-in other than that supplied from the river, be rescinded. After a long discussion the motion was carried by a majority of 19 to 2. Mr. Newton then moved, and Mr. Legg seconded the adoption of the report. After another long discussion the motion was carried by 17 to 3.

Execution and Confession of Müller.—Sir George Grey, the Home Secretary, after full consideration of the memorial submitted to him by the German Legal Protection Society, and communication with the Lord Chief Baron Pollock and Mr. Baron Martin, who tried the prisoner, declined on Saturday to interpose to respite or commute the sentence; stating that he saw no ground which could justify him in advising her Majesty to interfere with the due course of the law in the case. Mr. Beard lost no time in seeing the convict and apprising him of the decision. Müller received the intelligence with calmness and composure, and expressed himself to the effect that he had been prepared for the result. On Sunday the convict was chiefly occupied in religious duties. He attended the services in the prison chapel morning and evening, and was seen in the course of the day by the Rev. Mr. Walbaum, minister of the German Chapel, St. James's, and by the Rev. Dr. Cappel, minister of the German Lutheran Chapel in Alie Street, Goodman's Fields. The excitement around the prison on Sunday was almost unprecedented. From 3 o'clock until 5 in the afternoon, although the day was wet, a crowd of people had assembled in front of the prison. Most of the crowd were then dispersed by a heavy shower of rain, but only to collect again on its cessation, and at 8 o'clock the evening the Old Bailey was all but impassable. In the open space opposite the gaol, and, indeed, throughout the whole length of the Old Bailey from Ludgate Hill to Newgate Street, formidable barriers were erected, about 20 feet apart, to lessen the pressure of the crowd, and especially to prevent the fearful surging which takes place on extraordinary occasions of the kind, and to which the weak are liable to succumb. A similar precaution was taken in Giltspur Street, which stretches from Newgate Street to Smithfield, and, indeed, wherever a view, however remote, could be had of the place of execution. The windows of the Court-house in the Old Bailey were barricaded, as was also the churchyard of St. Sepulchre, where loss of life was caused about 30 years ago, on a similar occasion, by the palisading along the top of a dwarf wall surrounding the church, and to which people had clung in great numbers, giving way. The execution took place on Monday morning in the presence of thousands of spectators, the number being much larger than has been seen at any execution in London for many years past. Müller persisted in asserting that he was innocent, even when he had the rope round his neck, but it will be a great satisfaction to the public to know that at the last moment of his existence he confessed his guilt, and that no doubt now remains that Müller, and Müller alone, was the murderer. He walked up the steps leading to the scaffold with a firm step. He was accompanied by the Rev. Mr. Davis and Dr. Cappel. His appearance on the scaffold was the signal for a tremendous yell, but with this exception, the conduct of the crowd was tolerably orderly and decorous. After the rope had been placed round the neck of the culprit, Dr. Cappel took hold of one of his hands and again prayed with him. and having done so for some time, he concluded by addressing him as follows:—"Müller, in a few moments you will appear before your God. I ask you now, for the last time, have you committed this crime?" He replied, "I am innocent." Dr. Cappel then said, interrogatively, "You are innocent?" Müller replied, "God knows what I have done." Dr. Cappel then said, "Does God know that you have committed this crime?" Müller was silent. Dr. Cappel went on, "In a few minutes you will be before God. I ask you now, solemnly and for the last time, have you committed this crime?" Müller then said, "Yes, I have done it. No one else was concerned in it." Almost at the same instant, and while the words were upon the lips of the culprit, the drop fell, and, after a very brief struggle, he ceased to exist. After the body had hung the usual time it was cut down and buried in a coffin, filled with quick lime, in one of the corridors of the prison, where all the great malefactors for many years past have been interred. At the Court of Aldermen on Tuesday the Sheriffs reported that the Governor of Newgate had placed in their hands a paper from Müller, containing much of what had already been published in his behalf, accounting for the manner in which he passed the Saturday night of the murder, and the way in which he became possessed of the watch and chain of Mr. Briggs. It did not contain any statement of his guilt, and as he had since made a confession, the Sheriffs sealed it up, and handed to the Court to deal with it as they might think proper, believing that its publication would answer no useful purpose. Alderman Wilson called attention to a letter published in one of the penny papers by the Rev. Mr. Battiscombe, of Blackheath, after he had obtained access to Müller in his cell, asserting in the strongest possible terms his belief in the convict's innocence. He moved that the Gaol Committee be instructed to inquire by whose authority this clergyman obtained admission to a convict under sentence of death, and that the communication now made by the Sheriffs in reference to the statement left by Müller be also referred to the said committee for consideration and report. Alderman Copeland seconded the motion, which was agreed to.

The Murder in Plaistow Marshes.—The Dutchman Kohl was again brought before the magistrates at Ilford on Saturday, when some of the lodgers in his house stated that they saw him come home about half-past one o'clock—about the hour when the prisoner said he was with deceased in the neighbourhood of the docks; that his clothes were then covered with mud; and that in the course of the evening he broke open the boxes of the missing man, and said they were empty. The prisoner was again remanded. The adjourned inquest was resumed on Thursday, when the police reported that they had been engaged daily in a minute search in the reed field and adjacent meadows, in order to trace, if possible, some of the missing articles belonging to the murdered man, but they discovered nothing but the original handle of the chopper with which the murder was committed. The chopper itself had been fresh painted with red paint for the purpose of concealing the stains of blood, and a new handle had been fixed to it. The old handle was at once identified by the owner, from whom the prisoner had borrowed it, and the place where the red paint was purchased has been ascertained. They also produced a witness who stated that a few days ago, while he was walking in the reed bed, near the spot where the body was found, he picked up a large clasp knife, which has been identified as the property of the prisoner. The police have also obtained information to show that the prisoner pledged the missing clothes of the deceased and some articles of jewellery. The key belonging to deceased's boxes and the duplicates have likewise been found. Dr. Letheby attended the court to say that he had not yet had time to make a chemical analysis of the spots found on the hatchet and the clothes. After some further evidence had been given the inquest was again adjourned. Several thousand persons have daily visited the scene of the murder, and large numbers have proceeded from the metropolis in carts and other vehicles to the river side, where the police have been engaged in searching the mud and banks of the Thames at low water.

New Park at Wimbledon.—A meeting of the residents at Wimbledon was held on Friday to receive a proposal from Earl Spencer respecting Wimbledon Common. His lordship, who presided over the meeting, stated that, as lord of the manor, he proposed, if the consent of the copyholders and the sanction of Parliament be obtained, to convert all the important part of Wimbledon Common into a public park. The cost of the conversion he proposed to defray by the sale of detached or outlying fragments for villa purposes. The cost of keeping it in order he would take upon himself and his successors, retaining for this purpose the right of pasturage. He would, in virtue of his position of lord of the manor, assume the name and functions of protector of the park, having an officer of Government associated with him, in order that the public may not suffer from any caprice of himself or his successors, and that permanent arrangements may be made for holding in the park the meetings of associations of a national character, such as the Rifle meetings. If this proposal be carried out, the public will have secured to them for ever a park of not less than 700 acres, or not very far from the extent of Hyde Park and Kensington Gardens together. The meeting appointed a committee to examine the scheme, and if the consent of the copyholders be obtained, an Act of Parliament will be required to sanction it.

GENERAL TODLEBEN returned to London on Thursday night from a visit to Newcastle, Sheffield, Manchester, and Liverpool.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.—A public meeting of this League was held on Monday evening in Guildhall. Before the hour announced for opening the doors, Guildhall Yard was filled with a densely-packed throng, and when the hall was opened a rush took place which caused great alarm. The space allotted for the holders of special tickets was speedily stormed and carried by the unprivileged, and in the course of a very few minutes the spacious hall was completely filled, a very large proportion of those present being ladies. The Lord Mayor took the chair, and said that as a magistrate he could say that one-half of his time when sitting upon the bench was occupied in dealing with offences arising from drunkenness. Any movement, therefore, that was intended to diminish drunkenness must be a noble, benevolent, and Christian movement. He could not but think that medical men were rather to blame for encouraging the use of strong drinks. Although he did himself sometimes take a glass of wine, yet when his medical man recommended wine upon the ground that his active life demanded extra nourishment, he took the medicine, but not the wine, and he found himself the better for doing so. Mr. S. Gurney, M.P., read a statement setting forth the object of the League, which was briefly to change the habits of the people in regard to the use of intoxicating liquors. For that purpose they adopted the double mode of example and precept. Seeking no coercive measures, they appealed by means of public meetings, lectures, conferences, and the press to the sympathies, patriotism, and consciences of the people. The movement was advancing, and temperance principles were making progress among the ranks of the army, 2500 soldiers having signed the pledge at Warley, and more than 1000 at Woolwich, while regimental temperance societies have been formed in India, Malta, Gibraltar, and other foreign stations. Mr. S. Morley said that, believing as he did that the question of drunkenness lay at the root of the great social question, he thought thanks were due to the Corporation of London for affording the League an opportunity of distinctly bringing the subject under the notice of their fellow-citizens. He was glad to find that among the clergy of the Church of England there was a large and increasing class of abstainers, and he wished he could say as much of the Dissenting clergy. The League took the ground of persuasion, but he thought something more was required, and he would suggest that habitual drunkards should be treated as lunatics, and should be imprisoned. He thought, too, it was a grave question whether beer should be sold for consumption on the premises, and he looked with favour upon a proposition to close public-houses at 6 in the evening. As for the Permissive Bill, he, although a supporter of the League, and not a member of the Alliance, was of opinion that something like that measure was required, and he should wish to see the licensing system amended by transferring the power of granting licences from the magistrates to the inhabitants of a district. The Rev. R. Maguire, incumbent of Clerkenwell, vindicated total abstainers from the imputation of being men with one idea. They disclaimed all intention of putting forward temperance as a panacea for all evils, but they sought to get rid of strong drink because it was the great parent of evil. The Times had recently classed strong drink, humorously of course, with Mr. Banting's sugar and Addison's beefsteak club. But if sugar made Mr. Banting fat, he never on that account broke anybody's head, nor did the eating of underdone beefsteaks cause injury to any one but those who ate them. The use of strong drink, however, did not alone injure the drinker, but it led to quarrels and to calamities, affecting not only individuals, but the community at large. Drunkards were a class by themselves, and it was the duty of all others to join in an effort to raise their brethren out of the dismal swamp into which strong drink had led them. Mr. B. Scott, Chamberlain of the City of London, said that, although the wealthier classes in the present day were not chargeable with setting a bad example to the humbler classes, yet their predecessors had done so, and it was right that they should now make an effort to cure the evil which had been caused. He referred to several instances in former times of Royal excesses at civic banquets, and said that he did not advocate coercive legislation, as he believed that moral suasion and Christian example would do all that legislation could do for them. Mr. H. Dixon, a member of the College of Surgeons, and Coroner for South Oxfordshire, said he felt that in the matter of strong drinks the doctors had much to answer for. The public should not trust to medical authority on that point, because opinions were divided, but they should rely on their own experience, and the results of their observation in other cases. He admitted that alcohol might sometimes be useful as a medicine, but it would have been well for the public, although ill for the doctors, if that fact had never been found out, because for every one who had been benefited in their bodies by the use of alcohol, thousands had perished, souls and bodies, by its abuse. Mr. G. Cruikshank said that their place of meeting suggested the question whether it might not be possible to discontinue the use of strong drinks at great civic feasts. As it might be said that there could be no enjoyment at such a feast, he recommended the Lord Mayor, amidst loud cheers and laughter, to make the experiment by inviting the company now gathered in that hall. The Rev. Newman Hall replied at some length to a recent article in the Times, which had charged them with vulgarity and fanaticism, and with having nothing in common with Father Mathew but the name. He said that free trade, slavery, and even Christianity had been thought vulgar, but it was not so now, and as to the charge of fanaticism and ignorance, he said that their cause was making such progress, that those who wished to join before the movement became a success must do so speedily. The thanks of the meeting were then given to the Lord Mayor for presiding, and a Benediction having been pronounced, the proceedings were brought to a close by singing the National Anthem.

THE LATE EXPLOSION AT ERITH.—The adjourned inquest on the persons killed by this explosion was brought to a close on Tuesday, when the jury, after a consultation of nearly two hours, returned the following verdict:—

"We find that the deaths of George Raynor, John York, and Thomas Hubbard were caused by an explosion of gunpowder which originated in one of the barges belonging to Messrs. John Hall & Sons while unloading at the jetty of their magazine at Erith, but how that explosion was caused we have no evidence before us to show. From the evidence which has been adduced before us we would respectfully call the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the many serious omissions and imperfections in the present Acts of Parliament relating to the gunpowder trade, and would urge upon their consideration the following as a few of the points on which immediate legislation is required:—1. The quantity of gunpowder stored in any one place or conveyed in any one barge, waggon, or railway train. 2. The construction and situation of magazines, their proximity to populous districts, to river walls, and other sources of danger, and the licensing the same. 3. The construction of barges and other vessels for the conveyance of powder, and the necessity of their having better distinguishing marks. 4. The shipping and discharging powder generally. 5. The importance of Government inspection and supervision of the storing, packing, and conveyance of gunpowder. 6. The penalties relating to the infringement of all Acts of Parliament bearing on this subject."

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths registered in London in the week ending Saturday, Nov. 12, were 1586. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 years 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1279. The present return is therefore 307 above the average. The most fatal diseases have been bronchitis or pneumonia, and the very young and the very old have been the principal sufferers. During the week the births of 1003 boys and 991 girls, in all 1994 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1917.

DEAL.—The new pier in this harbour was formally opened on the 8th inst., Mrs. Hugessen, the wife of one of the members for the Cinque Ports, officiating at the ceremony. The day was one of general rejoicing in the town. A public dinner followed the opening, and was attended by Lord Clarence Paget, Mr. Hugessen, Sir Brook Bridges, and Sir Edward Dering, the borough and county members, all of whom congratulated the townspeople and the shareholders on the successful completion of their undertaking.

LIVERPOOL.—For some time past the walls of Ashton, in Lancashire, have been covered with placards offering employment in glass works in New York to young men, 15*s.* a week, with food and clothing, being promised as the remuneration. As there is at present great distress amongst the operatives of Ashton, about 300 young men and lads, from 16 to 30 years of age, engaged themselves to the agent, and late on Tuesday night about 180 of them arrived in Liverpool, with the intention of sailing to New York in a vessel called the Great Western. On arriving at the Brunswick Station, carts were in readiness to convey them to the Canada Dock, where the Great Western was lying. The men, however, had been without food all day, and on demanding something to eat a dispute arose, which attracted the attention of Mr. Underwood, of the Sefton Foundry, who questioned the "emigrants," and on hearing their story told them that in all probability the whole affair was an attempt to entrap them as recruits for the Federal armies. Upon this numbers of them refused to go on board the Great Western, to the great chagrin of the "agent," and Mr. Underwood found them shelter in his own premises. He also communicated what had occurred to the police authorities, who found on inquiry that there were already in the town about 90 men from London, who had been engaged at a house in Westminster by an American, who offered them 15 dollars a month, with a new suit of clothes on arrival at New York, the wages to commence from the time of going on board the ship. About 30 of these arrived from London, among whom were several foreigners, by express on Tuesday afternoon; and 58 others followed by a later train. On hearing what had taken place, a great number of them either refused to go on board the Great W[illegible] or left her after joining her in the [illegible]. Two of them asserted that they were offered [illegible] missions in the Federal army. The police [illegible] 600 emigrants on board, the majority [illegible] Irish, and of this number about 200 were [illegible] "recruits." The ship was preparing [illegible] Mersey for New York on Wednesday, when [illegible] stopped by order of the Custom House auth[illegible] the plea that she had on board several passe[illegible] had been kidnapped under various pretences [illegible] in the Federal army. The matter will [illegible] undergo a strict investigation.

PLYMOUTH.—Lieutenant Francis Main, of the [illegible] clad Black Prince, 41, Captain Lord F. H. Ker[illegible] tried last week by court-martial on board the [illegible] Royal Adelaide, in Hamoaze, for being asle[illegible] hammock on the main deck of that ship [illegible] 2d November in the first watch when the [illegible] lying in the Sound, he being the officer of [illegible] Captain Phillimore presided, and the charg[illegible] proved, Lieutenant Main was dismissed the [illegible] The sentence would perhaps have been less seve[illegible] from the fact of his having been punished about [illegible] months since for a similar offence.

PORTSMOUTH.—In the account which appeared [illegible] week of the court-martial on board the Victory, [illegible] tenant Lord Arthur Pelham Clinton was mentione[illegible] the officer who was tried and dismissed the ser[illegible] desertion. This is inaccurate. The officer who [illegible] dismissed is his brother, Midshipman Lord [illegible] Sidney Pelham Clinton.

SANDWICH.—Thomas and Samuel Croker, [illegible] Hanbury, aged 26 years, said to be twin brothers, [illegible] have been travelling in various parts of the provinces [illegible] London, swindling every one with whom they [illegible] contact, were brought before Mr. Deedes, the Record[illegible] the recent Quarter Sessions in this town. The pri[illegible] were committed for trial from Ramsgate, which [illegible] they visited during the busiest part of the sea[illegible] took up their abode at the chief hotel, whe[illegible] letters, addressed to "Thomas Hanbury, Esq., [illegible] had been waiting their arrival some days. Numerous friends, said to be [illegible] tial gentlemen, well "got up," were [illegible] at dinner by the brothers, to whom the g[illegible] attention and courtesy were paid by the [illegible] lord and his domestics. Time wore on, and [illegible] day the landlord's bills for lodgings and payment[illegible] behalf of his guests were largely increased. Repe[illegible] applications for a settlement were made to the [illegible] who made the everlasting excuse "that they [illegible] replies from their mother, Mrs. Hanbury, and that [illegible] might be expected soon to join them, or that she [illegible] promised to send them 200*l.*" One morning, [illegible] having then been nine weeks at their abode, and [illegible] that the applications of the landlord for payment [illegible] stronger and more frequent, they signed a che[illegible] over 100*l.* in their assumed name, and left word [illegible] they were going for a drive, and would return [illegible] evening. They did not, however, return to R[illegible] but went to Canterbury, where the police [illegible] warrant for their apprehension, the cheque [illegible] been dishonoured on being presented at the [illegible] London. Their apprehension was effected in the [illegible] place by the vigilance of a tradesman in High S[illegible] Ramsgate, who had also been defrauded. The R[illegible] said the conduct of the prisoners would not war[illegible] him in saying a word in their favour, and as they [illegible] been found guilty on both indictments, they w[illegible] imprisoned for 12 months each, with hard labour.

SHIREOAKS.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer [illegible] intimated his intention of presenting to the [illegible] church of St. Luke, Shireoaks, Nottinghamshire [illegible] stained glass window, in memory of his friend [illegible] colleague, the Duke of Newcastle.

SUNNINGHILL.—The Berks police believe they are [illegible] the track of the tramps who are suspected of the [illegible] murder of the old woman in the lodge of Mr. [illegible] Crutchley's estate at Sunninghill Park. A cousin [illegible] of Lady Wiltshire, who lives near the scene of the [illegible] crime, had seen the man and woman in the neighbourhood of his house, and ordered them off the premises. Being shown two men who had been committed as vagrants to Aylesbury Gaol, he at once identified one of them, named Smith, as the man he saw, and described his dress, which in a very remarkable manner corresponded with the dress Smith wore when he was taken to prison. Renewed efforts are making to discover the woman who was with Smith at the time of the murder.

WINDSOR.—On Saturday, at the Borough Police Court, Ellen West, a lady's maid, about 35 years of age, was brought before the mayor, charged with obtaining two silk dresses, valued at about 10*l.* each, from Messrs. Bird & Allen, linendrapers, of High Street. The prisoner, up to the time of her apprehension, had been in the service of Lady Phipps, wife of Colonel the Hon. Sir C. B. Phipps, Keeper of her Majesty's Privy Purse, residing in Windsor Castle. On Friday [illegible] went to Messrs. Bird & Allen's, and obtained two silk dresses under the pretence of their being for her mistress, and immediately proceeded to a pawnbroker in Thomas Street for the purpose of raising money upon them. The pawnbroker, suspecting that something was wrong, made inquiries, and having ascertained the manner in which the dresses had been obtained, the prisoner was apprehended. A searching investigation was then made into her conduct of late, when it was discovered that she had pawned articles of great value belonging to Lady Phipps at various places in London and elsewhere. Among the articles so stolen and pawned, it is understood, are some jewellery and an Indian shawl, a present from the Queen, roughly valued at upwards of 100 guineas. The prisoner was remanded for further inquiry.

WORCESTER.—A dreadful fire occurred on Friday night at the Worcester Railway works. The damage is estimated at 25,000*l*., and more than 400 workpeople will be thrown out of employment. The cause of the fire is unknown.

YARMOUTH.—The Court appointed to investigate the recent loss of the Ontario gave judgment on Monday. They were of opinion that no blame attached to the captain, because the ship was in charge of a licensed pilot, and the master was locally unacquainted with the coast. The Court had, therefore, great pleasure in restoring to Captain Brooking his certificate. They were sorry they could not say the same with regard to the pilot; but under the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854 they could not take any further action in his case. The facts, however, would be reported to the Board of Trade. It was unnecessary for them to give any opinion on the question of the Yarmouth lifeboat, but a report on the subject would also be sent to the Board of Trade.

THE NEW LORD LIEUTENANT AND THE CORPORATION.—Lord Wodehouse, in returning thanks last week for the address of the Dublin Corporation, avoided all allusion to the controversial and party questions which the address touched upon, and described the policy which should guide an Irish Viceroy by saying that "the welfare of Ireland depended not upon the aid of the Government, but upon the energy and enterprise of Irishmen, and upon the existence of that mutual confidence to the growth of which he rejoiced to receive their testimony." This reply has given great annoyance to the Ultramontane party in the Corporation, and at their last meeting Alderman Plunkett designated the exhortation to "self-reliance" as "gammon," Mr. Sullivan declared it to be an "affront," while the Hon. Mr. Vereker, the author of the address, declared that it was "beginning at the wrong end to talk of self-reliance until they received a just and impartial Government, which they had not at present."

THE BELFAST RIOTS.—The Court of Queen's Bench on Wednesday refused the application to admit to bail certain persons at present lying in Belfast Gaol on charges arising out of the recent riots. Judge Hayes alone was in favour of enlarging them. The Commissioners are proceeding with the inquiry at Belfast, but the Protestant party has entirely withdrawn and refused to take any part in the proceedings.

THE IRISH LEAGUE.—The Paris journal La France published last week a statement of the grievances of Ireland, issued by the Irish League, which it described as "an association recently formed in England by several members of Parliament, and other illustrious Liberals, with the view of obtaining a repeal of the Union." This statement, it says, "is only the preliminary one of a series of publications translated into all languages, and disseminated over the Continent, which will make known to the whole world the injustice of the English Government, and the violation of Ireland's rights." The France concludes by saying, "We profit by this occasion to congratulate the French people that they are not subject to any of the miseries and oppressions which weigh on Ireland. May Providence ever preserve to France her national liberty and power; and may she ever be spared that which Ireland suffers under a reign which is dignified with the name of constitutional freedom."

THE MURDER OF TWO SISTERS AT BALBRIGGAN.—The investigation into the murder of the sisters Ellen and Anne Murphy, at Holywood Great, on the 10th October, was resumed on Tuesday in the Courthouse, Balbriggan, before a full bench of magistrates. Richard Murphy, the brother, who stood charged on suspicion of being the murderer, was brought before the court in custody. Several additional witnesses were examined, and the solicitor for the prisoner declined to cross-examine them. After hearing the evidence, the prisoner was formally committed for trial.

INSTALLATION OF EARL RUSSELL AT ABERDEEN.—The ceremony of installing Earl Russell as Lord Rector of Aberdeen University took place on the 11th inst. The formal installation ceremony took place in Marischal College, after which his lordship, accompanied by the town council and University authorities, proceeded to the Music Hall, and delivered his inaugural address, of which the following is a summary:—

After thanking the students for the honour they had done him in choosing him as their Lord Rector, he said that he would not detain them by attempting to eulogise on the beauties of literature or the acquisitions of science, but would propose as the subject of his address the discussion of the two questions—first, is there any law or general rule by which the decline of States is governed; and, secondly, what is the general aspect of the world at present, and does it teach us to hope or to despond? In discussing the first branch of his subject, he entered at some length into a consideration of the causes of the fall of the Roman Empire, and attributed it to the corruption of the Government, corruption in morals and religion. This corruption existing, the Government naturally fell into the hands of men able and powerful enough to become the tyrants of the people; and it was vain to think, as Brutus and Cassius had done, that they destroyed the tyranny thus created by assassinating the Emperor. What was required was not the death of a man, but the regeneration of a people. He then referred to the Reformation and its effects on freedom, and traced the gradual rise of the spirit of liberty on the Continent, and proceeded to consider the present state of Europe and of the world, remarking, however, that it was perilous ground to walk upon. It was evident that barbarian races must give way before the more civilised. This was exemplified in America and other countries. He went on to inquire whether, with regard to Europe, any improvement had been made in government. He needed not to refer to England, for this country, he said, had for many years enjoyed in its perfection, or nearly in its perfection, that which he believed to be the best of the imperfect forms of government which man can attain to. But, within a not long time, a representative Government more or less imperfect had sprung up in various parts of Europe. In France, in Austria, in Spain, in Portugal, and in some other countries, there were forms of representative monarchy; and the struggle, similar to what had taken place in this country from the accession of James I. to the accession of George II., for free institutions was now going on in these countries. Referring to Italy, he rejoiced that Italy, which was so long dead, which for so many centuries lay in the torpor to which she had been condemned by the arms of Charles V., had roused herself and risen again; and as she flourished once as the republic of a single city, spreading its arts and arms everywhere, as she flourished again as a number of disunited republics, each distinguished by its arts and by its vigour in carrying on war and contest against the others, so he hoped now there might be a third shape of freedom and happiness to Italy, and that as a Constitutional monarchy she would shine again among the Powers and States of Europe. He then referred to the struggles of Greece to get through its factions and its difficulties of every kind, and then went on to speak of the continent of Africa, which in many parts had got rid of that detestable crime the slave-trade, and expressed his belief that the task of civilising Africa would not be a useless sacrifice, but that light was still to shine in that part of the world. Of this faith was a man who was never named in society but with honour—Captain Speke, the traveller of Africa. Referring to America, he said, there was another portion of the globe where they still had to lament the scenes of bloodshed which were to be witnessed. There we still had to lament that the bloody arbitrament of war had not been brought to a close; and if there was any bright spot in that dark scene it was for the African race. But he could not but believe that the civil war in America, whichever way it might end—whether the States might again unite, or whether there was to be a final separation, he could not but believe that out of these events the African race were to receive their freedom. He was sure he need not speak to them of abhorrence of slavery, because they must all have that abhorrence as strong as they had had; but there was one thing which made it quite impossible that the master and the slave should ever live in harmony together. He then referred to the progress of religion, of civilising influences, and of Christianity, and to the need for the exercise of charity in the discussions now going on on this subject. He concluded, amid great applause, by thanking the audience for the attention they had given him.

COLLISION ON THE GREAT NORTHERN.—On Tuesday morning, as a coal train was standing at the Biggleswade station, the Parliamentary train, which leaves London at 7.48, ran into it with such violence as to smash several trucks and greatly to alarm the passengers. As the train, however, was in the act of stopping, they escaped without injury. The line was blocked for about an hour. A dense fog prevailed at the time, and the driver of the passenger train did not see the coal train till it was too late to avoid the collision.

COLLISION ON THE EDINBURGH AND GLASGOW.—On Thursday the 10th inst. a collision occurred at the Helensburgh Junction between a mineral train from Campsie and the train from Balloch. Eight or ten passengers were slightly hurt, and the guard of the passenger train and the driver of the mineral train, were seriously injured.

COURT OF CHANCERY: St. Thomas's Hospital.—The Lord Chancellor on the 8th gave judgment on the appeal from a decision of Vice Chancellor Wood in the matter of two suits respecting the site of St. Thomas's Hospital, out of which arose the farther question whether the corporation of the City or the governors of the hospital had the final control of its affairs. His lordship said he had come to the conclusion that the decision of the Vice-Chancellor was right, and that the power to select the site for the hospital was vested in the donation governors. He also gave his opinion that the corporation had parted with all the power they originally possessed to the governors, and that though the hospital seal remained in their possession, they could only affix it to documents at the instruction of the governors. He therefore dismissed the bill without costs, but as there was power to appeal to the House of Lords, he hoped, for the sake of the charity, that some agreement would be come to to put the record in such a shape as would finally decide the question at issue, without further litigation.

Obituary.

THE DOWAGER MARCHIONESS OF QUEENSBERRY died on the 13th inst, at 1, Lowndes Street, in her 70th year. Her ladyship was the eldest daughter of the late Major James Sholto Douglas, by the daughter of Mr. James Dawes, of Rockspring, Jamaica, and in 1817 married the sixth Marquis of Queensberry, who died in 1856.

LORD MANNERS died at Hastings on Monday, from consumption, in his 46th year. John Henry Manners-Sutton, second Baron of Foston, Lincolnshire, was eldest son of the Right Hon Thomas Manners-Sutton, grandson of the third Duke of Rutland, and brother of the Archbishop of Canterbury, who became Solicitor-General in 1805, and shortly afterwards one of the Barons of the Exchequer, and in 1807 was appointed Lord Chancellor of Ireland, when he was raised to the peerage as Baron Manners. His mother was a daughter of Mr. James Butler, of Fethard, a near relative of the Earl of Glengall. He was born in Stephen's Green, Dublin, in 1818, succeeded his father in 1842, and married, in 1848, the third daughter of Captain Dashwood, R.N., by whom he leaves a youthful family—three sons and two daughters. He is succeeded in the title by the Hon. John Thomas Manners-Sutton, born in 1852. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant of Suffolk, and Captain in the West Suffolk Militia.

THE RIGHT HON. THOMAS ERSKINE died at Bournemouth, on the 9th inst., in his 77th year. He was the third son of the famous Lord Erskine, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1813. He became Queen's Counsel in 1827, and four years afterwards was appointed chief judge of the Court of Review. In 1839 he was appointed one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas, but ill health compelled him to resign in 1845. He was a Commissioner of the Duchy of Cornwall.

ADMIRAL THE HON. SIR MONTAGU STOPFORD, K.C.B., died at Edinburgh on the 10th inst, in his 66th year. After being employed in various ships, he joined the Alceste, which conveyed Lord Amherst on his embassy to China, and was wrecked in that ship on his passage home in 1817. He commanded the Pique, on the North American and West India station, from 1842 until 1846. For nearly four years he was admiral-superintendent of Devonport dockyard: in 1855 he was appointed admiral-superintendent at Malta, and took part in the war against Russia in the Black Sea. In recognition of his services during the war he was nominated a Knight Commander of the Bath, and a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and received the Order of the Medjidie. He attained the rank of admiral in 1863. In February this year he was granted a service pension, and was placed on the reserved half-pay list. He was the fourth son of the third Earl of Courtown, by his marriage with the eldest daughter of the third Duke of Buccleuch. He was born in 1798, and was twice married, first in 1827, to the second daughter of the late General Sir Henry Whitmore, and secondly in 1853, to the youngest daughter of Mr. John Kay, of the North Charlton, Northumberland.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Nov. 14.

The supply of Beasts is not quite so large as on Monday last; however the trade is dull, and it is difficult to realise that day's quotations. The number of Sheep is larger, and the demand for them smaller, consequently on the average prices are lower, although there is scarcely a quotable reduction. Trade is dull for Calves. From Germany and Holland there are 3060 Beasts, 8530 Sheep, 200 Calves, and 90 Pigs; from Scotland, 50 Beasts; from Ireland, 540; and 2080 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

We have a large number of Beasts on offer, but still choice qualities are not plentiful. Trade is exceedingly dull. Primest qualities meet with customers at about late rates. Many remain unsold. There is about an average supply of Sheep; they cannot all be disposed of; prices remain nearly the same as on Monday. Calves are rather lower in price. Our foreign supply consists of 850 Beasts, 870 Sheep, and 348 Calves.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Nov. 14.

The supply of Wheat to this morning's market was moderate, nevertheless it met a slow sale at prices of this day se'nnight. There was a fair attendance at this morning's market, and the business done in foreign Wheat was quite of a retail character. Barley brought about last week's rates Beans and Peas were unchanged in value. The Oat trade was firm, and in some instances rather more money was obtained. For Flour there was but little inquiry, and prices were unaltered.

FRIDAY, Nov. 18.

Stormy and rainy weather has prevailed during the past week. The better tone noticed in the Wheat trade has in some degree subsided, the value of this article being about maintained in the country markets, Hull excepted, where a decline of 1s. per qr. is reported. The prices of secondary Barley are still tending downwards. Oats met a better inquiry which enabled holders to maintain late rates. Peas and Beans are neglected. Flour is firm at former prices for best qualities. Since Friday last 6 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has been steady during the week, and the few cargoes off the coast are held for extreme late rates. Linseed is in request and about 1s. per qr. dearer. Paris, Nov. 17.—The Flour trade has been very slow, and prices have declined 6d. per 280 lbs. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. 3d. per 280 lb. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 31,000 cwt. Wheat has remained steady. The arrivals of foreign Wheat are large, of all other grain moderate. The attendance at this morning's market was small. The English Wheat left over from Monday has been sold at prices of that day. Foreign was neglected, and in the little business transacted there was no alteration in value.

LIVERPOOL: Nov. 15.—We have had an average attendance of buyers at to-day's market, and with a fair consumptive demand for Wheat we quote all descriptions fully as dear as on Friday last, whilst Flour may be called the turn in sellers' favour, and scarce. Indian Corn is not saleable except at a reduction of 3d per qr., which few holders will submit to. Oats slow. Oatmeal rather better. No quotable change in other articles. Market closes steady.

PATENT GUTTA PERCHA SOLES.—IMPORTANT TO GARDENERS.—The Gutta Percha Company have the pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of the following letter from G. GLENNY, Esq., the celebrated Florist:—

"Gentlemen,—I have worn Gutta Percha Soles and Heels these two years, and being so much in a garden as I necessarily am in all weathers, and with the ground in all states, I would on no account be without them. As a matter of economy I would recommend Gardeners to use them, for they may repair the worn part at all times by warming the material at the fire, and pressing it from the thick parts to the worn parts, as easily as if it were so much dough. I think it the duty of all persons who must occasionally wet their feet to adopt a material that completely defies damp. Many a gardener would escape colds and rheumatism by the use of Gutta Percha Soles.—Your obedient servant, "G. GLENNY."

Every variety of Gutta Percha articles, such as Mill Bands, Tubing, Soles, Sheet, Pump Buckets, Fire Buckets, Bosses, Union Joints, Flasks, Bottles, Bowls, Chamber Vessels, Toilet Trays, Sponge Bags, Curtain Rings, Galvanic Batteries, Calbotype trays, &c., manufactured by the Gutta Percha Company, and sold by their wholesale dealers in town or country.

Under this Company's Act tenants for life, trustees, mortgagees, guardians, committees of incompetent persons, beneficial lessees, corporations (ecclesiastical or municipal), incumbents, charitable trustees, &c., may effect the following Land Improvements, and charge the outlay and expenses on the estate improved, by way of rentcharge, to be paid by half-yearly instalments, viz.:—
1. All works of Drainage, Irrigation, Warping, and Embankment.
2. The Erection of Farmhouses, Cottages for Agricultural Labourers, and all kinds of Farm Buildings.
3. The Construction of Roads.
4. The Grubbing and Clearing of Old Woodlands, Enclosing, Fencing, and Reclaiming Land.
The owners of estates, not entailed, who may be desirous to avoid the expense or inconvenience of a legal mortgage, may also charge their Estates with an outlay in improvements under the simple and inexpensive process of the Company's Act.
The term of years for the rentcharge is fixed by the landowner, so as to adapt the amount of annual payment to the circumstances of the tenants, and it may be so adjusted that principal, interest, and all expenses will be included in an annual charge of 6l. per cent.
No investigation of title being required, and the charge not being affected by incumbrances, no legal expenses are incurred.
The arrangements for effecting improvements are threefold:—
No. 1. The works may be designed and executed entirely by the landowner's agent, and the Company employed only to supply the loan and conduct the matter through all the official forms for charging the outlay on the estate.
No. 2. The Company will supply plans, specifications, and estimates for any improvements to be executed by the landowner's agent as under No. 1. In each of these cases the landowner will be solely under the control of the Enclosure Commissioners.
No. 3. The Company will undertake the entire responsibility of the improvements, prepare the plans, execute the works, and finally charge on the estate the actual amount expended, with their commission thereon, approved by the Enclosure Commissioners.
Landowners may thus obtain what assistance they require from the Company, and no more, in effecting the objects in view.
Works of Drainage and other improvements are also executed on commission for landowners, who merely require the skill and experience of the Company's officers and a staff in constant practice.
Applications to be addressed to WILLIAM CLIFFORD, the Secretary, at the Offices of the Company, 52, Parliament Street, S.W.

The EMPEROR of RUSSIA has sanctioned a decree for the abolition of convents throughout Poland. All those which were implicated in the late insurrection are to be entirely suppressed, while the few remaining will be placed under Government supervision.

By the Bombay mail we have the details of the visit of the VICEROY to the capital of the Punjaub, and of the grand Viceregal Durbar which he held there on the 18th ult., and at which upwards of 400 rajahs and chiefs were present. The KHAN of KOKAN has been defeated by the Russians at Ieskund and compelled to retreat to Kokan, which the Russians subsequently attacked and captured. The KING of BOKHARA has espoused the cause of UZUL KHAN, and is taking active measures against the AMEER of CABOOL. It is reported at Bombay that the Bhooteas have submitted, but the rumour requires confirmation.

A telegram from Shanghai informs us that Prince NAGATO has agreed to open the Straits of Simonosaki, and to pay the expense of the Allied expedition.

From the United States we learn that Mr. LINCOLN has been re-elected President by a popular majority of nearly 400,000. He carried all the States except New Jersey, Kentucky, and Delaware, and obtained 213 electoral votes against 21 for Gen. M'CLELLAN. General BUTLER formally assumed the military command of New York on the 5th inst., but the elections passed off without disturbance. General LEE's forces are said to be now equal in number to those of General GRANT, and it is expected that he will at once assume the offensive. General SHERIDAN is surrounded by the Confederate cavalry at Winchester, and his horses are dying for want of forage. General FORREST has captured Johnsonsville in Tennessee with the Federal gunboats and transports, all the Federal stores and many cannon. It is reported that General SHERMAN has evacuated and burnt Atlanta, and is now retreating through Georgia to Charleston in South Carolina; but the report requires confirmation. Mr. SEWARD has made a speech at Auburn, in which he declared that the war must go on until one side or the other succumbs from exhaustion. The Confederate Congress reassembled at Richmond on the 7th inst. President DAVIS, in his Message, declared that the military situation is favourable for the Confederacy, and the condition of the finances so far satisfactory that the continuance of judicious legislation, with the abundant resources of the South, will enable all exigencies of the war to be promptly met. He states that, as there is no change in the policy of foreign Powers towards the Confederacy, the people must rely upon themselves to conquer a peace and establish their independence. He disapproves of the proposal to arm the slaves, but thinks that a portion of them may be turned to good account in the army as engineers, labourers, and pioneers. If, however, the alternative should ever be presented of subjugation or the employment of the slave as a soldier, there is, he says, no reason to doubt what should then be their decision. He repeats the willingness of the South to negotiate for a peaceful solution, but the expressed determination of the Federal Government to make no peace except on terms of Southern submission and degradation, leaves no hope of the cessation of hostilities until the Northern delusion of ability to conquer the South is dispelled.

In the evening their Royal Highnesses went to the Princess's Theatre. It is expected that their Royal Highnesses will remain at Sandringham till after Christmas.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Tuesday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury, in Downing Street. Another Council was held on Thursday. Another will be held to-day.

DIPLOMATIC MOVEMENTS.—It is stated that Lord Lyons, her Majesty's Minister at Washington, is about to return to England on six months' leave, in consequence of ill health, caused by the onerous duties which have devolved upon him since the commencement of the civil war.

LORD LIEUTENANCIES. — Lord Belper has been appointed Lord Lieutenant of Notts, in the room of the late Duke of Newcastle; and Lord Wenlock has been appointed Lord Lieutenant of the East Riding of Yorkshire, in the room of the Earl of Carlisle, whose state of health has obliged him to resign.

THE NAVY.—The Victoria, 121, screw steamship, intended as the flagship for Rear-Admiral Smart, commander-in chief in the Mediterranean, left Spithead on Wednesday for that station, calling at Plymouth on her way down Channel, for the purpose of obtaining more men, being still short of her complement. The Warrior, 40, iron screw frigate, was paid off at Portsmouth on Monday, and placed in the second division of the steam reserve. It is understood that the Admiralty, in compliance with the expressed wish of the country, have authorised Captain Cowper Coles to construct an entirely new ship on his cupola principle.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Customs authorities have published a volume of statistics, from which it appears that the total receipts of the French Customs during the past year amounted to 195,494,200f., being an increase of nearly 9 millions over the preceding year. The Constitutionnel of Friday contradicts as entirely without foundation the statement published by several journals that M. Drouyn de Lhuys had addressed a fresh despatch to M. de Sartiges, the French Ambassador at Rome; and also that he had sent a circular note to the French diplomatic agents at the Catholic Courts of Europe, stating that France guarantees the temporal power of the Pope. The same paper of Wednesday says that the Emperor has expressed to M. de Persigny his regret that, in a letter to M. Girardin, he had manifested a desire to see some modifications introduced into the Press Laws. The Patrie of Friday states that a despatch of M. Drouyn de Lhuys, dated the 7th November, declares that the rigorous application of the principle of non-intervention cannot be admitted in respect of Rome, the seat of Catholicism. M. Drouyn de Lhuys recapitulates his assertion that France reserves her right to liberty of action. The Memorial Diplomatique, the semi-official organ of the French Foreign Office, contains an article on the cutting-out of the Florida in the port of Bahia, denouncing that outrage on neutral rights. It concludes in these terms:—

"What strikes us as extremely grave in this outrageous proceeding is the apparently fixed determination of the Washington Government to set at nought many universally-recognised doctrines and duties of international law, which, although they are not laid down in any written code, have acquired all the force of law, are pronounced sacred by humanity and reason, and are consecrated by usage and the adhesion of every civilised nation. We had occasion in our publications of the 20th December and 27th March last, to demonstrate how, in the seizure and condemnation of the British barque Springbok, the maritime jurisprudence of the United States Prize Court set at defiance the best-established doctrines of international law, and we pointed out the dangers which neutral Powers would incur if they permitted such a precedent to pass without protest, as it might hereafter be invoked against them. We feel it our duty again to direct attention to that danger. The rights of neutrals, repeatedly trampled under foot by the United States, have, in the case of the Florida, been violated in an unprecedented manner. Never since the introduction of international law has a grosser outrage been perpetrated. The midnight attack on the Florida, the murder of her crew, and the cutting out of that vessel within the port of Bahia, and under the Brazilian batteries, is unparalleled in modern maritime warfare. The perpetration of that nefarious outrage bespeaks reckless contempt for the rights and power of neutral nations, as well as a total disregard of every international obligation."

The population of France, according to the last census, was 37,382,225, not including the colonies and French subjects abroad. The male population was 18,612,504, and the female 18,739,721. An analysis of this return gives the following numbers:—Boys, 10,210,556; girls, 9,487,541; married men, 7,503,024; married women, 7,457,115; widowers, 928,924; and widows, 1,795,065.

ALGERIA.—General Yusuf received at Raghouat, on the 16th inst., the submission of all the tribes of his division, with the exception of some small bodies now on the way to Raghouat. General Yusuf was to effect a junction with General Deligny on the 19th inst.

SPAIN.—The Duke of Rivas, President of the Council of State, has resigned, and is succeeded by the Marquis Vilumia. Señor Mon has accepted the post of Ambassador to the French Court. The Epoca says that it is the duty of Spain to defend the Papacy by endeavouring to come to an understanding on the subject with France. The Queen has bestowed on the sufferers by the inundations at Valencia the sums destined to celebrate her Majesty's fête. The town of Alcira is described as a heap of ruins in a great lake, the people flying from the catastrophe, and the streets and squares filled with dead horses, broken furniture, &c. The whole land along the coast is described as a sea. The town of Tous lost upwards of 100 houses, and all the other towns along the coast are said to have suffered equally.

SWITZERLAND. — The acquittal of Dr. Hermann Demme, on the charge of poisoning his friend M. Trumpy, has been succeeded by a lamentable family tragedy. After the trial he was betrothed to Madlle. Flora Trumpy, the daughter of the deceased; when meeting with some slight obstacles as to matters of form relating to their marriage, they made their way to Ouchy, and drowned themselves in the Lake of Geneva, leaving a farewell letter announcing their intention to commit suicide together. It is also announced that Madame Trumpy, who was tried with Dr Demme on the charge of being an accessory to the alleged poisoning of her husband, is suffering from mental derangement. She imagines that the trial is still going on, and continually requests to be taken back to the cell which she occupied at the Hotel de Ville while in confinement.

PRUSSIA.—Lord Napier had an audience of the King on Monday, and presented his credentials as British Ambassador to the Prussian Court. His Excellency afterwards visited Count von Bismark. Count Karolyi has also been received by the King. The Prince of Hohenzollern has left for Vienna. The semi-official Provincial Correspondenz of Wednesday says that the great German Powers expect Germany to confide in them that the Schleswig-Holstein question will be settled in accordance with the rights and interests of Germany. It then proceeds as follows:—

"The Prussian Government considers the further occupation of Holstein by the Federal troops to be inadmissible under any pretext. To bring about the speedy withdrawal of the Federal troops the regulations prescribed by the Federal Diet for such a case will first be adopted. To this end negotiations have lately been carried on with Austria, and we hope to obtain the requisite concurrence of that Power. The reply, however, of the Austrian Government to the Prussian propositions has not yet been received."

Count von Bismark has addressed a circular note to all Prussian Consuls, instructing them to treat all vessels belonging to the Duchies which have passed into the possession of the great German Powers as Prussian vessels. The circular further states that such vessels are to pay the same dues as Prussian shipping

In the sitting of the Criminal Court at Berlin on Monday the Public Prosecutor demanded that sentence of death and confiscation of property should be passed, in their absence, upon MM. Dzialynski Guttry, Wolnicwiez Koraczewski, Taczanowski, Zakzewski Radencki, Lutomski Yagnszewski, and Luknszewski, for high treason. Sentence of death was also demanded for the same offence against M. Kosinski, a prisoner at the bar of the court. In the sitting of Wednesday the Public Prosecutor demanded that Prince Czartoryski should be sentenced to six years' imprisonment with hard labour, and at the expiration of that period remain for six years under the surveillance of the police. For Prince Radziwill he requested an acquittal.

AUSTRIA.—In the debate on the Address in the Upper House of the Reichsrath on Tuesday, Count Rechberg said:—

"Austria requires the Prussian alliance as much as Prussia that of Austria. Unfortunately these views were formerly unrecognised, and the consequence to Austria was the war of 1859, which nearly resulted in the loss of her position as a great Power, and caused the loss of Neuenburg to Prussia. The German Middle States look to Austria for help, and every Government in Austria must maintain an alliance with them."

He also pointed out the necessity of the great German Powers acting in concert with the Federal Diet. The Address was then voted by the House. In the sitting of the Lower House on Thursday, Herr von Schmerling, Minister of Finance, stated, in reply to a question, that it was not the intention of the Government during the present Session to bring in a Bill for establishing Ministerial responsibility. He considered that the proper moment for such a measure would only arrive when the Imperial Constitution should have been virtually carried into effect in all parts of the Empire. In conclusion, he denied that the want of such a law was prejudicial to constitutional government.

ITALY.—In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Friday, an order of the day was adopted, by which the various resolutions proposed by some of the members were summarily rejected. In the sitting of Saturday, Signor San Donato proposed the transfer of the capital to Naples, which was opposed by several Neapolitan deputies; and the proposition was withdrawn. General Della Marmora, in opposing the motion, said that King Victor Emmanuel was enthusiastically received on the occasion of his late visit to Naples, and that Francis II. had now no influence whatever. Of this fact the ex-King was himself aware. The General added that two steamers lying in the port of Civita Vecchia, and belonging to Francis II., had been recently offered him for sale. He then showed that Naples was not suitable for the capital of Italy. The Chamber then decided, by 296 to 63, to pass on to the discussion of the separate articles of the Bill. Signor Dixon demanded that the Government should provide for the defence of the country and the arming of the forts. General Della Marmora demonstrated that Italy could defend herself, and that she was not at the mercy of a single battle. He admitted, however, that the united population under arms would render great assistance in case it was necessary to sustain a long defence. He added that it was greatly to the interest of France not to allow Italy to be crushed. The Bill then passed by 317 to 70 votes. Two members abstained from voting. In the sitting of Sunday the Financial Bills of the Government came on for discussion. Signor Sella demanded that in view of the urgency of the question the House should abstain from a general discussion, and proceed at once to the consideration of the separate clauses. To this proposition the House consented, and the first five clauses of the Bills were agreed to. An extraordinary sitting was held in the evening, at which the entire Financial Bills submitted by Signor Sella were agreed to by 137 to 77 votes. On Wednesday the Chamber adopted the Bill for a reduction in the emoluments of public functionaries. In the Senate on Monday Signor Sella brought forward a Financial Bill, for which he requested urgency. The debate on the Bill commenced on Thursday. The Committee of the Senate appointed to examine the Bill for the transfer of the capital are favourable to that measure. The Official Gazette continues to publish lists of the numerous municipalities which have offered to pay the land-tax in advance. Accounts from Rome in the French papers assert that as soon as the votes on the Convention and the bill for the transfer of the capital have been taken in the Italian Parliament, Cardinal Antonelli will address a despatch to Paris, explaining the views of the Pontifical Government in reference to those measures.

GREECE.—The King on the 12th addressed a message to the National Assembly, thanking that body for having finished the Constitution, and appointing a day for the members to take the oath of fidelity. The King also requested a revision of the law relative to the Catholic bishops, and recommended the assembly to devise some practical means of amending the Constitution in this respect. This message was published the day after it was issued, and on the 14th was read to the National Assembly, where it gave rise to an animated debate. The Opposition moved a vote of censure on the Ministry for publishing the message before it had been read to the House. On the question being put, however, the act of the Ministry was approved by 177 to 118 votes.

RUSSIA.—Sir Andrew Buchanan, the new British Ambassador to the Russian Court, has arrived at St. Petersburg, and will present his credentials to the Emperor to-morrow. The Petersburger-Deutsche Zeitung of Saturday says that the visit of the Czarewitch to Rome was without political importance in the sense of a better understanding between Russia and Rome. The relations between the two Courts are unchanged since the last Encyclical Letter of the Pope. The same paper of Sunday declares the statement of the Wanderer, that a threatening note had been despatched by Russia to the Saxon Government, wherein the dismissal of Baron von Beust was demanded, to be untrue. It also states that the assertion of the exequatur of the Saxon Consul at Warsaw having been withdrawn is equally unfounded. The consecration of a piece of ground at Sebastopol, which has been conceded by the Russian Government as a cemetery for the remains of all the French officers and soldiers who fell during the siege of that fortress, took place a few days since with great solemnity, in the presence of the Russian Commander-in-Chief and the officers and troops of the garrison.

POLAND.—It is positively stated that the decree for the abolition of convents has received the Emperor's sanction. Those convents which were implicated in the late insurrection will be entirely suppressed, and the few remaining establishments will be placed under Government supervision.

DANUBIAN PRINCIPALITIES.—Prince Couza has issued a decree instituting a school for the study of the fine arts. The Session of the Councils-General has been opened. All the Councils have sent addresses of congratulation to Prince Couza. Two of them have also voted the necessary funds for the erection of statues of the Prince; four, provincial colleges to bear his name; and 10 others, monuments to be erected in his honour.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—By the Cape mail we have news from Table Bay to the 21st ult. The Governor was in the Free States, engaged in settling the boundary line between that country and Basutoland. The utmost quiet prevailed in Kaffirland. Kreli was settling down upon the lands allotted to him. The despatch from the home government upsetting the previous arrangements made for the settlement of Trankeian territory had caused much dissatisfaction on the frontier. Some of the Kaffir leaders were raising a report that the English Government, afraid of Kreli, had restored some of his country to keep him quiet, but when a fitting opportunity arrived he would retake the whole. A fierce engagement had taken place between the Damaras and the Namaquas, the former tribe seeking to recover a larger number of cattle stolen by the latter from the celebrated traveller Andersen. The Damaras were victorious, but Andersen never recovered his property. He received a bullet in the leg, which shattered the bone, and was carried to a missionary station, where he was left. Mr. John Fairburn, the founder of the press of South Africa, died at Wynberg on Oct. 5. Mr. Bain, the geologist, died at Cape Town on Oct. 20. The Bishop of Cape Town had convened another diocesan synod for next January. Lay delegates were invited to attend. The Cape postmaster-general was ordered to make good the defalcations of the receiving clerk, lately discovered.

INDIA.—By the overland mail we have advices from Bombay to the 28th October. Sir John Lawrence, the Viceroy, arrived at the capital of the Punjab on the 14th October, and met with an enthusiastic reception from all classes of the European and native communities. On the 15th his Excellency, after a public levee, gave private durbar to the Maharajah of Cashmere and 13 other native chiefs. On the 17th, his Excellency paid vice-regal return visits to the Maharajahs, and conducted the ceremony of the Rajah of Kuppoortula's investiture with the Star of India. On the 18th he held a grand Vice-regal Durbar, which was attended by 604 Rajahs, Brahmins, Nabobs, and chiefs, including kings under our protection, princes of the hills, military lords from the Affghan border, the two high priests of the Sikh nation, and the high nobility of the Punjab. No native monarch in the whole history of India ever convoked such a durbar, and the Indian press agrees in asserting that it was the most splendid and imposing ever held. The costumes were magnificent in the extreme. The Rajah of Jheend was dressed in pure white muslin, gleaming with diamonds and emeralds, and a yellow turban. The Maharajah of Putteala wore a dress of rich lavender silk, but so overlaid with emeralds and pearls that the colour could hardly be distinguished. The Maharajah of Cashmere and his son, 10 years of age, were in white, with red and yellow turbans, emeralds and diamonds. One Chief, of great stature, appeared in black and gold with a green turban; another showed his true Sikh extraction by a robe of pure yellow. When Sir John Lawrence appeared on the throne the entire meeting rose in his honour. He then addressed the Chiefs in Hindostanee with the ease and fluency of a native, the first time in Indian history that such a proceeding has been recorded. The following is a summary of his speech:—

"He told them how, when he lately stood in the presence of the Queen of England, she had inculcated on him the duty of promoting their welfare, and how her Consort, the Prince whose greatness and goodness were everywhere known, had always felt the deepest interest in the prosperity of India. He reminded them that 18 years had elapsed since he first set foot in Lahore, and that during 13 years out of them he had been a resident in the province. For many years, he said, his brother, Sir Henry Lawrence, and himself governed that vast country. They all knew him well, and his memory would ever be in their hearts as a ruler who was a real friend of his people. He might truly say that from the day they first exercised [illegible] in the land they spared neither their time nor their [illegible] nor their health in endeavouring to accomplish the [illegible] which they had undertaken. They studied to make themselves acquainted with the usages, the feelings, and the [illegible] every class and race, and they endeavoured to improve the condition of all. He next pointed out the great service which the administration had done for that great province, as well as for other parts of the peninsula. He described three [illegible] reform as resulting from the imposition of British [illegible] the Punjabees. It had reduced the taxation of the [illegible] a very large amount; it had promoted material reform by the construction of roads and canals; and it had [illegible] schools for popular instruction throughout the country. He acknowledged the devotion by which in the hour of danger they had repaid the obligation. The [illegible] loyalty now reigned, and pervaded all classes of the people without distinction. He next pointed out that the system of administration in the Punjab bore its fruits even after its first commencement that, even when the [illegible] mutiny took place, the people in the province remained on the part of the British authority against the mutineers. Much more, he said, would they do so now, when the advantages of British rule had been fully developed, and when the [illegible] ryot as well as every chief acknowledged that the peace and security which they enjoyed were attributable to the [illegible] and intelligent Government under which they lived. In conclusion he told them to educate their children in some [illegible] ing, and to acquaint themselves with the true [illegible] intentions of their rulers, so that they might [illegible] recognise the character of our Government."

At the close of the Durbar the whole 604 [illegible] chiefs were presented to the Viceroy one by one. In the evening Sir Robert Montgomery, the Lieutenant-Governor of Lahore, gave a grand dinner in honour of the event, at which he spoke affectionately of Sir John Lawrence and his two brothers as the friends of his boyhood, at a time when, 45 years ago, they were at school together at Londonderry. Two battalions of British infantry, with a few squadrons of cavalry, sufficed to represent the military power of England on the great occasion, and the assembled chiefs were so much delighted with the bagpipes of the 93d Highlanders that at their request the pipers were three times brought up and played round the great tent; and it is added that the Maharajah of Cashmere has sent an embassy to Sealkote for the express purpose of getting instruction on the instrument from the Highlanders quartered there, while another Hill chieftain has bespoken the genuine article direct from Edinburgh. According to the Delhi Gazette the Khan of Kokan, having learned that 12,000 Russian troops had marched against Tashkund, started from Kokan with [illegible] troops, and gave them battle at Tashkund. The Russians, it is reported, were victorious, and the Khan of Kokan was compelled to retreat. The Russians after taking Tashkund, marched against Kokan and occupied it. Sirdar Mahomed Ameer Khan of Candahar is making preparations for war, and is resolved to fight the Ameer of Cabool. He is fortifying Kelat, has put all his officers on oath to fight to the last. The Ameer of Cabool has received a threatening letter from the King of Bokhara regarding his treatment of Dost Khan and his son. The King has entered upon warlike measures in support of the latter against the Ameer. A body of 12,000 Persians have reached Karaiz on their way to Herat. Affghanistan is in an unsettled state. The Ameer of Cabool's treatment of his brother Dost Khan has excited against him the indignation of all the chiefs. It is rumoured that the Bhotanese have submitted, and offered reparation for the insult to the British authorities. The rumour requires confirmation. The Bhooteas have despatched troops to a dozen different points for the defence of the Dooars. They are able to bring 25,000 troops into the field. The Waghurs have again risen in rebellion in Kattiawar, and defeated the Guicowar's troops sent against them. A small British force, under Major Dennis, accompanied by Major Keatinge, V.C., the political agent, has left Rajkote to quell the insurrection. It is reported from Simla that Sir Robert Napier will succeed Sir H. Rose in the command of the Indian army. Sir C. Trevelyan is said to have been suddenly attacked with severe illness. Sir Herbert Edwardes is said to be alarmingly ill, and will have to leave for England almost immediately. At the instance of the Governor the opulent native community of Bombay subscribed 10,000*l.* in one day for the Cyclone Relief Fund in Calcutta. Mr. David Sassoon, the well-known Jewish merchant of Bombay, has applied to the Secretary of State for permission to erect a statue to the Prince Consort in the gardens of the Victoria Museum at Bombay.

JAPAN.—A telegram from Shanghai of October 1 says that Prince Nagato has agreed to open the Straits of Simonosaki, not to rebuild the demolished forts, and to pay the expenses of the allied expedition. The British merchants have addressed Sir Rutherford Alcock, calling attention to the violation of the treaty in the stoppage of the silk trade by the Japanese authorities. The Gazette of Friday contains the despatch of Admiral Kuper on the action of Simonosaki. It confirms the details already published, and gives ample praise to the French, Dutch, and American officers who supported the Admiral in operations.

UNITED STATES.—The Presidential election has passed off quietly. Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee, have been elected President and Vice-President. Mr. Lincoln carried all the States except New Jersey, Kentucky, and Delaware. He obtained 213 electoral votes, against 21 for General M'Clellan, and a popular majority of nearly 400,000 votes.

General M'Clellan's majority in New York city was 37,000. Two thirds of the Congress are Republican. The State elections are still undetermined; both Democrats and Republicans claim a victory. Mr. Fenton has been elected Governor of New York in the room of Mr. Seymour. Mr. Lincoln was serenaded at Washington on the 10th, and made a speech, in which he declared the peaceable consummation of the recent elections in the midst of a great civil war proved the ability of a Republican Government to maintain its existence in a great emergency, and at the same time preserve the liberties of its people. Now that the elections were over, he appealed to all parties to unite in a common effort to save the common country, and, while expressing his gratitude to Almighty God for directing the mind of the country to what he considered a right conclusion, he added that it afforded no satisfaction to think any other man might have been disappointed by the result. General M'Clellan has resigned his commission in the Federal army. General Butler formally assumed the military command of New York on the 5th. He declared that he would not interfere with the elections unless the civil authorities failed to preserve the peace. He promised that every citizen should be protected in the right of suffrage by the whole power of the Government, and declared that the Federal armies were ministers of good, and not evil, and the soldiers the safeguards of constitutional liberty. He threatened at the same time the punishment by the Federal Government after the elections of all who should be detected in offering fraudulent votes. It is positively asserted that he has warned several prominent gold brokers that they must not speculate in gold to the detriment of the Government; and that he has declared that there can be no militia in any State except the armies of the United States. The elections in all the wards of the city passed over quietly, and there was no disturbance anywhere. General Butler has since left for the James River. Confederate journals state that now, for the first time, Lee's forces equal Grant's in number. An offensive movement by Lee is anticipated. The Confederates reconnoitred Grant's left, and after considerable skirmishing and the loss of a couple of hundred men on either side, the Confederates returned to their intrenchments. General Grant's troops are building log houses. The Confederates in the Shenandoah Valley have been reinforced, and are attempting to flank Sheridan. They threaten Pennsylvania and Maryland. It is said that General Early will assume the offensive by making a flank movement round the Federal right; and there are rumours of a co-operative movement by Longstreet and Breckenridge in South-Western Virginia for an invasion of the Northern States. Sheridan has retired to Winchester. Many of his horses have died of starvation. All attempts to secure forage to the east or west of his camp are repelled by Mosby's cavalry, and many of the foraging parties, together with their trains, have been captured. Forrest captured Johnsonsville, Tennessee, on the 3d of October, with three gunboats, eight transports, their officers and crews, all the Federal stores, and many cannon. The Federal garrison had previously evacuated the place. Federal officers from Chattanooga report that Sherman has abandoned the pursuit of Hood, and, finding it impossible to hold Atlanta, has evacuated Atlanta and burnt that place; also that Lee is destroying the railway and removing the rails to Chattanooga. They add that Sherman, with five corps, was marching through Georgia towards Charleston, South Carolina, a distance of 300 miles. This statement is contradicted by some of the papers, which assert that he has started for Andersonsville or Savannah on a 60 day's campaign, while other papers state that he is marching on Knoxville, his object being Lynchburg, Virginia. Hood is said to be marching on Chattanooga, where Forrest is expected to join him. General Blunt reports skirmishing with Price's rear guard at Newtown, Missouri, on the 28th. Price was still moving towards Arkansas, Confederate accounts confirm the sinking of the Albemarle, and report the capture of Plymouth, North Carolina, by the Federal gunboats on the 31st ult. The Confederates evacuated the city on the approach of the gunboats. The great expedition against Wilmington has been abandoned. Mr. Seward has made a speech at Auburn, in which he declared that there was no intention on the part of the Administration to abandon the present war measures against slavery for the adoption of a policy of conservation and concession, and that the war must go on until one side or the other succumbed through exhaustion. The illegal capture of the Florida in Bahia creates much discussion. Capt. Collins's conduct is approved by the people, but will not, it is thought, be supported by the Government. A Bill has been introduced into the Confederate Congress, which reassembled at Richmond on the 7th inst., enlisting all white men between 18 and 45, and revoking all exemptions. The following is an abstract of President Davis's Message at the opening of the Congress:—

"The military, financial, and material situation of the country is favourable. Foreign relations are unchanged. He considers the disregard of recognition by European nations as unreasonable, since the French and English Governments had long since expressed their conviction that the United States were unable to conquer the Confederacy. Two years since the French Government announced to the London and St. Petersburg Cabinets its conclusion that the United States were unable to achieve a decisive military success; and the replies of England and Russia intimated no contrary opinion. Neutrals seek to palliate the wrong of non-recognition, by professing to consider that recognition would be valueless without further intervention. The South disclaims any desire for intervention, and mistrusts its advantages. It seeks no favour and wishes no intervention. It knows itself competent to maintain its rights and independence. England in 1862 refused recognition on the ground that the action of the British Government would inflame the passions of the belligerents and prevent the return of peace. Experience shows this opinion to be erroneous, as the result is the reverse of what the British Ministry humanely desired. A contrary policy, just to the South, is still within the power of the British Government, and would produce consequences the opposite of those which have followed its course since the commencement of the war. Peace was impossible without independence. It was not to be expected that the North would anticipate the neutral Powers in the recognition of the independence of the South. History would be unable for those reasons to absolve the European nations from a share in the moral responsibility for the unnecessary lives that had been sacrificed during the war. The Government adequately provides for a foreign loan, if only rated 6d. in the pound. He recommends the Government to purchase the slaves it employs, engaging to give them freedom at the termination of their service, rather than impressment for a short period. He also suggests that the number of slaves employed by the Government be increased to 40,000, and employed as engineers, labourers, and pioneers. This number, by preparatory training, will form a more valuable reserve in case of emergency than a larger number suddenly called from field labour. Beyond this limit and these employments it does not seem desirable to go. He disapproves of a general levy and arming of the slaves; but should the alternative be presented of subjugation, or the employment of slaves as soldiers, no doubt exists what would then be his decision. The South was willing to negociate for a peaceful solution, but the Federal Government expressed its determination to make no peace except on terms of Southern submission and degradation, leaving no hope of the cessation of hostilities until the Northern delusion of ability to conquer the South is dispelled."

BRAZILS.—Accounts from Rio of October 25 state that immediately on the receipt of the news of the capture of the Florida the Brazilian Government addressed a note to General Webb, the United States Minister at that Court. General Webb, in reply, assured the Brazilian Cabinet that the United States Government had no complicity with the act of the captain of the Wachusetts, and that every reparation will be offered to it that honour and justice require, more promptly and frankly than if the same act had been perpetrated in a harbour of the most powerful maritime nation of the world. At the same time he says that it will be to his Government, as it is to himself, a source of very sincere regret that, if such an event must of necessity have occurred, it did not take place in the waters of England, which, 15 days after hearing of the rebellion in the United States, joyfully proclaimed the Southern States a "belligerent" Power, while they wanted the manhood to declare, in the face of Europe, the destruction of the American Government and Union by a recognition of their sovereignty and independence.

MEXICO.—Advices from Mexico give the rumour of an attempt to assassinate the Empress Charlotte. The rumour is not credited. The Juarez leaders are rapidly giving adherence to the Emperor.

SAN DOMINGO.—Advices from San Domingo to the 25th ult., state that the insurgent commissioners who were sent to ask the conditions upon which peace would be concluded, have not yet returned.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE ROMAN WALL OF LONDON.—At a meeting of the Society of Antiquaries last week, Earl Stanhope, the President, in the chair, Mr. Tite, M.P. read a paper descriptive of some recently discovered remains of the walls of Roman London. He stated that in 1853 a beautiful tessellated pavement was found by him under Gresham House in Broad Street. This interesting discovery had always led him to believe that similar remains existed in the same neighbourhood, further strengthened by the fact that in Trinity Square, just adjoining, a portion of the ancient wall of London still existed above ground, which, though not Roman, was supposed to rest on Roman foundations. In 1841 the Blackwall Railway, much further north than this point, cut through Roman remains of the great wall, but beyond that slight indication things remained in the same state until the autumn of this year. In 1864 certain very large works were undertaken in Cooper Row for the erection of immense warehouses by a London architect, Mr. Clifton, who in August of this year photographed some curious remains discovered in executing these works. On visiting the spot he found a very extensive fragment of a Norman wall, with archer arrow slits and other defensive appliances. The fragment was 110 feet long, and in height from the bottom of the foundation to the top of the parapet 41 ft. All the foundations and a considerable portion of the lower wall were undoubtedly Roman, built of square stones in regular courses, with bonding courses of Roman brick of intense hardness and excellent cement. The cement was so hard that he could not procure a whole brick for exhibition, but had obtained one broken in half. This specimen seemed to be as hard as any red earthenware, and was, as was always the case with the Romans, more of what we should call a tile, being about a foot square and 1½ thick. The mortar between the bricks, unlike our modern system, was nearly as thick as the bricks themselves, and abounding in portions of pounded brick. He showed the exact place of these remains in an ancient plan of London in the reign of Elizabeth, when the walls and gates were in existence. He then pointed out a few other localities where undoubted Roman remains of these walls were traceable—viz., Camomile Street, the street still called London Wall, and near Moorgate. In referring to the history of Roman London, he pointed out that there could have been no walls at the time when Suetonius abandoned it in A.D. 61. He quoted some Norman historians, who referred the walls to a period as late as the Empress Helena, but his opinion seemed to be that they dated about the second century of our era. Of the distinctly Norman work above this level he attributed that to the period when Archbishop Langton and William Marshall, Earl of Pembroke, had failed in their first endeavours to prevail on King John to restore the ancient laws contained in the Great Charter; the associated Barons assumed their arms, and with their forces marched first to Northampton and thence to Bedford. They were favourably received there by William de Beauchamp, and there also came to them messengers from London, who privately advised them immediately to go thither. On this they advanced to Ware, and arrived at Aldgate after a night march on the 24th of May, 1215, the Sunday before Ascension Day. Finding the gates open, says Roger de Wendover, they entered the city without any tumult, while the inhabitants were performing Divine service; for the rich citizens were favourable to the Barons, and the poor ones were afraid to complain of them. After this, the walls being in a ruinous state, they restored them, using the materials of the Jews' houses existing in the neighbourhood and then destroyed to build up the defences, which, as Fitzstephen relates, were in a subsequent reign in a high state of excellence. Mr. Tite pursued his history of the wall of London through its various phases of ruin and revival until the patriotic Lord Mayor, citizen, and draper Ralph Joscelyne, in 1477, completely restored all the walls, gates, and towers, in which work he was assisted by the Goldsmiths' and other companies, and by Sir John Crosby, a member of the Grocers' Company. The gradual increase of the necessities of the citizens for more space and the Great Fire of 1666 completed the destruction of these once important defences, and but few remains now exist to show their extent and value. The total area enclosed by the walls which still constitutes the great "City of London" is only about 380 acres. The paper was illustrated by beautiful drawings of the remains by Mr. Brass and Mr. Tyerman, and was listened to with much attention.

SUICIDE OF COLONEL TENNANT.—On Wednesday morning Lieut.-Colonel Tennant, late of the 35th Regiment of Foot, committed suicide by shooting himself at his residence, Raglan Road. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Temporary Insanity.

ALTERATION OF THE CAPE MAILS.—Commencing with next month the direct mail packets for the Cape of Good Hope, St. Helena, and Ascension, will in future leave Plymouth on the morning of the 10th of each month, on the arrival of the mail from London on the previous evening. When the 9th of the month falls on Sunday, the mails will not be despatched from London until the evening of the 10th, and the packet will not sail until the morning of the 11th. These packets will go on from the Cape to Mauritius, calling at Natal, and any letters for Mauritius, specially directed viâ Cape of Good Hope, will be sent by that route at the same rate of postage as when forwarded viâ Southampton and Suez.

VALUE OF LAND IN THE CITY.—At the Sheriff's Court on the 11th a special jury was summoned to assess the amount to be given by the Metropolitan Railway for a freehold house in Charterhouse Square built in 1708 and leased in 1856 for 21 years at 70*l.* a year. The value of the reversion, with the addition of 15 per cent. on account of the compulsory sale, was estimated by several valuers at from 2400*l.* to 2500*l.* The claimant was one of two trustees under a marriage settlement, and it was a great disappointment to part with the property, which, like all other city property, had greatly increased, and was increasing, in value. The jury awarded the compensation at 2450*l.* Another special jury was summoned to the Sheriff's Court in the case of "Ellis v. The Tottenham and Hampstead Junction Railway Company," to award the amount of compensation for some land, and for damage done by a cutting in the property of the claimant. The jury gave 1105*l.* for the land, and 750*l.* for the severance made to the property. At the Lord Mayor's Court last week, the case of the trustees of Dr. Williams' Library and the Metropolitan Railway Company was heard, when the jury assessed the amount of compensation at 10,200*l.*

OPENING OF A REFRESHMENT ROOM IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM.—On Monday a great and long desired improvement in connection with the reading-room of the British Museum was officially announced, the establishment of a refreshment-room. The regulations are few and simple, and such as to promote the general comfort of readers and students.

SACRILEGE IN THE INNER TEMPLE.—A correspondent of the Times, under the signature of "Old Mortality Redivivus," states that he has discovered the tomb and monument of Selden in the Inner Temple, covered with rubbish, and totally neglected. He has also found that the dust and bones of this profound scholar have been carted away and shot into a dusthole. He suggests the removal of the old monument from its present position behind the seats of the Benchers of the Middle Temple to the ambulatory of the Greek Church, where at least the stranger may read without inconvenience the simple memorial.

THE SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR THE WOUNDED DANES.—The committee formed under the presidency of the Marquis of Clanricarde, to collect funds for the relief of the sick and wounded of the Danish army, have remitted a final sum of 121*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* to the Danish committee at Copenhagen, making a total of nearly 9200*l.* collected in England and remitted to Denmark for this benevolent object.

REPORTED LOSS OF CAPTAIN SEMMES'S NEW STEAMER.—On Monday a notice was posted at Lloyd's, announcing the loss of the Sea King, screw steamship, on the rocks near the Desertas, off the Island of Madeira. This is the steamer which was taken up for the service of Captain Semmes, late of the Alabama, and which changed her name to the Shenandoah on her arrival at Madeira, where the Laurel steamer met her with men and stores. The report of her loss is discredited by the Confederate agents in this country. When last heard of she was at sea, and far from the Desertas.

THE PLAISTOW MURDER.—On Saturday the prisoner was again brought before the magistrates at Ilford, when Mr. Giffard, the barrister, stated that he appeared on behalf of the Government, who had determined to take the matter into their own hands, and asked for a remand, in order to complete the case for the prosecution. This was agreed to, and the further examination was adjourned to Saturday. The coroner's inquest was resumed on Wednesday, when, for the first time, the prisoner was brought before the jury. He was defended by a solicitor, and the evidence of the witnesses previously taken was read over to him. Dr. Letheby gave in a report of the chemical analysis he had made of spots on the prisoner's clothes and on the hatchet, showing that there were upon them traces of blood, of human hair, and of threads that appeared to have come from the neckerchief of the murdered man. The Coroner then summed up, and the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the prisoner, who was committed for trial on the coroner's warrant.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths registered in London in the week that ended Saturday, November 19, were 1742. The average number in the corresponding week of ten years, 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1411. The present return is therefore 331 above the average. Bronchitis continues to be the principal cause of this excessive and rapid increase in the mortality. During the week the births of 944 boys and 1016 girls, in all 1960 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1906.

Provincial.

ALDERLEY.—The local papers state that during his recent visit to Cheshire Earl Russell planted a Spanish chestnut to commemorate his son's marriage, and that throughout the festivities he was the merriest of the merry. At the dance in the evening his lordship, oblivious to the cares of State, led a buxom Cheshire lass down a long country dance, and on arriving at the bottom of the room evinced signs of exhaustion, when one of his friends went up, and, tapping him on his shoulder, advised his lordship "to rest, and be thankful!" The Earl enjoyed the joke, and joined in the laugh it excited.

BROMLEY.—Two railway labourers, called Staples and Turner, were brought before the magistrates in this town on Tuesday, on a charge of murdering James Fisher, at Orpington, on Saturday night. The deceased had been quarrelling with one of the prisoners at the door of a public-house, but was advised by two constables to go home. The prisoners went after him, and the policemen suspecting that they intended mischief, followed, but before they could overtake them the prisoners had attacked the deceased, and were in the act of lifting him from the ground. His face was covered with blood, and he appeared to have been savagely kicked about the eyes, one of which had been entirely destroyed. He was insensible, and never rallied. The prisoners were remanded to await the result of the inquest.

DEVONPORT.—On Thursday night a fire broke out in the Dockyard in a large store-room for cabin furniture, immediately over the steam [illegible]. Nearly all the furniture and the west roof of the [illegible] were destroyed. A portion of the flooring was burnt, and some slight damage done to the [illegible].

DOVER.—The Robin Hood, 800 tons, from [illegible] to Hongkong, with a general cargo, was run [illegible] the Spirit of the Ocean, homeward bound, [illegible] geness on Monday night. The captain and [illegible] to their boats, and the Robin Hood immediately [illegible] down. Part of the crew were picked up and [illegible] London; the other part were landed at [illegible]. Another ship, called the Horizon, belonging [illegible] same owners, was abandoned in the Channel [illegible] 22d inst. with 10 feet of water in her hold, [illegible] voyage from Calcutta to London. The crew [illegible] picked up by a Dutch vessel.

LEEDS.—A meeting of the contributories [illegible] Leeds Banking Company took place on Wednesday [illegible] Vice-Chancellor Kindersley's chambers, in Lincoln's Inn. Mr. Turquand, the official liquidator [illegible] Company, applied for leave to issue notices of [illegible] 70*l.* per share. From his statement it appeared [illegible] the liabilities of the Company are 503,000*l.*, [illegible] call of 70*l.* a share on the 7340 shares would produce 513,800*l.*, a sum sufficient to meet all ultimate requirements. Leave to issue the notices was at once given, all questions as to the rights of individual shareholders or classes of shareholders being left open.

LEICESTER.—Two labouring men, when digging in a gravel pit at Stockerton in June last, found a purse containing 62 gold coins, which were forwarded to the Treasury as "treasure trove." A few days since the chief constable of the county received instructions from the Lords of the Treasury to pay the finder the sum of 55*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, being the value of the treasure.

LIVERPOOL.—The Government has instructed the Solicitor to the Treasury to make a thorough investigation into the facts of the Federal Enlistment case, and to detain the ship in the meantime. The Solicitor to the Treasury has placed the matter in the hands of Messrs. Bateson, Robinson, and Morris. Mr. [illegible] has got 126 men back from the ship, and has sent them to their homes. The Mayor has received a communication from Sir George Grey informing him that a commission has been appointed by her Majesty to inquire into the sanitary condition of Liverpool.

MALTON.—The great consternation into which the farmers of the East Riding have been thrown by the numerous incendiary fires has induced them to set night watchers over their property. Mr. Spink, of Bartindale, near Hunmanby, was aroused early on Monday week by his watcher announcing that he had seen a man run away from the stacks. An examination was immediately made, when it was found that a train of straw had been placed from one stack to another, and a second train from the stacks to the house. This circumstance induced the police to make a closer scrutiny into the affair, and measuring the footmarks around the stacks, they found them exactly to correspond with the footmarks that led to Mr. Spink's house. The officers at once charged the watcher with having made the trains himself, and demanded his object for so doing. The watcher eventually confessed he had made the trains, stating that he thought Mr. Spink would applaud his extreme watchfulness. He did consider him such a trustworthy servant that he would employ him on the farm throughout the year. Mr. Spink declined to prosecute, but of course immediately dismissed the man. A movement is on foot among the Wold farmers for the purpose of associating and only employing labourers of respectability, the object being to starve out and drive away those suspicious characters known as "fire rangers."

MANCHESTER.—At a meeting of the Executive Committee on Monday, the Hon. Secretary reported that the balance in the bank was 89,528*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*, and that on the 12th inst. there was an increase of 737 in the number of persons receiving parochial relief as compared with the previous week, the total number being 109,309. It was stated that there was a balance of upwards of [illegible] in the hands of various local committees [illegible] remitted for distribution. After some discussion it was resolved to issue a circular to these committees stating that, in justice to those who have faithfully remitted all the subscriptions confided to them and also to the public, on whom further claims have been [illegible] advocated, the Central Committee trust that unremitted balances will be regarded as a [illegible] which the Central Committee may depend for the relief of the indigence of the cotton districts.

NORWICH.—Brother Ignatius announced a few [illegible] since that he would have nothing further to do with any "Norwich monks" in connection with his mission. This declaration was provoked by the conduct of Brother Martin, a young man named William [illegible] has resided for some time in Norwich. It appears some time since Brother Martin quitted the monastery as he considered himself aggrieved by a too severe penance inflicted upon him by Brother Dunstan in the absence of Brother Ignatius. On the return of Brother Ignatius to Norwich, the penance was remitted, and Brother Martin was reinstated. A day or two afterwards he left the monastery for good, and has since published a letter in the Norfolk News, stating that having taken the Penny Post from the library without permission, but intending to ask for it to read [illegible] the night watch, he was condemned to a penance, to which he did not choose to submit. He says:—

"I was ordered to say 100 rosaries, all paternosters (the Lord's Prayer). Now, as there are 61 beads on the rosary, and I was to say a paternoster for each, and go round 100 times, you will observe that my punishment for this slight misdemeanour was to repeat the Lord's Prayer 1000 times! And what was more, instead of going to bed at half past three and sleeping as I should otherwise have done, after watch and services, I was to sit up to perform this task, and then keep my watch, the next night after all. But this was not the whole of the penalty. The prior directed also that I should write out the 'Rule of Silence' 50 times; and as each time would occupy about 20 minutes, here was the prospect of the additional occupation of about 17 hours, whenever I could find the time between services and work. The result was that the thorough disgust which had been for some time growing in my mind with the monastic life as carried out on this Hill reached its climax, and I left the same evening, having good reason to know that this severe penance was more the consequence of personal ill-feeling towards me than of any particular regard to the law which I was said to have broken. Another brother had read different newspapers at forbidden times and without leave, but no notice had been taken of the offence. I question whether, were the prior so strict with others as he was with me, they would not also refuse submission, seeing that the prior (Brother Dunstan) is like myself but a young man (he is only 17), and the two others are about three or four and twenty. I may say, in conclusion, that Ignatius's profession that the rule of St. Benedict is strictly kept in Norwich is altogether a mistake. I have spent four months and a half there, and have seen such irregularities as have convinced me that this so-called Anglican Order of Benedictines is all a sham. I took my vows for six months; and therefore, though I have for some time been surprised at what I witnessed, and of which the public outside have little idea, I thought I would at least stay out my time. I am now glad, however, at the step I have taken, and shall with your leave, take an early opportunity of exposing the hollowness of the whole affair.—I am, W. BELL (late + MARTIN, A.O.S.B.)"

NOTTINGHAM.—Proceedings have been taken, by direction of the Lord Chancellor, against the official assignee of the Nottingham Bankruptcy Court, to enable the assignee "to show cause why he should not pay 20 per cent. on the extra funds he had in hand." Mr. Commissioner Sanders presided as judge, and after the evidence of the assignee was tendered on Saturday, the examination was adjourned to the 29th inst.

PLYMOUTH. — The Norwegian barque Tamworth, from Bordeaux for Buenos Ayres, put into the Sound on Sunday. She has on board 59 French and German passengers, some of whom are detained by force. Eleven of the Frenchmen have made several attempts to leave the vessel, but are detained on the plea that they have been enrolled in France to serve the Brazilian Government, and have accepted the bounty.

SHEFFIELD.—The Town Council have presented a memorial to the Home Secretary pointing out the injury caused by the discharge of sewage and other noxious matters into streams and rivers, and praying that as the law at present is inoperative to prevent the evil, Sir George Grey will bring in a Bill during the next session of Parliament to prohibit the pollution of rivers and to make the penalties heavier and more effective.

SUNDERLAND.—The knighthood of the Legion of Honour has just been conferred by the Emperor on M. Paulin Niboyet, the French Consul at Sunderland, as a reward for the services he has rendered to the shipping trade of the two countries.

TYNEMOUTH. — The Aberdeen passenger steamer Stanley, and a schooner, name unknown, were wrecked off Tynemouth Battery Point on Thursday night. All the crew of the schooner were lost, and 20 to 30 lives perished from the steamer, 33 persons being saved by the rocket apparatus. The only boat that could get alongside was the Tynemouth lifeboat of the National Institution, and in doing so she broke all her oars, was stove in on her broadside, and lost two of her crew.

WINDSOR.—On Monday, being the 24th birthday of the Crown Princess of Prussia, the Church of All Saints, of which her Royal Highness on her last birthday laid the foundation stone, was consecrated by the Bishop of Oxford. The Princess of Wales and the Princess Helena, attended by several ladies of the Court, were present at the service.—On Monday Ellen West, lady's maid to Lady Phipps, was again brought up for examination on charges of robbing her mistress, and of obtaining goods under false pretences, and was fully committed for trial by the bench of magistrates. Since her apprehension nearly 200 letters have been found in her room at Lady Phipps's residence in Windsor Castle, all of them relating to property which she had made away with. The greater part of this property has been recovered through the exertions of the police.

Ireland.

FEDERAL RECRUITING IN IRELAND.—At the Athlone Court House, a few days since, John Murphy was charged with tampering with some soldiers of the 25th Regiment, with a view to induce them to desert and join the Federal army. The prisoner seems to have acted in a very incautious manner, as he spoke openly in publichouses and elsewhere to several soldiers about the advantages they might secure by enlisting in the Northern service. One soldier stated that the prisoner offered him a commission on condition of his getting nine others to desert with him. In his possession were found some seditious papers and pamphlets, principally of American origin. He was remanded for the production of further evidence, and has since been committed for trial.

Railways.

SOUTH-WESTERN EXTENSION TO THE CITY.—It is understood that an agreement has been made between the South-Western Company and the London, Chatham, and Dover, by which the former will obtain access for their whole system over the Metropolitan Extension lines of the latter to the Ludgate Hill Station, and thence over their City Junction line to the Metropolitan and Great Northern at Farringdon Street. The arrangement also embraces the widening of the Metropolitan Extension lines, and the providing additional accommodation at Farringdon Street for the South-Western, if required, at their cost, upon land already acquired by the London, Chatham, and Dover; and the whole of the system will be completed in the ensuing summer.

PROPOSED RAILWAY UNDER THE RIVER MERSEY.—It is intended to apply to Parliament in the coming session for powers to be vested in the Great Western, London and North-Western, and other companies, to form a new company for the purpose of connecting Liverpool and Birkenhead by rail. The project is to carry a line up the Cheshire bank, from Birkenhead to Bebbington, thence by a tunnel under the Mersey to Toxteth Park, which is the south end of the borough of Liverpool. It is intended to connect this line with the Chester and Birkenhead on the one hand, and with the Liverpool Central on the other; and also to extend it into the higher parts of the town of Liverpool.

Law.

COURT OF CHANCERY: St. Thomas's Hospital.—This case was again brought before the Lord Chancellor on Wednesday. It may be remembered that on a previous day he intimated his opinion that the right lay with the chartered Governors, but adjourned the case that it might be put in such a shape as to allow the Corporation to carry it to the House of Lords. It was now stated that the City would not prosecute the matter further, as they were satisfied with the adverse decisions of his lordship and Vice Chancellor Wood. The appeal was therefore dismissed with costs.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH: (Sittings in Banco before Lord Chief Justice Cockburn and Justices Crompton and Shee.)—The Confederate Enlistment Case.—The Queen v. Jones and Highatt.—This was the great enlistment case, tried at Liverpool before the Lord Chief Justice, when the defendants Jones and Highatt were found guilty of enlisting seamen for a Confederate cruiser, which was at the time lying at Calais. Some points of law, however, were reserved, which came on for argument before this Court on Wednesday; but after the case was called the counsel for the prisoners intimated that they would not contest the matter further, on the understanding that the fine to be imposed on them did not exceed 50*l*. The Attorney-General, for the Crown, agreed to this arrangement, as it was the first case and the points were new. The Lord Chief Justice said that the Court would sanction the arrangement, but they hoped it would be understood that it is not because the fine inflicted was comparatively moderate that they entertained any doubt of the importance of the statute that had been violated, and the necessity of their upholding and enforcing the law as essential to the character and honour of this country. This must not at all be taken as a guide what the Court would do on any future occasion should the law be again violated. The defendants were then fined 50*l*. each.

COURT OF DIVORCE: Codrington v. Codrington, Anderson and Mildmay.—This was a suit for a divorce instituted by Admiral Codrington against his wife with Major Anderson and Lieut. Mildmay as co-respondents. After occupying a special jury for several days in the summer, and again this term by adjournment, it terminated on Wednesday, when the jury found a verdict that Mrs. Codrington had committed adultery both with Colonel Anderson and with Lieutenant Mildmay, and that Admiral Codrington had not by his conduct conduced to his wife's misconduct. The question of costs was reserved.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT: The Case of Locking-up a Wife.—Edward Hammond, Emily Wakeman, and Elizabeth Allan, surrendered to take their trial upon an indictment charging them with unlawfully imprisoning for a hundred and twenty-one days, Rosalind Hammond, the wife of the male defendant. There was also a second indictment against them for a common assault. The facts of the case are all well-known, having been so recently before the magistrates at the police-court. The husband now pleaded Guilty, and the two female prisoners were discharged. The Court postponed judgment on the husband, and in the meantime admitted him to bail.

He represented Birmingham in the Conservative interest from 1844 until the general election in 1847, when he unsuccessfully contested the borough with the late Mr. Muntz. He was however immediately returned for North Warwickshire, which he has continued to represent uninterruptedly to the present time. He was for many years one of the recognised leaders of the Protestant cause in the House of Commons, and was the indefatigable opponent of the grant to Maynooth. He married, in 1804, the fourth daughter of Dr. Wetherell, Dean of Hereford. His eldest sister married the well-known William Wilberforce, M.P. for Yorkshire, the father of the Bishop of Oxford. METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

Monday, Nov. 21.

The number of Beasts is rather smaller than on Monday last. Choice qualities are still scarce, and command high prices. The supply of Sheep is shorter, but a fair average for the time of year. The demand is very limited, and prices are scarcely as good as of late. The trade for Calves is the same as on Thursday. From Germany and Holland there are 3060 Beasts, 6180 Sheep, 205 Calves, and 80 Pigs; from Scotland, 40 Beasts; from Ireland, 580; and 2200 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

Thursday, Nov. 24.

Although the supply of Beasts is by no means large, it is fully equal to the demand. Trade is very dull, and it is difficult to realise Monday's quotations. There is very little business doing in the Sheep market. The few good qualities on offer are disposed of at about Monday's prices. Trade is very inactive for all descriptions of Stock. The foreign supply is 340 Beasts, 570 Sheep, 195 Calves, and 30 Pigs, from Germany and Holland.

HOPS.—Borough Market, Friday, Nov. 25.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report an unusually good demand at this period of the year for Hops of all descriptions; fine samples are very scarce, and command higher rates. There is somewhat more demand for old Hops at improved prices.

MARK LANE.—Monday, Nov. 21.

There was a short supply of English Wheat to this morning's market, and a moderate quantity of Spring Corn, with fair arrivals of Irish Oats. Dry English Wheat was taken off steadily at last Monday's prices. Damp parcels not wanted. The inquiry for foreign Wheat was in retail, and prices were without any quotable variation. Fine malting Barley sold steadily at previous rates; other kinds dull and easier to buy. Malt realised barely as much money. Beans sold on rather lower terms. Peas were unaltered in value. The business transacted in Oats was to a moderate extent, at about last Monday's currency. Town Flour was unchanged. Country marks brought as much money. Americans were firm.

Friday, Nov. 25.

The weather since the 19th has been very stormy, much rain has fallen, and yesterday morning some snow. The continued dulness and inactivity in the Wheat trade has been somewhat increased during the past week in several of the country markets, owing to the condition of the Wheat being affected by the weather, but we observe no alteration in the quotations. Business in spring corn has been equally inanimate, and any change that may have occurred in prices has been against the holders. Since Friday last 34 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has been quiet, and the few cargoes of Wheat off the coast are held for late rates, but there is no demand. Paris, Nov. 24.—Flour has remained unaltered in value, but only a limited business has been transacted. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. 3d. per 280 lb. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 29,600 cwt. Wheat is a slow sale at 9d. per 480 lbs. decline. The arrivals of all grain, both English and foreign, during the week have been very small, with the exception of foreign Barley, which was good. The attendance at this morning's market was very limited. The value of Wheat, either English or foreign, is unaltered from Monday, but the little business doing is quite of a retail character. Prices of all descriptions of spring corn are unchanged.

Liverpool: Nov. 22.—At this morning's market we had very little more than the usual consumptive demand from millers and dealers for Wheat, but some considerable purchases having been made for American account, we quote prices fully as high as on Friday. Flour is held firmly, but moves slowly. American corn is no cheaper, but Danubian is offering ex quay at 3d. per qr. reduction. Oats and Oatmeal less active than of late. Beans meet a better sale. Peas and Barley are not much inquired for. At close of market sellers of Wheat are looking for better prices.

Friday, Nov. 25.—Market moderately attended. Wheat steady at Tuesday's rates. Flour dull. Indian Corn weak. Beans steady. Oats and Oatmeal quiet.

PATENT GUTTA PERCHA SOLES.—IMPORTANT TO GARDENERS.—The Gutta Percha Company have pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of the following letter from G. GLENNY, Esq., the celebrated Florist:—
"GENTLEMEN,—I have worn Gutta Percha Soles and Heels these two years, and being so much in a garden as I necessarily am in all weathers, and with the ground in all states, I would on no account be without them. As a matter of economy I would recommend Gardeners to use them, for they may repair the worn part at all times by warming the material at the fire, and pressing it from the sound parts to the worn parts, as easily as if it were so much dough. I think it the duty of all persons who must occasionally wet their feet to adopt a material that completely defies damp. Many a gardener would escape colds and rheumatism by the use of Gutta Percha Soles.—Your obedient servant, "G. GLENNY."
Every variety of Gutta Percha articles, such as Mill Bands, Tubing, Soles, Sheet, Pump Buckets, Fire Buckets, Bosses, Union Joints, Flasks, Bottles, Bowls, Chamber Vessels, Toilet Trays, Sponge Bags, Curtain Rings, Galvanic Batteries, Calbotype trays, &c., manufactured by the Gutta Percha Company, and sold by their wholesale dealers in town or country.

To Users of Portable Steam Engines.
A Suggestion of the Principal Agricultural Engineers.
TURNER'S PATENT STRAP COMPANY are preparing their PATENT STRAPS or BELTS, specially adapted for use with Portable Engines, when Driving Threshing or other Machinery unsheltered. These Engine Straps are made from the centre of the backs only of the primest hides, and they are used with confidence as the best and most economical that can be used. From 40 to 60 feet long by 5 inches wide, 6d.; 5½ inches wide, 7½d.; other lengths and widths in proportion. Turner's Patent Leather Straps or Belts are made from hides prepared by a process which preserves and strengthens the natural fibre, instead of destroying it as is the case with tanning. They have been tested for many years, and have been proved to drive higher velocities and with greater power than any other kind of driving belt. When properly adjusted to the pulleys they scarcely ever require any attention. They are cheaper than any other belts, not only in the first instance, but by reason of their greater durability, and they are equally suitable for ordinary and out-door purposes, and wet and dry weather. Turner's Straps can be relied upon in all climates, and are particularly deserving of the attention of exporters.
Prices:—Widths, 1 in., 2½d.; 1½ in., 3½d.; 2 in., 5d.; 2½ in., 6½d.; 3 in., 8d.; 3½ in., 10½d.; 4 in., 1s.; 4½ in., 1s. 2d.; 5 in., 1s. 4½d.; 5½ in., 1s. 6d.; 6 in., 1s. 8d.; 7 in., 2s.; 8 in., 2s. 4d.; 9 in., 2s. 8½d.; 10 in., 3s.; 11 in., 3s. 6½d.; 12 in., 4s. per foot lineal.

AUSTIN'S ARTIFICIAL STONE.
Invented by FELIX AUSTIN, 1826.
The close resemblance of this material to Portland or other Limestones (in strong distinction from Terra Cotta, and other kinds of pottery) causes it to be overlooked as a peculiar invention, and to be mistaken for the natural stone. There are consequently thousands of gardens where the work might be expected to act as an advertisement and recommendation, but where from the cause mentioned it fails to do so.
It becomes necessary therefore to call the attention of the present generation to the established character of the Manufactory, which after so many years practice has accumulated the largest quantity of Models that probably ever existed in one concern. An idea of them may be conveyed by the following summary:—
246 DIFFERENT KINDS of VASES.
94 STATUES and FIGURES of CHILDREN.
70 FIGURES of ANIMALS and BIRDS.
About 200 FOUNTAINS, at prices from £10 to £400.

News of the Week.

EARL RUSSELL'S reply to the Confederate Manifesto, which has been transmitted to the principal Governments of Europe by Messrs. SLIDELL, MASON, and DUDLEY MANN, has been published this week. It is remarkable as adopting a phraseology different from that hitherto employed by her Majesty's Ministers both in Parliament and in their diplomatic communications. While still describing the Southern States as "the so-called Confederate States of America," it no longer speaks of the "United States of America;" but uses the phrase, "the Northern and Southern States of the formerly united Republic of America." It declares that since the commencement of the civil war in 1861, her Majesty's Government have entertained sentiments of friendship equally for the North and for the South. It says that they have never presumed to judge the causes of the rupture; but they deplore the sanguinary struggle, and anxiously look forward to its termination. In the meantime they are convinced that they best consult the interests of peace and respect the rights of all parties by continuing to observe a strict and impartial neutrality.

The Prussian Government on Monday despatched a Plenipotentiary Extraordinary to Dresden and Hanover, to demand in the name of Austria and Prussia the evacuation of Holstein and Lauenburg by the Saxon and Hanoverian troops within a period of five days. This demand is made upon the ground that the Federal execution, which Saxony and Hanover were ordered by the Diet to carry out, must now be considered at an end, not only from the participation of the two Great Powers in the execution, but also by virtue of the right they have acquired by the treaty of peace. An extraordinary sitting of the Federal Diet was held on Tuesday, when Saxony proposed that the Diet should determine whether the Federal execution was to be considered at an end. This proposal was referred to the committee on the Holstein question. It was then proposed by Bavaria that General HAKE, commander of the Federal forces in Holstein, should be directed not to abandon his present position without further orders. This was agreed to by a majority of votes in spite of the energetic opposition of the Prussian Plenipotentiary to the protracted occupation of the Duchy by the troops engaged in the Federal execution.

The debate on the Address in the Lower House of the Austrian Reichsrath commenced on the day. The draft of the Address regrets the interruption of constitutional activity in some parts of the empire, and expresses a hope that Croatian, Hungarian, and Galician Diets will speedily be convened, and that a national representation by election will be shortly introduced into the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom. It declares that the re-establishment of constitutional conditions in the two kingdoms of Hungary and Croatia is of high importance to the whole empire, and that by the immediate convocation of the Diets of these kingdoms the Government will give proof of its desire to bring to maturity the fruits of constitutional life in Austria. It regards the re-establishment and consolidation of a lasting peace as the unalterable determination of the Government. It describes the financial position of the country as very serious, and urges a return to the strict regulation of the expenses of the state in accordance with the general revenue. It says that it is indispensable to reduce the expenditure for the army and navy, and declares that a law establishing Ministerial responsibility is urgently needed to complete the Austrian constitution.

The report of the committee of the Italian Senate warmly approves the Franco-Italian Convention, and proposes the adoption of the Bill for the transfer of the capital to Florence.

From the United States we learn that General M'CLELLAN'S resignation of his commission as Major-General in the Federal army has been accepted, and that General SHERIDAN has been appointed his successor. The Confederates are said to have made an unsuccessful attempt to pierce General GRANT'S lines, but no particulars are given. As the Dutch Gap Canal was completed, it was thought that General GRANT would shortly again attack the Confederate capital. General BRECKENRIDGE had defeated the Federals at Bull's Gap, capturing several hundred prisoners, ten stand of colours, six pieces of artillery, and their camp waggons. General SHERIDAN'S army was encamped near Winchester, watched more or less by the Confederates under General EARLY. The position of General SHERMAN is the subject of much speculation, but his actual movements are unknown. The evacuation and burning of Atlanta are confirmed. General BUTLER has left New York and returned to the James River. A speech delivered by him in New York before his departure has given rise to a rumour that the Administration will shortly offer peace propositions to the South on the basis of the abolition of slavery. The French Minister has had an interview with Mr. SEWARD, in which he is said to have expressed the strong wish of the Emperor for peace, and to have renewed the offer of French intervention.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Saturday. Another Council was held on Tuesday, another on Thursday, and another yesterday.

MANIFESTO OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES AND EARL RUSSELL'S REPLY.—The following note has been addressed to the principal European Governments by the diplomatic representatives of the Confederate Government abroad, transmitting an official copy of the manifesto recently issued by the Congress of the Confederate States:—

"SIR,—The undersigned Commissioners of the Confederate States of America, in pursuance of the instructions of their Government, have the honour to present to your Excellency a copy of a manifesto issued by the Congress of said States with the approval of the President, and of which the President was instructed to cause copies to be transmitted to their Commissioners abroad, to the end that the same might be by them laid before foreign Governments; they at the same time communicate a copy of the preamble and resolutions of Congress accompanying such manifesto. The dispositions, principles, and purposes by which the Confederate States have been and are still animated are set forth in this paper with all the authority due to the solemn declarations of the legislative and executive branches of their Government, and with a clearness which leaves no room for comment or explanation. In a few sentences it is pointed out that 'all they ask is immunity from interference with their internal peace and prosperity, and to be left in the undisturbed enjoyment of their inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, which their common ancestry declared to be the equal heritage of all parties to the social compact. Let them forbear aggressions thereon, and the war is at an end. If there be questions which require adjustment by negotiations, they have ever been willing and are still willing, to enter into communication with their adversaries in a spirit of equity and manly frankness, and submit their cause to the enlightened judgment of the world, the sober reflection of their adversaries themselves, and to the solemn and righteous arbitrament of Heaven. The undersigned beg leave most respectfully to invite the attention of the Government of his Imperial Majesty to this frank and full explanation of the attitude and purposes of the Confederate States, and will merely remark, in addition, that since the issue of that manifesto the war has continued to be waged by our enemies with even increased ferocity, a more signal disregard of all the rules of civilised warfare, and more wanton violation of the obligations of international law. The undersigned, having thus complied with the instructions of their Government, beg to assure your Excellency of the distinguished consideration with which they have the honour to be, Your Excellency's most obedient servants, "JOHN SLIDELL,
"J. M. MASON,
"A. DUDLEY MANN."

"Foreign Office, Nov. 25, 1864.

"GENTLEMEN,—I have had the honour to receive the copy which you have sent me of the Manifesto issued by the Congress of the so-called Confederate States of America. Her Majesty's Government deeply lament the protracted nature of the struggle between the Northern and Southern States of the formerly United Republic of North America. Great Britain has since 1783 remained, with the exception of a short period, connected by friendly relations with both the Northern and the Southern States. Since the commencement of the Civil War, which broke out in 1861, Her Majesty's Government have continued to entertain sentiments of friendship equally for the North and for the South. Of the causes of the rupture Her Majesty's Government have never presumed to judge; they deplore the commencement of this sanguinary struggle, and anxiously look forward to the period of its termination. In the meantime they are convinced that they best consult the interests of peace and respect the rights of all parties by observing a strict and impartial neutrality. Such a neutrality Her Majesty has faithfully maintained, and will continue to maintain. I request you, Gentlemen, to accept, &c.,
"To J. Slidell, Esq., J. Mason, Esq., and "RUSSELL"
"A. Dudley Mann, Esq."

RUMOURED RESIGNATION OF THE BISHOP OF EXETER.—It is currently reported that the Bishop of Exeter has intimated to her Majesty's Government his willingness to resign the see over which he has presided for so many years, on condition of the diocese being subdivided by the erection of a bishopric of Cornwall, or the appointment of a suffragan bishop, cum jure successionis. His lordship, who is 86 years of age, has held the see since 1831. The Government, it is said, decline to accede to the erection of a bishopric of Cornwall, but are not averse to the appointment of a suffragan bishop, provided no legal difficulties stand in the way. The subject has therefore been referred to the law officers of the Crown.

COLONIAL BISHOPRICS.—The Right Rev. Dr. George Smith, who was consecrated to the Bishopric of Victoria (Hong Kong) in 1849, has resigned his see and returned to England. It is stated that the present diocese of British Columbia is to be divided by the erection of a second bishopric, the seat of which is to be at New Westminster. A sum of 7500*l.* has been raised towards its endowment. Arrangements have been completed for the erection of a bishopric at Lahore.

CHURCH APPOINTMENT.—The Rev. William Brice Ady, M.A., has been appointed by the Bishop of Rochester to the archdeaconry of Colchester, in the room of the Venerable Dr. Burney.

COURT OF FINAL APPEAL.—An association, composed of the Earl of Shrewsbury, Lord Lyttelton, Lord Richard Cavendish, Sir Walter Farquhar, Lord A. Compton, Sir Willoughby Jones, the Hon. Colin Lindsay, Sir Henry Baker, Sir George Prevost, Archdeacon Harris, Archdeacon Downall, Archdeacon Huxtable, the Warden of All Souls', Oxford. Canon Wordsworth, Dr. Jelf, Dr. Pusey, the Rev. W. Denton, the Rev. J. Keble, the Master of Cains College, Cambridge, and other gentlemen, lay and clerical, has been formed for the purpose of promoting the amendment of the law of final appeal in matters affecting doctrine. It is proposed that for the time to come no archbishop or bishop shall have any place in the court of final appeal, whether as member of the court or assessor; but that in cases affecting doctrine it shall be held as essential that the doctrine of the Church be declared and interpreted by reference to the spirituality. The association is to be open to all members of the Church, whether lay or clerical.

KNIGHTHOOD.—At the Court held at Windsor on Wednesday, the Queen conferred the honour of Knighthood on Thomas Henry, Esq., Chief Magistrate at Bow Street.

THE ARMY.—The Colonelcy of the 58th Regiment, vacant by the death of General Wynyard, has been conferred on Major-General Charles Craufurd Hay.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—The Hon. E. C. Leigh and Mr. W. Davenport Bromley are candidates for North Warwickshire, vacant by the death of Mr. Spooner, the former in the Liberal, the latter in the Conservative interest. Foreign.

FRANCE.—The following is the text of the letter of Count de Persigny, which the Emperor "regretted" that he should have written without first consulting his Majesty. It is dated Chamaraude, November 2:—

"My dear M. de Girardin,—I have not confined myself to read the two long passages you have pointed out in the remarkable book you have been good enough to send me; I have perused nearly the whole of it, and with the greatest interest. The original idea which you set forth with so much talent is worthy to be taken most seriously into consideration, and I think it must ultimately prevail. But it is not enough to be in the right—it is requisite that you should be backed by public opinion. I think that, like many eminent minds who see too far and go too far for their own times, you are ahead of public opinion. You say somewhere that witches ceased to be dangerous when people ceased to burn them. That is true; but then people no longer believe in witches, and they still believe in newspapers. You endeavour to make out that the press has no influence, and that is true so far as the discussion of opinions goes; but there are many people who dread the scandals that the press may produce, and the passions which may be aroused in consequence. Moreover, I could not understand passing without transition from the present state of things to that which you propose. Assuredly the day when the press may enjoy the same liberty as it does in England, where its freedom is useful to all and injurious to none, that day shall witness the end of our revolutions, and the crowning of the edifice; but whatever boldness I may feel in my own mind, I do not think public opinion sufficiently prepared to accept a regime which beforehand would inspire so many interests with anxiety. On that point I differ from you, but I confess that that question of the press pre-occupies me much, and that I should feel but little inclined at present to maintain the present regime without important modifications. Receive, &c., "PERSIGNY."

The pleasure of the visitors at Compiègne was marred on Tuesday week by a melancholy accident, which took place at the commencement of a boar hunt, got up for the Prince of Orange, in the forest of Laigue. As Count Gustave de Lupel was proceeding to the place of meeting, his horse gave a sudden start, which lifted his rider to a considerable height, and in again coming down on the saddle he received a most violent shock. He remained for a short time in his seat, but at length fell to the ground from the pain he was suffering. He was then placed in a carriage and conveyed to his Château of Autrèches. Dr. Corvisart, the Emperor's physician, was sent to him, but he found the injury to be beyond the reach of medical art, and the count died in the course of the night. A second avertissement has been given to the Union de l'Ouest, on the ground that it accuses the Government with having sequestrated all the liberties of France since the 2d December, "thus holding up the Government to hatred and contempt." It is stated that negociations are going on for the sale to the French Government of coal beds far more extensive than those of Saarbruck and Belgium. They are said to be situated in Germany, in a district close to the French frontier. Several French papers state that a new club, to be called the "Silent Club," is about to be established in Paris. The members may eat, drink, read, write, or smoke, but they must not speak, nor wear creaking boots, nor play at dominoes, nor "rattle the bones," nor, in short, make any noise whatever. The floors will be covered with thick carpets, and the doors will open and shut without a sound. At the last sitting of the Paris Geographical Society, M. Molte-Brun read a letter he had received from the French consul at Sierra Leone, confirming the account of the death of Jules Gérard, the lion-killer, who was drowned in attempting to cross the river Jong.

ALGERIA.—Tranquillity prevails in all the provinces, with the exception of Babor. Marshal M'Mahon was to leave on the 1st of December to be present at the annual meeting of the Marshals of France.

SPAIN.—The result of the elections is favourable to the Moderate Liberal party. The Noticias announces the departure of several vessels laden with coal and provisions for the squadron in the Pacific. The Epoca says that Spain cannot admit of any mediation between herself and Peru in the present state of the question, and that Chili having declared coal to be contraband of war, Spain might not to regard her as a neutral Power. The same Paper of Tuesday says the Minister of Finance has investigated the resources of the country, and decided that they are equal to bear the charges on the revenue up to the end of the year. A ministerial circular has been published, ordering that the press laws are to be rigorously enforced now that the elections have terminated. The Queen has conferred the Grand Cross of the Order of Charles III. on Cardinal Wiseman and several ex-Ministers, as well as on M. Corradi, formerly director of the Clamor Publico. The brother of the King Consort, the Infante Don Enrique, has been banished to the Canary Islands, for addressing a letter to the King and Queen making offensive observations on public and family matters. The Queen has pardoned the inmates of the Military School of Segovia who had been condemned, for mutiny, to serve as soldiers of the penal class. General Van Halen, whose name was once familiar to Englishmen, and who took part in the battle of Trafalgar, the wars of the Belgian revolution, and the civil war against Don Carlos, has just died at Cadiz, almost forgotten, at the age of 75.

SWITZERLAND.—It seems that in spite of the farewell letters of Dr. Demme and Mdlle. Trumpy, there are grave doubts of their having committed suicide. and it is now suspected that the letters were written to disguise the circumstance that they have absconded. Among the rumours in circulation to explain the cause of their sudden disappearance, it is said that Dr. Demme is accused of having robbed an attaché of the Brazilian Embassy at Berlin, whom he attended three years back, of a diamond ring, which he gave to Mdlle. Flora Trumpy as a wedding present, and that other rings and articles of value have been abstracted from an English family staying at the Bernerhof, who had also been under Dr. Demme's medical treatment; as well as from a lady of distinction at Berlin, during the passage of her trunks through Berne. The late M. Trumpy was in business as a general carrier, and in this way it is sought to connect Dr. Demme with the supposed robbery. It is said that M. Leuzinger Schnell, the guardian of Mdlle. Flora Trumpy, has lodged a charge of abduction against Dr. Demme, and the Paris Presse mentions a report that he and Mdlle. Trumpy have been recognised at Havre when embarking for America. It is even said that the Swiss Consul demanded their extradition, which was not granted by the authorities on the ground that the law was not applicable in their case. The mystery of the case has since been increased by a telegram received at Berne on Nov. 28, from the Swiss Consul in Milan, stating that Dr. Demme and "his wife" had been seen in that city a week ago, and by another telegram from Berne dated on Thursday last, stating that an official report has been received by the Federal Council to the effect that Dr. Demme and Mademoiselle Trumpy have poisoned themselves at Nervi, near Genoa.

DENMARK.—The King of Denmark, accompanied by the Crown Prince and the Minister of the Interior, set out on Monday for Jutland, where they will remain until the 9th December.

THE DUCHIES.—On Monday evening Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia summoned the officers of his Staff, and instructed them to hold themselves in readiness to carry out, at a moment's notice, the orders for the departure of the Prussian troops from the Duchies. Prince Arenberg and Count Wallis, of the Austrian Staff, were present.

PRUSSIA.—A Plenipotentiary Extraordinary left Berlin on Monday for Dresden and Hanover, to demand the evacuation of Holstein by the Saxon and Hanoverian troops, and the immediate recall from Holstein of the Federal Commissioners, on the ground that the Federal execution is at an end, not only from the participation of Austria and Prussia in the execution, but also by virtue of their rights acquired by the Treaty of Peace. The Berlin official paper says that Hanover has signified her compliance with this demand, but Saxony has not replied to the summons, and the Prussian Government, regarding this as a refusal, intends, in conjunction with Austria, to make a complaint against that Power at the next sitting of the Federal Diet. The mediation of Austria, however, having been accepted, there is no longer any danger of a collision between the Prussian forces and the Federal troops in the Duchies.

HANOVER.—The official Gazette of Wednesday says that the Hanoverian and Saxon Governments at present carrying out the Federal execution in Holstein and Lauenburg are now bound to withdraw from that execution, recall their troops, and notify the fact to the Federal Diet. It also says that the Hanoverian Government, now that the Treaty of Peace has been communicated to the Diet, will fulfil this duty as quickly as possible, reserving the succession question for special discussion.

FRANKFORT.—An extraordinary sitting of the Federal Diet took place on Tuesday. The Treaty of Peace with Denmark was communicated by the representatives of Austria and Prussia. Saxony made a proposition that the Diet should determine whether the Federal Execution in Holstein is to be considered at an end. This proposal was referred to the Committees on the Holstein question. The report of General Hake, Commander of the Federal forces in Holstein, asking for fresh instructions, was then read. Bavaria proposed that the General should be directed not to abandon his present position without further orders. This was agreed to by a majority of votes, and the report was likewise referred to the Committees. The views entertained by Prussia on every point in regard to the protracted occupation of Holstein by the troops engaged in the Federal execution were stoutly maintained by the representative of that country.

AUSTRIA.—The draught of the Address of the Lower House of the Reichsrath, in reply to the Speech from the Throne, was published on Saturday. The following is a summary of its contents:—

"It regrets the interruption of constitutional activity in some portions of the Empire. It expresses a wish that the Croatian and Hungarian Diets may be convened after the close of the Session, and hopes that the Lombardo-Venetian and Galician Diets will likewise soon be assembled. It regards the re-establishment and consolidation of a lasting peace as the unalterable determination of the Government. It confidently believes that the Government, co-operating with the German Confederation, will assist the Duchies in fully obtaining their rights in the succession question, and in effecting an independent settlement of their own affairs. It will gladly hail all efforts on the part of the Government to oppose separatist tendencies adverse to the interests of the German Confederation, and any endeavours tending to strengthen by Federal reform the bond between the German States. It hopes that the exceptional circumstances necessitating the proclamation of a state of siege in Galicia will shortly disappear. It asks for a reduction in the military and naval expenditure, and declares that a law establishing Ministerial responsibility is urgently needed to complete the Austrian constitution. In conclusion, it expresses hopes that the inconveniences caused by the failure of the commercial negotiations with Prussia will be lessened by the proposed modifications in the Customs' tariff."

The discussion of the Address in full sitting commenced on Tuesday. Count Kinsky reviewed unfavourably the state of the finances, and censured the foreign policy hitherto pursued by the Government. Dr. Berger said that the principles expressed in the Address showed the wish of the House to be that an alteration should be made in the policy of the Government. He represented Austria's position as isolated, and declared that her only real ally was Germany. Austria must energetically oppose every separatist endeavour of Prussia. The debate on the paragraphs of the Address then commenced, the first three of which were passed. In the sitting of Thursday Herr von Schmerling, in a speech on the Hungarian question, said that it was only to be solved by calm preparation. It was the duty of the Government to exercise some influence on the coming elections in Hungary, more especially as the Opposition were displaying great activity. The moderation now prevailing in public opinion in that country would render possible the convocation of the Hungarian Diet at an early period. The Government desired to reconcile Hungary, and to meet any acceptable proposition which might be made by the Hungarian Diet. It would only be possible to effect a modification of the Hungarian Constitution in a constitutional manner. The paragraphs of the draught Address, referring to the convocation of the Hungarian Diet, were then agreed to, an amendment fixing a period for that convocation having been rejected. The Minister of Commerce has introduced a Bill for the construction of a Transylvanian Railroad.

VENETIA.—An official notification has been issued abolishing martial law, in consequence of the dispersion of the armed bands in the district of Friuli. A court-martial will assemble at Udine for the trial of those inculpated in the movement.

BAVARIA.—Herr von der Pfordten, the Bavarian Minister at the Federal Diet, has been recalled, and was expected to arrive at Munich on Thursday.

ITALY.—In the Chamber of Deputies on Friday the Minister of the Interior brought forward a Bill for authority to promulgate throughout the kingdom the civil, maritime, and commercial code, and other laws. The Minister of Justice has brought in a Bill for the suppression of all religious corporations and ecclesiastical benefices throughout the Kingdom of Italy. In the Senate on Monday Signor Sella brought forward a Financial Bill, for which he requested urgency. The debate on the Bill commenced on Thursday, and on Friday the Bill passed by 108 to 27 votes. The report of the Committee of the Senate warmly approves the Franco-Italian Convention, and proposes the adoption of the Bill for the transfer of the capital to Florence. In the discussion of the Convention on Wednesday, Signori Sclopis and Ricotti opposed the measure, while Prince Moliterno and Signor Durando spoke in favour of it. General Della Marmora, in answer to Signor Ricotti, said that the Venetian question was merely one of vanity so far as Austria was concerned. Germany could not believe that Venice was necessary to her existence. He protested against the supposition of Signor Ricotti that France coveted any portion of Italian territory. In the sitting of Thursday, Signor Durando spoke in favour of the Convention, and Signori Tacco and Pareto opposed it. General Della Marmora made a speech in refutation of the arguments and assertions of Signor Pareto. The Official Gazette publishes a fresh list of municipalities which have anticipated the payment of the land-tax for 1865. Senor Pacheco, the new Spanish Ambassador, has had an audience of the Pope to present his credentials. Cavaliere Righetti, the fortunate owner of the gigantic statue of Hercules lately discovered in that city, has presented it to the Pope, who has graciously accepted it. The magnificence of this gift may be imagined when it is known that only a few days before a Roman nobleman offered more than 40,000*l.* for the statue, and even a higher offer was made for it on behalf of the French Government. A very important question has lately been decided at Naples. It will be remembered that the late Prince of Capua, a younger brother of Ferdinand II., married Miss Penelope Smith, an Irish lady. The marriage was not acknowledged by the Royal family, and the Prince and Princess left the country. On the death of the late Dowager, mother of Ferdinand II., efforts were made to mitigate the position of the Prince and Princess, as the Princess was never acknowledged as such by the Bourbons. It has, however, now been decided by the Supreme Court of Justice in Naples that she is entitled to her full rank, while her children are legitimated and placed by the Italian law courts on the same footing with the other descendants of the Royal family. The Prince of Capua died about a year since too early to witness the justice done to his wife and children.

RUSSIA.—Vice-Admiral Romanoff, one of the veterans of the Russian navy, died a few days since. His service dates from the year 1813, and last year he celebrated the 50th anniversary of his entering the navy. During the Crimean war he commanded the steam flotilla in the Gulf of Finland, but finding that its sphere of action there was very limited, he went to Sebastopol, where he signalised himself by his valour during the siege. The celebrated Russian astronomer Frederic Struve, whose name is associated with all the great works of triangulation and geodesy carried out in Russia and Eastern Europe, died on the 23d ult. at St. Petersburg. Colonel Stremouchoff, of the Imperial Guard, was recently condemned to 12 years' hard labour in the mines and the loss of his decorations and titles of nobility for having mortally wounded Major Klokalcheff in a duel. Major the Baron Wolff and Lieutenant Spetchinski, who acted as seconds, were also condemned to 10 years' hard labour in the mines. The Emperor has now commuted the sentence of the colonel to military degradation, with service in the army as a private soldier. Baron Wolff and Lieutenant Spetchinski will be imprisoned in a fortress for three months.

POLAND.—The Imperial decree which has been issued closing certain convents in Poland, orders that all Catholic monasteries and convents having less than eight members, and also those whose participation in the late insurrection was notorious, or has since been proved, are to be immediately closed. The inmates may enter other religious establishments, or will be allowed to go abroad at the public expense. In religious establishments which are not suppressed by this decree are forbidden to maintain relations with either the Provincials or Generals of their orders. The confiscated property of the monasteries and convents will be exclusively devoted to ecclesiastical, educational and charitable purposes. In pursuance of this decree 71 monasteries and four convents have been closed on account of not possessing the requisite number of inmates, and 39 other religious houses on account of participation in the Polish insurrection. The Breslau Gazette of Monday says that General Berg has received instructions to forward shortly to his Government a report on the general situation of the Kingdom of Poland, and to state whether there is any possibility of provisionally raising the state of siege in certain districts. He is also instructed to cause an address to be signed requesting the complete incorporation of the Kingdom of Poland with the Russian empire.

ABYSSINIA.—Accounts from Massowa state that every attempt to communicate privately with Captain Cameron and the other British captives at Gondar has proved unsuccessful. It appears that our unfortunate countrymen are confined in a tent next to that of King Theodore, and all intercourse with them is strictly forbidden under the severest penalties. Each European is chained to a dependant of the Royal household, the latter being relieved at short intervals. The chain is never more than four feet long, so that the prisoner can scarcely move without the knowledge of the guard.

INDIA.—When the last mail left Calcutta no tidings of the Persia had been received, and it is feared that she has been lost with all hands on board. She had 30 cabin passengers and about 120 natives on deck.

JAPAN.—Advices from Japan state that trade is flourishing at Yeddo. The Daimios have agreed to reside there. Prince Nagato is said to decline payment of the indemnity. A strong feeling prevails against him, and his palace has been levelled to the ground. There was a good prospect that the Japanese authorities would withdraw the restrictions on the trade with Yokohama.

AUSTRALIA.—The Melbourne Argus says that the first instalment of convicts, whose time has expired, have been reshipped to England.

NEW ZEALAND.—Advices from New Zealand announce that Mr. Fox's Ministry have tendered their resignation, but the Governor has declined to accept it. Two hundred Maori prisoners have escaped, and are now fomenting rebellion. A native rising is threatened in Tauranga.

UNITED STATES.—The New York Press accepts Mr. Lincoln's election as a declaration of four years' more war. In the approaching Congress the Senate will consist of 38 Republicans and 14 Democrats, and the House of Representatives of 134 Republicans as-

...Democratic members. General M'Clellan's resigna... has been accepted, and Sheridan has been appointed to the vacant major-generalship. General Butler has left New York for the James River. The Tribune asserts that he has been offered by the President, but has declined, the appointment of Secretary of War, in succession to Mr. Stanton. In a speech which he made at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, he stated that he thought the time had arrived when the North, in the magnanimity of her strength, could offer an amnesty to the South. If this was not accepted by the 3d of January next, it would be the duty of the people of the North to drive the traitors into Mexico, the West Indies, or elsewhere, and divide the estates among the soldiers. In consequence of this speech, the opinion prevails that the offer of amnesty, and a formal proposition to the Southern States to return to the Union on the basis of the abolition of slavery, will immediately be made by Mr. Lincoln. The Confederates have again attempted to force Grant's line, but were repulsed. The Dutch Gap Canal is complete, and Richmond papers anticipate that Grant will attack Richmond immediately. General Early is reported to have retired to Strasburg. General Sheridan continues encamped in the neighbourhood of Winchester. The Confederate cavalry, during a reconnaissance of his position, were driven back and pursued beyond Front Royal, with a loss of two guns and 150 prisoners. Nothing official has yet been received from General Sherman. The Western press assert that, after destroying the public buildings, manufactories, the defensive works, and the railroads north and south of Atlanta, he moved southward from the city with 30,000 men, carrying 30 days' rations. The most contradictory statements are circulated respecting his subsequent movements. One account persists in declaring that he is marching upon Augusta and Savannah, another that his object is the liberation of the Federal prisoners at Andersonville, a third that he is moving into Alabama to destroy Hood's communications at Montgomery and Selma, while a fourth is equally positive that, instead of advancing, he has returned to Chattanooga, and, with his whole army, excepting the portion left with General Thomas to hold the Tennessee, is rapidly moving upon Lynchburg, Virginia. Confederate accounts to the 11th urge upon the people the necessity of being prepared for startling news from Georgia. Hood is said to be marching on Chattanooga with 30,000 men, where Forrest is expected to join him. A large force, under Magruder, has endeavoured to cross the Mississippi, near Gaines Landing, to reinforce Hood. A Confederate force on the Mississippi side is co-operating. It is believed that the Federal gunboats will prevent the crossing. Several attempts to cross loose cattle over the Mississippi for Hood have been frustrated. Three thousand cattle, strongly guarded, have crossed the Black River. A body of Federal troops, however, subsequently attacked the guards, captured a third of the cattle, and dispersed the remainder. The Federals have evacuated Rome, after having destroyed the public edifices and manufactories. On the 13th and 14th the Confederate General Breckinridge recaptured Bull's Gap, Tennessee, defeating General Gillem, recapturing 400 prisoners, 10 stand of colours, six cannon, and all the Federal trains. The Federal General Canby, while reconnoitring White River, Arkansas, on board the steamer Cricket, on the 6th, was severely wounded by a guerilla, but the wound is not likely to be fatal. Lieutenant-Governor Jacob, of Kentucky, has been arrested and sent to the Washington political prison. On the arrival of the Florida the American Consul at Bahia proceeded to Washington, where he had an interview with Mr. Seward. The crew and captain of the Florida have all been committed to the Old Capitol Prison at Washington, while the vessel has been sent to New York for adjudication. It is not known what course Mr. Seward will pursue in giving satisfaction to the Brazilian Government. The French Minister and Mr. Seward have had an interview on the question of peace. The Minister expressed the strong wish of the Emperor for peace, and said that he could but congratulate the Secretary of State on the new course which the Cabinet of Washington seemed inclined to follow. To this Mr. Seward replied that the idea of a peace had always been the fundamental idea of the Government; that the only difficulty in the way was as to the proper manner to reach it; that the United States could not accept a humiliating peace, but that whenever a proposition to that effect, maintaining the dignity, interests, and honour of the nation, would be offered, he would not hesitate in supporting it with all his influence. To this the French Minister replied that he was exceedingly pleased to find his Excellency thus disposed; but that in his estimation it was impossible to ascertain whether or not such a peace was attainable unless the Government should take the proper steps to approach the South and open negotiations on the subject. He further added, that although the Government of the Emperor had not been fortunate in its efforts to open relations between the North and the South, it had never receded a step from its opinion in the matter, and that it was still of the opinion that this war could not end without trying at least the ways of diplomacy before plunging again into the uncertainty and perils of an endless war. To this Mr. Seward frankly admitted that his Government had been mistaken in the character and consequences of the war with the South; that he never imagined that the rebellion was endowed with so much resolution and vitality; and that he was ready to acknowledge himself in error on that subject. After a protracted conversation, the French Minister left Mr. Seward with a renewal of the offer to place the services of his Government at the disposal of Mr. Lincoln. He said, what he had already said in many instances, that the Emperor was ready to do all in his power to facilitate negotiations with the South, and that he would spare neither time, trouble, nor money, if necessary, to attain so desirable an end. To this Mr. Seward replied that he would see Mr. Lincoln, talk the matter over with him, and begged the Minister of France to call again in a week for an answer. In the discussion on President Davis's Message in the Confederate Congress, the question of the arming of the slaves was opposed by a large number of members. Mr. Foote, of Mississippi, was the principal speaker in favour of the measure, and Mr. Miles, of South Carolina, and a Virginian member were the principal speakers in opposition to it. The report of the Confederate Secretary of State states that he does not see the necessity, nor approve the policy of arming the slaves. The Richmond Whig opposes President Davis's proposition to emancipate the slaves after service. The Governor of Georgia, in a message to the Legislature of that State, declares that this war may continue indefinitely unless the people, both North and South, in their capacity as sovereign States, shall bring their influence to bear upon both Governments, requiring them to stop the war, and permit the people of each State to vote to which confederacy they will unite their destiny. In the meantime the Southern animus must be sustained. The Governor disapproves arming the slaves, but would employ them in all useful capacities. The Tallahassee had arrived at Wilmington, although fired at heavily by the blockading squadron.

CANADA.—The prosecution in the case of the St. Alban's raiders was closed at Montreal on the 12th. Lieut. Bennett Young handed in his commission from the Confederate Secretary of War, and asked for a delay of 30 days to enable him to communicate with the Government at Richmond before offering his defence. The Judges granted the request. The authorities of Toronto have received an intimation of an intended raid into Canada by the members of the Fenian Brotherhood in the Federal States. — The Quebec Mercury publishes the following draft of the new constitution proposed for the Canadian Federation :—

"1. That the Federal union, with the Crown of Great Britain at the head, is the arrangement best fitted to protect the existing interests, and to promote in the future the prosperity of British North America, provided always that such union may be effected upon principles of equity towards the different provinces. 2. That the system of federation for the provinces of British North America, the best adapted in present circumstances for the protection of the varied interests of the several provinces, and the most fit to produce efficiency, harmony, and permanence in the working of the union, will be a general government and parliament, which will have the control of affairs common to all the country, with local legislatures and governments for each of the Canadas, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and the Island of Prince Edward. These local governments and legislatures to have control respectively of local affairs. The admission into the union on equitable terms of the province of Newfoundland, the north-west territory, Vancouver's Island, and British Columbia, is to be provided for. 3. The Federal government and parliament are to be formed, in so far as circumstances may permit, on the model of the British constitution; the convention wishing thus to express its desire of perpetuating the ties which unite us to the mother country, and to serve more efficiently the interests of the populations of the different provinces. 4. The executive power will reside in the Sovereign of Great Britain, and will be administered by the Sovereign, or his representative, according to the principles of the British constitution. 5. The Sovereign, or his representative, will be the commander-in-chief of the forces by land and sea. 6. There shall be for all the confederated provinces one general parliament, composed of a legislative council and a House of Commons. 7. In order to form the legislative council the provinces shall be divided into three parts. The first shall comprise Upper Canada; the second Lower Canada, and the third, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward's Island. These three parts shall be represented by equal numbers in the legislative council. In this manner Upper Canada will have 24 councillors; Lower Canada 24; and the three maritime provinces, 24, of whom 10 will be for Nova Scotia, 10 for New Brunswick, and 4 for Prince Edward's Island. 8. Newfoundland on entering the union will have the right to four legislative councillors. 9. The conditions of admission into the union of the north-west territory, British Columbia, and Vancouver's Island shall be determined upon by the Federal parliament, and approved by her Majesty: and with regard to the admission and conditions of admission of British Columbia or Vancouver's Island, the consent of the local legislatures will be necessary. 10. Legislative councillors are to be named for life by the Crown, under the great seal of the general government. Legislative councillors shall lose their seats by the fact of a continued absence during two years consecutively. 11. Legislative councillors must be born or naturalised British subjects, of 30 years of age, and possessed of, and continuing to be possessed of, real property to the value of 4000 dollars, free from all encumbrances. But with respect to Newfoundland the property may be real or personal. 12. The legislative council shall have the decision of all questions relative to the eligibility or want of eligibility of its members. 13. The first legislative councillors shall be taken from the existing legislative councils of the different provinces, except Prince Edward's Island. If a sufficient number of councillors shall not be found willing to serve the complement must necessarily be found elsewhere. These councillors are to be named by the Crown, on the recommendation of the general government, on the presentation of the respective local governments. In the nomination regard is to be had to legislative councillors representing the opposition in each province, in order that all political parties shall be, as much as possible, proportionably and equitably represented in the Federal Legislative Council. 14. The president of the legislative council, until it shall have been otherwise decided by the general parliament, shall be chosen from among the legislative councillors by the Crown, who may remove him at pleasure. He is to have only a casting vote. 15. Each of the 24 legislative councillors who are to represent Lower Canada in the legislative council of the federal legislature shall be named to represent one of the electoral divisions named in schedule A, chapter 1, of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, and such councillor must reside or possess his qualification in the division whose representation is to be assigned to him. 16. The representation in the Federal House of Commons shall have for its basis the population determined by the official census taken every 10 years, and the number of representatives shall be at first as follows:—Upper Canada shall have 82; Lower Canada, 65; Nova Scotia, 19; New Brunswick, 15; Newfoundland, 8; Prince Edward's Island, 5. 17. There shall be no change in the representation of the different provinces before the census of 1871. 18. Immediately after the census of 1871, and every subsequent decennial census, the representation of each of the provinces in the House of Commons shall be repartitioned on the basis of population. 19. Lower Canada shall never have more nor less than 65 representatives, and the other provinces shall have, after the census, the proportion of representation to which each shall have the right, taking for basis of calculation the total of the representation of Lower Canada. 20. There shall be no reduction in the number of representatives elected for any one province, unless the total of its population shall have decreased to the extent of 5 per cent. or more, in comparison with the total of the population of the Confederate provinces. 21. In computing the number of representatives at each decennial period no regard shall be had for fractions, except when they exceed half the number which would give them right to a representative, and then these fractions shall have a right to a representative. 22. The legislatures of the different provinces shall divide their provinces respectively into counties, and shall define the limits thereof. 23. The federal parliament may increase the number of its members when it shall think proper, but must preserve the proportions then existing. 24. The local legislatures may from time to time change the electoral districts for the purpose of representation in the Federal House of Commons, and may redistribute, in such manner as may be thought advisable, the representatives to whom they may respectively be entitled in the Federal House of Commons. 25. Until it shall be otherwise decided by the federal parliament, all the laws on the following subjects, which shall have been in force in the several provinces at the date of the proclamation of the union, shall continue to be in force—viz., the laws relative to the qualification or non-qualification of persons to sit and vote in the legislative assembly of each province, as well as those which regard the capacity or incapacity of voters and oaths imposed upon voters, those relating to returning officers, their powers and duties, to elections, to the time which elections are to last, to contested elections and proceedings incident thereto, to the vacating of seats, to the issuing and execution of new writs in case the vacancies arising from causes other than the dissolution of parliament—all of which shall be applicable to the elections of members of the Federal House of Commons according to the province for which they may be elected. 26. The duration of parliament shall be for five years, unless it shall be previously dissolved by the governor general. 27. There shall never be a greater lapse of time than one year between the end of one federal session and the beginning of another.

"Federal Legislature.—28. The general parliament shall have power to make laws for the peace, welfare, and good government of the confederate provinces, but always without prejudice to the sovereignty of Great Britain. 29. The following subjects shall be placed especially under its control:—The public debt and property. Trade and commerce. Duties on imports and exports, except on the export of squared timber, logs, masts, spars, planks, sawed lumber, coal, and other minerals. Excise duties. The raising of money by any other mode or system of taxation. Loans of money on public credit. The postal service. Steamboat or other shipping companies, railroads, canals, and other works connecting two or more provinces, or which are prolonged beyond the limits of one of them. Steamers navigating between the confederated provinces and other countries, telegraphic communications, and the incorporation of telegraphic companies. All other works which, though situated in the province, shall be declared in their acts of incorporation to be for the general benefit. The census. The military defences and the military and naval services. Marks, buoys, and lighthouses, navigation and shipping. Quarantine. Sea and inland fisheries. Navigable waters between one province and a foreign country, or between two provinces. Coin and the coinage of money. Banks of exchange and promissory notes. Interest. Legal tenders. Bankruptcy and insolvency. Patents of invention and discovery. Copyrights. Indians and Indian reserves. Naturalisation and aliens. Marriage and divorce. The criminal laws (except the constitution of the courts of criminal jurisdiction), comprising the procedure in criminal cases. The power of making uniform all the laws relative to property and civil rights in Upper Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward's Island, and Newfoundland, as well as the procedure in all the courts of these provinces. But no statute which the federal parliament shall pass for this purpose shall have force or authority in any of these provinces until it shall have received the sanction of the local legislature. The establishment of a general court of appeal for all the confederate provinces. Emigration. Agriculture. And in general, all matters of a general character not especially and exclusively reserved for the control of the local governments and legislatures.

"Central Government.—30. The general government and parliament shall have all the necessary powers as a portion of the British empire, to fulfil towards foreign countries the obligations arising from treaties existing or which may exist between Great Britain and these countries. 31. The federal government may, when it shall think fit, create new judicial tribunals, and the federal government may consequently appoint new judges and officers, if that shall become necessary or advantageous for the public. 32. All the courts, judges, and officers of the different provinces are to aid the general government and to obey it in the exercise of its rights and powers, and for these purposes there shall be general courts, judges, and officers of government. 33. The general government shall appoint and pay the judges of the superior courts in the different provinces, and the county courts in Upper Canada. The federal parliament shall fix their salaries. 34. Until the lands of Upper Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, and Prince Edward Island, shall have been consolidated, the judges of these provinces, who are to be named by the general government, shall be taken from their respective bars. 35. The judges of the Courts of Admiralty, who now receive salaries, shall be paid by the general government. 36. The judges of the superior courts shall hold their offices during good behaviour, but they may be dismissed only on an address of the two houses of the federal parliament.

"Local Governors.—37. Each province shall have an executive officer called a lieutenant governor, who shall be named by the Governor-General in Council, under the great seal of the confederate provinces, and during good pleasure; but this good pleasure must not be exercised before the lapse of five years unless for cause, which cause must be communicated in writing to the lieutenant governor immediately after his dismissal, and also by a message to the two houses of the federal parliament in the first week of the next following session. 38. The lieutenant governors shall be paid by the general government. 39. The convention, in thus regulating the salaries of the lieutenant governors, does not intend to prejudice the claim of Prince Edward Island on the Imperial Parliament for the salary now paid to its lieutenant governor.

"Local legislatures.—42. The governments and parliaments of the federal provinces shall be constituted in the manner in which their existing legislatures shall respectively judge most fitting. 43. The local legislatures shall have power from time to time to amend or change their constitution. 44. The local legislatures shall have power to make laws on the following subjects, viz.:—Direct taxation and the imposition of export duties on squared timber, logs, masts, spars, deals, sawed lumber, coals, and other minerals. Loans of money on the credit of their province. The creation and tenure of local offices, and the appointment and payment of local officers. Agriculture. Immigration. Education (excepting the rights and privileges which the Catholic and Protestant minorities may possess with respect to separate schools in the two Canadas at the moment of the union). The sale and regulation of public lands other than those belonging to the general government. Sea and inland fisheries. The establishment, maintenance, and regulation of penitentiaries and reformatories. The establishment, maintenance, and management of hospitals, asylums and all kinds of charitable institutions. Shop, tavern, auctioneers', and other licences. Local works. The incorporation of private and local companies. Property and civil rights, with the exception of those placed under the general government. Punishment by fines, penalties, and imprisonment for breaches of laws within their legislative jurisdiction, as well as the procedure in civil cases. And generally all matters of a private or local nature.

"Miscellaneous Powers.—43. The power of pardoning criminals, of reprieving, commuting, or remitting their sentences in whole or part, which power, belonging of right to the Crown, shall reside in the person of the lieutenant governors in council; but these last must obey the instructions which may from time to time be addressed to them in this respect by the general government as well as the laws passed by the general parliament. 44. With respect to all questions in which the federal and local legislatures have a current control, the laws of the general parliament are to be supreme over those of the local legislatures. The laws of the latter will be null and void when they may conflict with those of the general parliament. 45. The English and French language may be employed simultaneously in the deliberations of the federal parliament, as well as in the legislature of Lower Canada, the federal courts, and the courts of Lower Canada. 46. No taxes are to be imposed on public properties belonging to the federal or local governments. 47. Every bill having for its object the appropriation of any portion of the public revenue, the creation of new taxes or imposts, must originate in the federal House of Commons or the local legislative assembly, as the case may be. 48. Every vote, resolution, address, or bill of the Federal House of Commons or any local legislative assembly, having for object the appropriation of any part whatever of the revenue, or the creation of taxes or imposts, must be preceded by a message from the Governor General or the lieutenant governor, as the case may be, and the message must be laid before the house during the same session in which such vote, resolution, address, or bill shall be passed. 49. Any bill of the general legislature will be subject to rejection by her Majesty during the two years following the passing of the bill; and those of the local governments during the 12 months following their adoption.

"Seat of Government.—50. Ottawa is to be the seat of the federal government; but the Royal prerogative is saved in respect to the fixing of the seat of the general government. 52. Toronto is chosen for the seat of the Upper Canadian, and Quebec for that of the government of Lower Canada. There is to be no change as to the local seats of government of the other provinces.

"Monies and Properties.—53. All monies in the Treasury, balances in the hands of bankers, and all other securities in the treasuries of the different provinces at the time of union, shall belong to the general government. 54. The public works and properties following, belonging to the different provinces, shall belong to the general government, viz.:—The canals. Public harbours. Lighthouses, piers, and wharfs. Steam boats, dredges, and other public vessels. Improvements in rivers and lakes. Railways and railway shares. Mortgages and other debts due to the province by the railway companies. Custom-houses, post-offices, and other public buildings, except those reserved by the general government for the use of the local legislatures and governments. Ordnance property transferred to the colonies by the Imperial government. Arsenals, drill rooms, and military clothing, accoutrements, and ammunition. Lands reserved for public purposes. 55. All the lands, mines, minerals, and Royal prerogatives belonging to her Majesty in the provinces of Upper Canada, Lower Canada, New Brunswick Nova Scotia, and P, Edward's Island, for the use of those provinces, will belong respectively to the local governments of the territories where they are situated, subject, nevertheless, to the trusts and interests of third parties therein. 56. All sums of money due by th epurchasers or lessees of these lands, mines, and minerals at the period of the union will also belong to the local government. 57. The different provinces will remain respectively in possession of all other public properties which may be found within them, but the confederation will have the right to take such lands and public properties as it may require for the fortification or defence of the country.

"Debt and Finance.—58. The general government will assume all the debts and obligations of the different provinces. 59. The debt of Canada, so far as it is not specially attributed to Upper or Lower Canada respectively, is not at the time of the union to exceed 62,500,000 dollars; that of Nova Scotia, 8,000,000 dollars; and that of New Brunswick, 7,000,000 dollars. 60. But if Nova Scotia and New Brunswick do not contract obligations exceeding those to which these provinces are now liable, and if these obligations shall be respectively less than seven and eight millions at the time of the union, they shall be entitled annually to 5 per cent. on the difference which may exist between the total capital of their obligations and the sums of eight and seven millions respectively. There is a like provision for Newfoundland and Prince Edward's Island. The foregoing is not intended to restrain the powers which the governments of these provinces possess through their legislatures, but simply to limit the debts which they will be allowed to bring into the account against the general government. But the respective legislatures, after the expiration of five years from the date of the union, will have no powers to contract the obligations just spoken of. 61. As Newfoundland and the island of Prince Edward have not contracted debts equal to those of the other provinces, they will have the right to receive an advance from the general government in semi-annual payments of an amount equal to the interest of 5 per cent. on the difference between the amount of their respective debts at the date of the union, and the average of the debt per head of the population of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick at the same date. 62. In consideration of the transference of the power of legislation to the general legislature, the provinces are to have the right respectively to a grant of 80 cents per head of the population, computed on the population of 1861. The population of Newfoundland is estimated for this purpose at 130,000 souls. The provinces will not be able to claim more from the general government for local objects, and this aid is to be paid them semi-annually and in advance. 63. As the condition of New Brunswick is such that that province must expend immediately a considerable amount from her local revenue, that province is to receive annually during ten years an additional sum of 62,000 dollars. But so long as her obligations shall remain below 7,000,000 dollars there shall be deducted from this sum of 62,000 dollars an amount equal to the interest at 5 per cent, on the difference between the capital sum of the provincial debt and 7,000,000 dollars. 64. Newfoundland, for abandoning her rights on her mines, minerals, and Crown lands, which are not yet sold nor occupied, shall receive annually 150,000 dollars in semi-annual payments. But that province reserves the right to open, construct, and control her roads and bridges situated on these lands, which, however, shall be subject to the laws, in that respect, which the general government shall think ought to be enacted. 65. The general government is to assume all the engagements which may have been undertaken before the union with the Imperial government for the defence of the provinces.

"Inter-Colonial Railway.—66. The general government is to cause to be completed without delay the Inter-colonial Railway between River du Loup and Truro, in Nova Scotia, making it pass through New Brunswick.

"Western Territory.—67. The convention, attaching the highest importance for the confederate provinces to the communication with the north-west territories, and to the amelioration necessary for the development of the commerce between the great west and the sea, engages itself to give effect to these as soon as the state of the provinces will permit.

"Procedure.—68. The sanction of the Imperial parliament and of the local parliaments is to be sought for the union of the provinces on the principles adopted by the convention. 69. The deliberations of the convention shall be signed by the delegates, and submitted by each local delegation to its government; and the president of the convention is authorised to submit a copy to the governor general, in order that he may transmit it to the Secretary of State for the Colonies."

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—Intelligence from Vancouver Island states that Dr. Rae had reached Victoria, overland from Canada, on the mission of a trans-continental telegraph. He had surveyed the entire route, and considered that the connecting of Canada with Vancouver Island by telegraph direct will be completed in about two years. Already 1200 miles of wire had arrived east of the Rocky Mountains, and 600 more were on their way to Vancouver Island, making in all 1800 miles, the distance from Red River to Victoria. Dr. Rae had entertained some doubt of an overland waggon road till he reached the Fraser River Road, when he at once wrote home to say that not the slightest difficulty existed in the way of a waggon road to Tête Jaune Cache and across the mountains to Red River.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY.—The Vestry of St. Martin-in-the-Fields have received a communication from the Office of Woods and Forests stating that the Government will require the whole of the workhouse and the site for the purposes of the National Gallery, and inviting the Vestry to send in their estimate of its value.

CLOSE OF THE VOLUNTEER SEASON.—The Volunteer season was practically brought to a close on Saturday by Colonel M'Murdo's inspection of the Inns of Court Rifles in Richmond Park; by the presentation of prizes to the London Rifle Brigade by the Lady Mayoress at the Crystal Palace; by the presentation of the prizes of the London Scottish by Lady Elcho in Westminster Hall; and by the presentation of the prizes of the South Middlesex by Lord Ranelagh at Beaufort House. Lord Elcho, in his address to the London Scottish, said that the corps had something on which to congratulate themselves in being abie to secure such music as the pipes, considering the premium offered for pipers by the chiefs of India. It was music highly appreciated in that country, and he could only conclude that the people of this country who failed to appreciate its charms must be in a melancholy state of mind. Colonel M'Murdo, in his address to the Inns of Court corps, said that they were looked up to as the model regiment of the service. Of many of their movements he could only say that they were perfect—they could not be better performed. With reference to one movement—that of receiving cavalry in line—he said that in these days of improved ordnance, it would certainly take the place of the old arrangement of forming square, at least when there was time for the men to use their rifles against the advancing horse. It was for this reason that he further advocated the employment of breech-loaders. He also praised the effective manner in which the fire had been kept up when advancing in line, a movement which, he regretted, was not practised by the regular army, as it

...the natural impulse of men following up a wavering ...ency. At the dinner of the corps, which took place ...e Middle Temple Hall, on Tuesday evening, Colonel ...Murdo again addressed them. After adverting to ...e rapidity with which the Volunteer force created ..., he proceeded as follows:—

"When the Queen reviewed the Volunteers in Hyde Park in ..., he looked forward to it with anxiety, for he felt that if ... was a failure in that review the Volunteer Force would ... to nothing. The Prince Consort also regarded that review ... the same light, and said, 'Are you sure that it will succeed; ... is not an ordinary review, it is a demonstration?'—and ... demonstration it was taken by every nation in Europe. ... that time the Volunteers had the advantage of being ...ularly inspected by officers sent by the Commander-in-... The entire strength of the Volunteer army now was ... men, which showed an increase of 5000 men since the ... December last. It was natural that he should be proud ... he looked on the success of this movement. The ...nteers were efficient in their drill, but if they were called ... to take part in a war he confessed that he should feel ...ous about them, for he must admit that they were not ...pared for such an emergency so far as their matériel was ...erned. He called upon the Inns of Court Volunteers to ... themselves the pattern corps in this respect—they ... accustom themselves to carry a knapsack. A Volunteer ... called upon for active service would not be in the field ... than a fortnight, or, at the most, a month, and for such ... a knapsack would answer every purpose, which would ...—he would not say a linen shirt, for that would be too ... luxury—but a change of socks, a flannel shirt, a pair of ..., and perhaps a piece of soap. He should be glad also ... the men carry greatcoats. It was a sad thing when a ...nteer, after standing under arms in rain for several hours ... getting stiff with cold from sitting in a railway carriage, ... his health, and thus his family fell into poverty, and the ...try lost his service. The use of the greatcoat would ...nteract this."

GARIBALDI'S ACCEPTANCE OF HIS YACHT.—The ...lowing letter has been received by the committee: ..."Caprera, Nov. 18.—Ladies and Gentlemen,—The ...cht which you have presented me is indeed a precious ..., and immensely more precious is the generous ...nevolence with which you have honoured me. GOVERNMENT POWDER BARGES AND MAGAZINES.—Colonel Boxer, R.A., Superintendent of Royal laboratories, has been appointed by the Secretaries of State for War and the Home Departments to inspect all magazines on shore, and establish a uniform regulation for them. The following regulations to be observed by masters in charge of barges, &c., in the Thames, Medway, Orwell, and canals adjoining, were issued last week:—

"1. No fires are to be lighted on board any barge or craft ...ying gunpowder or other combustible stores to any place ...the River Thames within one mile below Gravesend, or in ...ther of the canals leading to Aldershott or Weedon; nor ...tween the Nore and Chatham in the River Medway; nor ...within two miles of the Spit or outer buoy leading to Harwich Harbour. 2. When the barge or other craft is one mile below Gravesend, and not nearer than half a mile of any inhabited place or magazine, fires may be lighted on board for cooking purposes only. 3. No barge having powder on board is to remain alongside the jetty or wharf of any magazine during the night, nor at any time (day or night) except when actually employed in the operation of embarking or disembarking ...der or ammunition, but is to haul off and anchor at a ...tance of not less than 900 yards from such jetty or wharf if ...wder is on board, and if empty of not less than 400 yards. 4. No barge having powder on board is to be left without a ...sponsible watchman in charge. 5. With regard to the ...ing and riding lights required to be carried according to the Admiralty regulations, the usual tinder box, &c., will be used for the purpose of striking a light, and under no pretence are lucifer matches to be on board. Smoking on board is most strictly prohibited. 6. As soon as the barges, &c., have been loaded, the hatches are to be carefully covered with tarpaulins and battened down, and are not to be removed or disturbed until the cargo is ready to be discharged. 7. A powder flag must be kept flying during the time the combustible stores are on board."

A code of instructions has also been issued for the guidance of the foremen and others employed on board the floating magazines. These instructions provide that no person is to enter the magazine portion of the ship without changing his shoes for the proper slippers provided for the purpose, and the labourers employed in working the magazines or removing powder from vessels are not to carry knives or other objectionable articles, and are to wear the dresses to be in future provided for their use. The foremen are to see that the magazines are carefully swept with a hair broom after every day's work, and take care that a proper supply of hides, wadmiltilts, and mats is in readiness and use during the removal of powder. The foremen are to be particular in hoisting the "red flag" during the day, and to take care that one of the labourers allowed for the protection of the ship is constantly on deck keeping a look-out, which duty, under the foreman's directions, is to be performed by the labourers alternately. A night watch, consisting of one foreman and two labourers, is to be efficiently kept, one of the latter being always on deck. The foreman will visit the watch every four hours, and the result is to be entered in a book and reported in the morning to the military store officer in charge. The pumps are to be sounded at least once a day, and care is to be taken that the fire-engines and appurtenances are kept clean and in perfect working order. No person having the slightest appearance of being intoxicated is to be permitted to enter the ship, nor are any spirituous liquors to be allowed on board. No fires or lights of any kind are to be allowed on board the ship at any time, except those at the masthead during the night. The men on watch are to hail all boats approaching the ship.

THE NEW RIDE IN ST. JAMES'S PARK.—This new ride, some time since planned by Mr. Cowper, the First Commissioner of Works, is rapidly approaching completion, and will be ready for use by the commencement of the London season. It extends the whole length of Birdcage Walk, from Storey's Gate to Buckingham Gate. The railings of the enclosure have been placed several feet back, and sufficient space taken from the enclosed ground without at all interfering with the width of the carriage road in Birdcage Walk. In order that the new ride may be entirely free from interruptions, the unsightly lodge opposite Queen's Square Gate has been removed. The new marble fountain will stand by the side of the ride.

METROPOLITAN IMPROVEMENTS.—Within the last few days notices have been given of intended applications to Parliament in the ensuing Session to introduce Bills for the improvement of the metropolis. The most important of these notices relate to the construction of new thoroughfares where they have long been wanted—viz., Hamilton Place to Park Lane, from Piccadilly; Cadogan Place, Chelsea, to the South Kensington Museum; and the opening to the public of all the bridges on which toll is now leviable—viz., Waterloo Bridge, Vauxhall Bridge, Chelsea Suspension Bridge, Battersea Bridge, Lambeth Bridge, and Deptford Creek Bridge. The power to purchase and throw open the bridges is to be vested in the Corporation of London, the Metropolitan Board of Works, and the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, and the Bill, if granted, will enable and require the parishes adjoining the bridges to contribute towards the expense of such purchase, and for that purpose empower the levying of a rate. The Piccadilly and Park Lane New Road Bill is to empower the Metropolitan Board of Works to form and open a new public carriage road commencing near the north end of Hamilton Place and terminating in Park Lane, nearly opposite Pitt's Head Mews, about 130 yards south of Stanhope Gate. The South Kensington New Road Bill will give power to the company applying for it to make a street or road commencing at Pont Street, in the parish of St. Luke, Chelsea, crossing Cadogan Place and Sloane Street, and terminating in the Cromwell Road or Brompton Road, Old Brompton, near the east end of the South Kensington Museum.

METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS.—At a meeting of the Board on Friday, it was reported that the Bank of England had agreed to advance them money for certain required purposes in two loans, to be repaid, one in ten years, the other in 30 years, at the rate of 4½ per cent. A rather angry discussion ensued respecting the statements made before the House of Commons' committee on sewage, and since then in the public press, to the effect that the Board had used Mr. Ridley unfairly in first accepting his tender, and then refusing to complete the contract with him. It was finally agreed by a considerable majority to refer these statements to a committee, with a view to an investigation of the whole matter.

MUSEUM AND SCHOOL OF ART FOR NORTH-EAST LONDON.—A vigorous movement has commenced in the North-east of London for the purpose of establishing a museum and educational classes connected therewith. The great distance of South Kensington from the hives of industry in the opposite quarters of the metropolis, and the consequent inconvenience and loss of time incurred by workmen in the desire to profit by its advantages, have given rise to a very wide-spread feeling on their part, for an art museum in their own locality. The first public meeting on the subject was held yesterday at Hoxton; and it is proposed to hold meetings throughout the whole district to agitate the question.

MÜLLER'S LETTER TO HIS PARENTS.—It is well known that after the condemnation of Franz Müller he wrote a letter to his parents, and it has often been affirmed that in this document he made no allusion to his guilt or innocence; but a perusal of the annexed translation of the letter will show that this assertion, like so many others made for, by, and concerning him, is very wide of the truth:—

"Newgate, London, Nov. 1.

"Dearest Parents, Brothers and Sisters, Friends and Acquaintances,—With trembling hand and sorrowful heart I take up the pen to give you further particulars of my misfortune, which, in consequence of my disobedience towards you, dearest parents, has followed me, and has infinitely shortened the days of my life. I now plainly comprehend the sentence which stands written in the Bible—that whosoever does not honour his father and mother will be followed by an early death; but I only see it now when it is too late. I hope, nevertheless, that you who were so dear to me will not discard me if all the world repulse me; for hope ushers us into life, floats around the happy boy, animates youth with its magic light, and will not be buried with the gray-headed man, for if he closes his weary career at the grave, yet at the grave he plants hope; and on this account I also hope that you will forgive me with all your hearts. I will now briefly tell you how it happened that I am overtaken by an unexpected death, which, nevertheless, I do not deserve, but God oftentimes punishes man by judgments which he does not deserve, and that is now the case with me, in order to punish me for my evil deeds towards you, my dearest parents; for had I listened to you and not proceeded to England this misfortune would not have befallen me, but it is now too late, and therefore I will say no more on that subject, but will describe how it came about. I was at work with a person called Louis Wild, and became acquainted with his sister, Grace Matthews, and things proceeded so far that I meditated marrying her. As I was also acquainted with her brother, John Matthews, it happened that he bought a hat for me. Through the purchase of this hat he brought me to my unexpected death, as I had given up acquaintanceship with his sister. On July 9, 1864, a man was murdered in a railway carriage. From him a watch, chain, and hat were taken at the same time, and another hat was left in the carriage, which hat was similar to the one which John Matthews had bought for me. A reward of 2000 thalers was now offered for those who could give information respecting the murder. I had long previously resolved to go to America, as you yourselves know: and therefore, on Monday, July the 11th, 1864, I went towards the office to pay my passage to America, and on the way a watch and chain were offered me and I bought them, and, as it afterwards appeared, they were the watch and chain belonging to the gentleman who was murdered in the railway carriage on July 9, 1864. I left London for America on July 14, 1864, and reached New York on August 24, 1864, and was there arrested because John Matthews had accused me of the murder, and consequently I was brought back to London. I could not now bring forward the man from whom I had bought the watch and chain, and John Matthews swore that the hat which was left in the railway carriage was the hat he had bought for me on October 24, 1863. I was now required to say where I was on July 9, and also what I did; yet the people said they could not remember, which might easily be the case after so long a time, and on this account I was found guilty of the murder and sentenced to death; but God the Almighty knows that I am innocent, and therefore I shall die in peace. I have now said all upon the subject which I can say, and I will therefore end my letter, for I have nothing more to say. We must now part from one another for this world, therefore farewell for ever; nevertheless, my fervent blessing follows you. I shall see you no more in this world, and only in that world where there will be no more separation. Loving you sincerely here, I await with longing heart the moment when we shall see one another again in that world. In this hope I will conclude, but I pray, dearest parents, and brothers and sisters, that you will not be sorrowful, for I am tranquil and in peace, for what can give greater consolation than to be in affliction without guilt, and as it is also said in the Holy Scripture, 'Fear not they who can kill the body, fear rather much more they who can destroy body and soul,' and, therefore, I shall atone for the sins towards you of which I have been guilty, and then the Lord will also graciously receive me. Time has been left me till the 14th of November, and therefore I write you some lines and send them as soon as possible in order that I may have peace, which I can only receive when you forgive me from your hearts, and that you will not refuse to me. In the hope that you will not let my request be uncomplied with, I remain your loving son and brother, FRANZ MULLER, who was sold as a slave in London by John Matthews for 2000 thalers."

In consequence of the publication of this letter, Mr. Sheriff Dakin has felt it to be his duty to publish the letter written in answer to that communication by the father of the convict. It should be explained that the letter of the convict, which was written on the 1st of November, a fortnight before his execution, was placed in the hands of Sheriff Dakin on that day to be forwarded to its destination. The Sheriff forwarded it without delay, and the reply, having been received at Newgate on the 12th of November, the day but one before the execution, was immediately handed to the condemned man. After the execution it passed into the hands of the sheriffs as the proper custodians of such a document, and the following literal translation of it is now published with their sanction and at their request:—

"Unhappy Son,—We received your letter on the 6th of November, but, alas! how deeply have you fallen. You ask us to forgive you; we do forgive you, and if you are guilty, may God forgive you also. If you are innocent, may God lighten your last hours. I must conclude, for my thoughts fail me. God be with you. Amen.—YOUR UNHAPPY FATHER.

"Langen Dembach, Nov. 9."

The extreme brevity of the letter in comparison with the length of that to which it was a reply, and its general tone, produced an impression on the minds of the Sheriffs and the authorities at Newgate at the time that the convict had failed to convince his father of his innocence.

MANSLAUGHTER BY BURNING.—On Tuesday the coroner for the City held an inquest on the body of a young woman called Deacon, who had died in Bartholomew Hospital from burning, in consequence, as she alleged, of an attempt by her master, a tailor, named Withers, about three weeks since, to commit upon her a criminal assault. She stated that, in the course of the struggle which ensued she was thrust against the chimney-piece, and fell into the fireplace in such a manner that she was in fact sitting on the grate. So great was her excitement that she was not conscious of having caught fire until her whole dress was in a blaze. She has remained in the hospital ever since, and at one time it was expected that she would recover, but on Sunday she became worse and died soon afterwards. The jury returned a verdict of Manslaughter against Withers, who was committed to Newgate for trial.

GREAT FIRE AT DOCKHEAD, BERMONDSEY.—On Friday evening a great fire broke out on the premises of Messrs. Barry Brothers, wharfingers and saltpetre merchants, Mill Street, Dockhead, lately in the occupation of Messrs. Meriton and Hagen, and known as the Sufferance Wharves, Bermondsey. The premises contained many thousand tons of saltpetre, and as a strong wind was blowing from S.E. to S.W., the powder piles and blocks of saltpetre caught fire at intervals, illuminating the air round about with all the colours of the rainbow, and scattering smoke, ashes, and sparks on the factories and buildings in the immediate neighbourhood. Several engines arrived within a short time, but such was the combustible nature of the contents of the building that all their efforts were ineffectual in subduing the vast mass of fire, and operations were almost solely directed towards preventing it extending to the adjacent wharves and premises. The fire was not effectually checked until Saturday afternoon, but it is not yet thoroughly extinguished, and may continue smouldering for three or four days to come. On Saturday evening a wall fell, in consequence of the pressure caused by the effect of steam and water upon the jute stored within, but the firemen luckily escaped.

The damage is estimated at nearly a quarter of a million.

MURDER AT CLERKENWELL.—A shocking case of murder took place on Wednesday the 23d ult., on the premises of Messrs. French, manufacturing jewellers in Newcastle Place, Clerkenwell. Two young men, called Roberts and Jackson, were working on the premises till a late hour, when some of the neighbours heard cries of "murder" and groans proceeding from the place. On going to ascertain the cause they saw Jackson make his escape from the premises over a wall, and found Roberts covered with blood, with his head and face severely beaten. He was taken to the hospital, where he soon after died, and Jackson was taken into custody. At the inquest on Saturday it was stated that the blows were inflicted with a broom-handle, but beyond the fact that the prisoner was 8*l.* or 10*l.* in debt to deceased there appears to have been no motive for the attack. The jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the prisoner, and on Thursday, at Clerkenwell Police Court, the magistrate fully committed him for trial, on the capital charge, at the next session of the Central Criminal Court.

THE PLAISTOW MURDER.—On Saturday the prisoner Kohl was again brought before the Ilford magistrates, when additional evidence was given, and he was fully committed for trial at the next session of the Central Criminal Court.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended Saturday, the 26th November, were 1677. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 years, 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1518. The present return is therefore 159 above the average. The most fatal disease in the list was, as in the previous week, bronchitis. During the week the births of 1004 boys and 940 girls, in all 1944 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1920.

Provincial.

BIRKENHEAD.—During the past week Mr. Childers, M.P., the Civil Lord of the Admiralty, has been the guest of Mr. Laird, M.P., at Birkenhead. Mr. Childers has charge of the docks, basins, and the account-keeping at the dockyards. He is therefore looking round and seeing how things are managed by such trusts as the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board. He has taken the opportunity to inspect the Birkenhead Dock Works, the yard of Messrs. Laird Brothers, and especially the iron-clad Agincourt. He has also inspected the docks and dock works on the Liverpool side.

BRISTOL.—A meeting was convened at Broadmead Rooms on Thursday, to adopt an address from Bristol expressive of gratification at the re-election of President Lincoln, and the consequent continuance and extension of the anti-slavery policy which the Federal Government has inaugurated under his Administration. Sixpence and twopence were charged for admission. The room was crowded to excess. Mr. Powell, a working man, in dumb show moved that Mr. Warren, Town Councillor, should act as chairman. Mr. Warren was unable to get a hearing, the audience singing "We won't go home till morning," "John Brown," and other songs. Cheers were given for Jeff. Davis and Lee, and groans for Grant, Butler, and Lincoln. At last a rush was made on the platform, and the intending speakers were ignominiously routed. Some Northern sympathisers remaining, another charge was made. The chairman's table was wrenched in pieces, and the platform left in possession of the friends of the South. After the lapse of about an hour the gas was lowered and the police cleared the room.

BROMLEY.—The inquest on the farm labourer Fisher, who was found in a dying state in the road at Orpington on the night of the 19th ult., took place on Friday, when the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the two men Staples and Turner who were taken into custody at the time. The magistrates have since committed them for trial on the capital charge.

DUDLEY.—On the 16th ult. eight workmen were ascending the shaft of the Counterfield Colliery, at Withymore, when the chain broke, and they fell to the bottom of the pit. They were all killed by the fall, or died immediately after. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict that the deceased men came by their deaths through the negligence of the colliery engineer and manager, and accordingly returned a verdict of Manslaughter against Zechariah Mason, the manager, and James Leadham, the engineer.

HARTLEPOOL.—A singular discovery of stolen property took place on the 16th ult. at Elwick, near West Hartlepool. In August, 1863, Mr. James Park, the son of Mr. Justice Park, was a guest of the Rev. J. A. Park, at Elwick Hall, and on the night of the 11th, before the household had retired to rest, a pocket-book, containing two Bank of England notes, one for 200*l.* and the other for 100*l.*, a cheque for 57*l.*, four sovereigns and some silver, a massive gold watch and chain, gold pin, and studs, were stolen from his dressing-room. Suspicion attached to the butler, who was brought before the magistrates, but for want of evidence was discharged. He left the neighbourhood, and got a situation in the south; and a strict watch was kept over the premises for upwards of a month, but no clue was obtained to the perpetration of the robbery, or the discovery of the stolen property. On the 16th ult., 15 months after the robbery, as two of Mr. Park's workmen were engaged in cutting a stack of hay, they found the pocket-book containing the whole of the missing property, about 3 feet from the outside of the stack. They will no doubt receive the 20*l.* reward that was offered at the time of the robbery.

LEICESTER.—A double murder was committed on Saturday morning at Syston, a village about four miles from that town. A man called Baum, a wheelwright, murdered his wife and infant daughter by cutting their throats, and then attempted to commit suicide. The prisoner was prevented by his mother-in-law from accomplishing this part of his purpose, and was ultimately overpowered by two men, whom he attempted to stab with a carving fork. He was taken before the magistrates in the course of the day, and remanded. At the inquest on Monday the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the prisoner.

LIVERPOOL.—The American ship Great Western sailed from the Mersey on Tuesday morning for New York, the Government having decided that it had no claim upon the ship. It is understood that the owners of the vessel, Messrs. Baring Brothers, have lodged a claim against the Government for losses sustained by the detention of the ship.

MAIDENHEAD.—On Monday a vagrant named Croft alias Smith, was charged before the county magistrates at Maidenhead, with the murder of the old woman, Elizabeth Butler, at Sunninghill Park, on the 15th October. He had been in prison for a month for vagrancy, and on the expiration of that sentence he was arrested on this charge. The carrier who discovered the body of deceased, the surgeon who made the post mortem examination, and the two men who saw the prisoner in the neighbourhood, gave evidence; and, on the application of the chief constable of the county, the prisoner was remanded for a week.

MANCHESTER.—On Monday a meeting of the Central Relief Committee was held in the Town Hall, Sir J. K. Shuttleworth in the chair. The Hon. Secretary reported the receipt during the week of 145*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*, and a balance in the bank of 82,669*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.* Mr. Farnall's report stated that on the 19th ult. there was a decrease of 1048 persons in receipt of relief in the 27 distressed unions. A long correspondence was then read respecting the loans granted under the Public Works Act, chiefly in reference to the complaint of the Central Committee, that out of the 1,200,000*l.* which was placed at the disposal of the towns of Lancashire by the Act of 1863, Manchester had obtained upwards of 200,000*l.*, but was spending it in a manner to afford very little employment to the distressed operatives. In fact, in the last week of October the number of factory operatives at work in Manchester was only 98, while Glossop with a loan of 16,401*l.* was employing 392. The defence set up by the Corporation of Manchester was that they were compelled to take loans for which they had no real occasion, that the only works they could set on foot were such as would necessarily give employment to little unskilled labour, and that the Poor Law Board was informed of these facts when the loans were applied for and granted.

NEWCASTLE.—Another coasting steamer, called the Dalhousie, foundered during the gale of Thursday the 24th ult. off the mouth of the Tay, on her voyage from Dundee to this port, and every soul on board is reported to have perished. Another steamer, the William Hutt, is reported to have gone down on Thursday morning in St. Nicholas Gat, between Yarmouth and Lowestoft. One of the crew was picked up by a smack, but nothing is known of the others.

OXFORD.—The annual meeting of the Society for Augmenting Small Benefices in this diocese was held in the Sheldonian Theatre on Friday, under the presidency of the Bishop of Oxford. Resolutions in favour of the object of the meeting were moved and seconded by Mr. Walter, M.P.; Mr. H. Barnett, Mr. Cardwell, M.P.; Mr. Disraeli, M.P.; Mr. Beresford Hope, Mr. Hubbard, M.P.; Professor Bernard, Colonel North, M.P.; and Lord Barrington. The following is a summary of Mr. Disraeli's speech on the occasion:—

"During the last few years while the principle of religious liberty, which I am sure no Churchman now wishes to disturb or distrusts—has been developed and carried out to its completeness, the country after years of discussion has come to a determination that the union between Church and State is perfectly consistent with the existence and complete development of the principle of religious liberty, and that if a separation did occur, there would be something besides religious truth that would be endangered—that is, political liberty would be imperilled. It was once held to be impossible that the Church could exist in this country long in consequence of the great spread of Dissent; but during this period of transition, we fell upon a statistical age. Statistics were studied by the nation, and they discovered that there had not been a spread of Dissent, that on the contrary, Dissent had diminished—I mean true religious Dissent—that the descendants of the Puritan families, of whom I shall always speak with that respect which their high qualities and historical character deserve, had almost all merged in the Church itself, and that, in fact, there was no reason for supposing that the Church could not be maintained in its original and constitutional position. The country, however, has resolved that its nationality shall not be abdicated, and the consequence is that the Church must assert its nationality. I remember some three years ago, at a meeting of one of these diocesan societies, I ventured briefly to point out the measures by which I thought the nationality of the Church might be practically asserted; and though I do not now enter into any details on the subject, I will notice them briefly, because they will complete the position from which I wish to draw some inferences that affect the [illegible] meeting. I said then I thought there were [illegible] which the nationality of the Church might be asserted, being, as I say, not only the duty, but a [illegible] Church that it should be asserted in a practical [illegible] in the first place, I said the nationality of the Church [illegible] asserted with regard to the question of education. I [illegible] it is of the utmost importance that the Church [illegible] any way compromise that legitimate position we [illegible] with reference to the question of education, which [illegible] has obtained by natural circumstances, and which [illegible] tioned by law. Secondly, I said another practical [illegible] asserting its nationality was to support, but [illegible] extravagant, but a temperate and moderate [illegible] extension of the episcopate. The third measure [illegible] all ecclesiastical matters which were not of a strictly [illegible] nature the assistance of the laity should be called [illegible] operation with the clergy, in order that we should [illegible] from the public mind that vulgar but pernicious [illegible] the Church is an ecclesiastical corporation. The [illegible] measure was to assert the rights and duties of Convocation, which exist in our parochial constitution, and are [illegible] them; and the fifth measure was to support and [illegible] diocesan institutions. Now, in my opinion these are [illegible] temperate in conception, but practical in execution, which [illegible] carried out—and I believe they might be carried out, for they are entirely adapted to the temper of the times—would add amazingly to the efficiency of the Church. As I am upon this subject I will venture to say there are three other [illegible] measures which I think ought now to engage the attention of churchmen, and the first is that we should favour in every possible manner the formation of Convocation on a [illegible] basis, and with a fuller representation of the parochial clergy. It is not necessary now, nor would it be convenient, to enter into details on this subject. I would just intimate that if the two provinces were united the basis would be much broader, and at this moment in the province of York the parochial clergy are more fully represented than in the province of Canterbury. There is something, I think, ridiculous in the fact that the diocess of London, for example, with [illegible] is only represented in Convocation by two parochial [illegible] men. The next measure I hope we shall induce my right [illegible] friend (Mr. Cardwell) to undertake, and that is to [illegible] relations of our colonial Church—which remember, is [illegible] Established Church, in a more satisfactory state than [illegible] present. Another measure which in my own mind is [illegible] is the formation of some tribunal of last appeal in [illegible] matters. No one accuses the Church of apathy. No one accuses the Church of not possessing influence. No one accuses the Church of wanting power or intelligence. If they say it is still doomed, the Church must [illegible] it is still in greater danger than ever, and [illegible] danger comes not from an anti-Church party but from its own intestine dissensions and from the differences that exist in its own bosom. I am not here to deny, or, what is more, to regret the existence of parties in the Church. Parties in the Church have always existed. They existed in the Church at Jerusalem. They existed in the Church of Ephesus. They existed always in the Church at Rome. There are some who are satisfied by symbolical ceremonies, and feel that their [illegible] only adequately satisfied by ecclesiastical arrangements of that character. There are others who can only be satisfied by the ecstasy of spiritual enthusiasm; but as long as they who counsel or pursue these modes meet on the common platform of true sound Church principles—and I hold that the acknowledgment of the Church as the sacred depository of [illegible] truth is a true Church principle—I do not think that such a course of conduct is to be regretted, but on the whole I [illegible] no doubt that it has been extremely advantageous to the country and to the Church. And I believe that the [illegible] parties in the Church have effected as great advantage to the Church as the two great parties in the constitution have achieved for public liberty and the good government of the country. But there is yet another party to which I must for a moment refer, because, no doubt, the influence of that party upon that cordial co-operation of Churchmen by which the objects of these societies can be effectively supported is very great, and I cannot say that it is advantageous. Now, that is a party which is described by an epithet which I have observed that a distinguished prelate of the Church has used in a recent address to his clergy, but which appears to me to be an epithet that I should not use within these classic walls, for it has hardly as yet entered into the category of classical expressions. It is an epithet, my lord, that would imply a particular degree of comprehension. But whilst fully acknowledging the great abilities, the great eloquence, and the great knowledge of the new Church party to which I am alluding, I must say that there is this peculiarity about the comprehension which they attempt to accomplish. Hitherto there has been nothing new in a Church party aiming at the comprehensive; but then this has always happened, that the comprehension which they have aimed at has been possible. They have always wished to include those who believed anything; but the remarkable peculiarity of the comprehension of the party to which I now refer is this—that they seem to wish to include everybody who believes nothing. Now, this party is not founded upon the principle of authority—on which all Church parties hitherto in this country, and in all countries to some degree, have always been founded. But it is founded upon a very singular principle. It is founded upon the principle of criticism. Now, doubt is an element of criticism, and the tendency of criticism is necessarily sceptical. I use the epithet in a philosophical, and not in a popular or odious sense. It is quite possible, for example, that a party which is founded upon the principle of criticism may arrive at conclusions which may be monstrous. They may, for example, reject inspiration as a principle and miracles as a practice. That is possible. And I think it is quite [illegible] that, having arrived at that conclusion, they should repudiate creeds and reject articles of faith, because creeds and articles of faith cannot exist or be sustained without acknowledging the principle of inspiration and the practice of miracles. All that I admit; but what I do not understand, and what I wish to draw the attention of this assembly and of the country to is this—that having arrived at this conclusion, having arrived conscientiously at the conclusion that with these opinions such a party must repudiate creeds and articles, that they should not carry their principles to a legitimate conclusion, but that, repudiating creeds and subscribing articles, they are still the sworn supporters of the [illegible] siastical establishments, fervent upholders of the [illegible] of the Church—even of the rectors, vicars and curates. the common blunder—the common cry—that articles of [illegible] and religious creeds are the arms of the clergy, and are [illegible] tyrannise over the land. They are exactly the reverse. precise creed and the strict article are the title-deeds of the laity to the religion which has descended to them. [illegible] whenever these questions have been brought before Parliament I have always opposed alterations of creeds, articles and subscriptions on this broad principle—that the security and certainty which they furnish are the [illegible] privileges of the laity, and that you cannot tell in what position the laity will be if that security is withdrawn. Before I conclude I cannot but ask myself this question—Will these opinions succeed? Is there a possibility of their success? My conviction is that they will fail. I do perfect justice to the great talent, the great knowledge, and the considerable information which the new party command; but I believe they will fail—for two reasons. In the first place, having illustrated all their writings, I believe without any exception whether they consist of fascinating eloquence, diversified learning, or picturesque sensibility—I speak seriously what I feel—that too exercised by one honoured in this university, and whom to know is to admire and regard; or whether I find them in the crude conclusions of prelates who appear to me to have commenced their theological studies when they grasped the crozier, and who introduced to society their discoveries with the startling wonder and the simplicity of their own savages; or whether I read the productions of nebulous professors, who appear in their books to have revived chaos, and who, if they could only succeed, would make a perpetual study of their writings, would go through that eternal punishment to which they object. Now, whether it be the provincial arrogance and pretentiousness complacency which flash and glare in an essay or review, I find that the common characteristic in all their writings is this, that their learning is always second-hand. In the first place, when I examine those who have been the founders of the new school in this learning; men who undoubtedly have gone through the process of original research, and who are their equals for learning and perseverance and laborious solidity for many generations—the great scholars of Germany—I find this in their labours, that there is nothing new. I will admit their great qualities; as philologists they are equal to the great scholars of the 18th, and have not reached at the end of the 17th century. In their knowledge of the cognate Semitic dialects they are infinitely superior. In the new theory, or science of language as it is called, they have of course an advantage which the old scholars have not shared with them, because it is a science which has only been developed in our own time. But this I do say, that in all important conclusions from the alleged contradictions of the Book of Genesis down to the formation of the Hebrew text, and in every important event, historical, literary, and political, that occurred in that long interval, they have been anticipated by the great Hebrew scholars who flourished in the seventeenth and at the end of the seventeenth century. There is another characteristic of the present age which never existed in preceding ages, and which we are told must be dangerous and destructive to the Church and to all religious establishments, and that is the progress of science. The teachings of science and its discoveries are not, we are told, consistent with the teachings of the Church. Now, I am sure there is not one in this theatre who is not prepared to do full justice to the labours of scientific men, and who does not fully appreciate the discoveries of science which have added so much to the comfort of life and to the comfort of man. But it is of the greatest importance, when this tattle about science is mentioned, that we should annex to it precise ideas. I hold that the highest function of science is the interpretation of nature—and the interpretation of the highest nature is the highest science. What is the highest nature? Man is the highest nature. But I must say that when you compare the interpretation of the highest nature with the most advanced, the most fashionable and modish school of modern science—compare that with some other teachings with which we are familiar—I am not prepared to say that a lecture room is more scientific than the Church. What is the question now placed before society with a glib assurance the most astounding? The question is this—is a man an ape or an angel? My lord, I am on the side of the angel. I repudiate with indignation and abhorrence those views. I believe they are foreign to the conscience of humanity; and I will say more than that, even in the strictest intellectual point of view, I believe the severest metaphysical analysis is opposed to that conclusion. But on the other hand, what does the Church teach us? What is its interpretation of this highest nature? It teaches us that man is made in the image of his Creator—a source of inspiration, of solace—a source from which flow all every right principle of morals and every Divine truth. I say, therefore, that when we are told that the teachings of the Church are not consistent with the discoveries of science, and that in that sense the inferiority of the Church is shown, I totally deny the proposition. I say that the scientific teaching of the Church upon the most important of all subjects is, in fact, infinitely superior to anything that has been brought forward by any of those new discoveries. In fact, it is between those two principles that society will have to decide. Upon our acceptance of that Divine truth, of which the Church is the guardian, all sound and coherent and sensible legislation depends. It is the only security for civilization; it is the only guarantee of real progress."

RADNOR.—A memorial to the late Sir G. C. Lewis was inaugurated on Wednesday at New Radnor. It is in the style of an Eleanor Cross, from the design of Mr. Gibbs, of Oxford, and is built mainly of Box ground stone, 77 feet high by 25 feet in width at the base, and octagonal in form. It comprises three distinct stages. On the front of the stage next the base is the following inscription:—"Radnorshire to her most distinguished Son, Sir George Cornewall Lewis, Bart. Died 1863." Under this inscription there is a medallion portrait in marble of the late Baronet, and on the second stage above it, in four recesses, divided by eight columns, stand, under richly-carved canopies, four allegorical figures, each 6 feet high, representing Justice, Truth, Oratory, and Literature. The next stage consists of columns of red Mansfield stone, placed round an octagonal shaft, and decorated with the coats of arms of England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, immediately over which are four large griffins grasping the arms of the Lewis family. An ornamental spire springing from this last stage, and having at the top a carved cross with a circle entwined in its centre, terminates the structure. The memorial stands on a triangular plot of grass at the entrance to New Radnor by the Kington Road, at a point where three roads intersect one another, so that every visitor to the town will pass within a few yards of it. The Earl of Clarendon inaugurated the monument, and Sir J. Walsh, the Bishop of St. David's, and the Rev. Sir Gilbert Lewis, spoke on the occasion.

ROCHDALE.—On Wednesday, the 23d ult., Mr. Cobden addressed his constituents in this town on the principal events of the last Session, with especial reference to the Schleswig Holstein question and the civil war in America. The following is a summary of his speech, which fills nearly six columns of the daily papers:—

"The proceedings of the Session have led in my opinion to a complete revolution in our foreign policy, and have put an immeasurable gulf between the old traditions of the Foreign Office and the principles which I hope to see adopted in the conduct of our foreign affairs. During the 30 years since I first, by pen or voice, gave utterance to any sentiment in public I have always attached the utmost importance to the principle of non-intervention in the concerns of other nations. During the last Session the whole attention of Parliament, as far as the action of the two great parties who contend for power and place are concerned, was given to this question of Schleswig-Holstein. I am not going into the history of that most complicated of all questions further than this, that in 1852, through the mischievous activity of our Foreign Office, seven diplomatists were brought round a green table in London to settle the destinies of a million of people in the two provinces of Schleswig-Holstein, without the slightest reference to the wants or wishes, or tendencies, or interest of the people A treaty was settled, the object of which was to draw closer these two provinces and Denmark. The tendency of the great majority of the people of the provinces—about a million in all—being altogether in the direction of Germany, from that time to this year that treaty was followed by constant agitation and discord. A couple of wars sprang out of it, and the upshot of it is that it has been torn to pieces by two of the Governments who were parties to it. Great debates took place in both Houses of Parliament, in one of which the Earl of Ellenborough, in advocating war, reprobated the love of repose and the love of money which had, he said, become the engrossing passion of the people of this country. Now if he wished to show that the English people in money matters are chivalrously generous, almost foolishly generous, he would call no other witness than Lord Ellenborough himself, to whom they gave an annual allowance of 7700*l*., although he had no moral claim, and certainly no legal right to it that would be recognised in any other country. In the House of Commons there was a general opinion that there was a great struggle going on in the Cabinet as to whether we should declare war against Germany. The country members however and the members representing large constituencies, went to the whippers-in, and told them distinctly that the nation would allow no war for any such matter as Schleswig-Holstein. The Opposition, who had been urging the Government to do something, brought forward a motion condemning them, and ultimately an amendment was carried, which neither absolved nor condemned the Government, but merely expressed satisfaction that we had escaped war, and there the matter ended. But this is not a very honourable position to be left in. The Government encouraged a small Power to fight with a big one, and then backed out themselves, for which we are caricatured in every country in Europe. It is not enough that the Government should not interfere in foreign questions, it is not enough that the Government should not lecture foreign countries as to what policy they should pursue; but Englishmen, through their public speakers and their press, must learn to treat foreign nations in a different spirit than they have hitherto done; and they must learn to do it as a point of honour to other countries, as well as from a sense of self-respect of what is due to themselves. I have no hesitation in saying that what was done in London and Paris last year on the subject of Poland has led thousands of the generous youth of Poland to a premature grave, thousands more to Siberian exile, and has incapacitated the insurrection, if that can be called an insurrection, which never had a chance from the beginning. We are the only people in the whole world that make foreign topics matters of passionate, earnest, internal politics. You never see in France or Germany, or in America, the newspapers taking up foreign questions, and attacking each other because they are not of the same opinions. I believe I might be Prime Minister if I would say that you are the wisest, the best, and the happiest people in the whole world. I have no doubt that I might be Prime Minister. I have seen in my experience Prime Ministers made by this process. If we are to discuss these foreign questions at all, let us do so calmly and temperately, as I now mean to do the subject of the American war. And first, as to the cause of this disruption: why have not the Southern States followed the example of our English revolutions, and even of their own in 1776, by publishing a programme of their grievances? Because they have but the grievance they want to consolidate, perpetuate, and extend—slavery, but they cannot do it. But, instead of taking a straightforward course, they constantly say, 'Leave us alone; all we want is to be left alone.' That is the reason why the Conservative Governments of Europe and so large a portion of the upper classes in England have consented to back the insurrection. Now, how would they feel it Essex and Kent, having been beaten on the subject of the Corn laws, had chosen to set up Kent and Essex and East Anglia right across the Thames, as the Secessionists have sought to attempt to cut off Louisiana from the mouth of the Mississippi, and if they had said "We want to be left alone." The late Presidential election has given to the world a spectacle such as was never before presented by any other people. The contest was between General M'Clellan, who desires to put down the war without making the abolition of slavery a condition, and Mr. Lincoln, who desires to put down the war and extirpate slavery from the South. The whole people have preferred acting in the interests of humanity. They have preferred the continuance of war rather than the continuance of degrading slavery. Let us have no more of the late talk that this is not a war to put down slavery. I do not believe that that country in my day will ever be separated. I look upon the geographical difficulties in the way of separation to be absolutely insurmountable. Take the case of the Mississippi; that river with its tributaries flows through 20,000 miles of navigable waters into the Gulf of Mexico. It would be far easier for Essex or Kent to carry off the mouths of the Thames and set up an East Anglian kingdom than for Louisiana to carry off the mouths of the Mississippi and set up for an independent State. There are some few hundreds of thousands in the counties of Kent and Essex, but the valley of the Mississippi will become the home of 200,000,000, and this makes it infinitely more impossible that the United States should allow the mouths of the Mississippi to be carried off than that England should suffer the mouth of the Thames to be taken away. And here I would notice the total ignorance of everything relating to American geography among the ruling classes of this country. If I were a rich man I would endow a professor's chair at Oxford and Cambridge to instruct the undergraduates of those Universities in American history. I would undertake to say, and I speak advisedly, that I will take any undergraduate now at Oxford or Cambridge, and I will bring him to a map of the United States, and ask him to put his finger on Chicago, and I will undertake to say that he does not go within 1000 miles of it. Yet these young gentlemen know all about the geography of ancient Greece and Egypt, and also about the Ilissus, which, when I saw it, resembled the bed of a dried-up torrent, and was occupied by a number of Athenian laundresses. You know my opinions with respect to the future of America. I don't desire to carry them out, and I should not have said so much if so much had not been said on the other side. I want nothing but neutrality. But if we are to have perfect neutrality on this subject, let us try, for Heaven's sake, to have a little more temper in the discussion of a question for which, happily for us, we are not responsible. I am mute and silenced when I recollect that I have been protesting against war ever since I came into public life, but I have never succeeded in preventing wars all over the world. I could not say to America, 'Why do you insist on carrying on this civil war?' I should at once be subject to the reply, 'Why do you not take the beam out of your own eye before you take the mote out of ours?' But I fear that the advocates of all these wars, against which I have always been vainly protesting, are now turning up the whites of their eyes, as if they had been Quakers from their birth. With regard to domestic policy, I defy you to find a necessity for keeping up your present military establishment and spending 25,000,000*l* a year on the army and navy. Mr. Gladstone has been the most extravagant Chancellor who ever managed the Treasury, but he has proved himself a master in adjusting the burdens of the country. I mean that he found the weight placed on the animal in such a way as to render it most difficult for him to carry it, the burden was tied round his knees, it was fastened to his tail, it hung over his eyes, it blinded him, impeded his movement, and lamed him at every step. Then came Mr. Gladstone and released the fettered limbs, placing the burden most ingeniously on the softest possible pad on the animal's shoulders, but we must not forget that the beast is still carrying the burden, and a great deal more than we had to bear before this beautiful process was commenced. We never before had a Government which extracted from the country 70 millions of income in time of peace. Mr. Gladstone is the man who has by his talents and ability enabled the Government to get this money; but he has nearly finished his career of manifolding the sources of revenue; and any future services that he can render must be in reducing the expenditure. I trust therefore that he will appeal to the British public on the subject; and that he will be enabled during the next Session to make a large reduction in the actual expenditure."

RUGBY.—At the annual meeting of the Rugby and Deincehurst Conservative Association, on the 24th ult., Mr. Newdegate spoke at considerable length in justification of the course which he pursued during the last Session. He said:—

"You will forgive me for saying that great anxiety is manifested to know what will be my future conduct in relation to party. I can only give you that best of all assurances, my conduct in the past. There is no man who recognises more fully the necessity for party organisation. Remember that I have held the office of "whipper-in" for the Conservative party, and no more zealous whipper-in ever undertook the duty who worked harder than I did, so long as I was confident of one thing—that there was a strict reason between the principle which we had advanced to the country and the action of the party for which I laboured as the representative of those opinions; but of late years circumstances have occurred which rendered it my duty, as representing distinct opinions, to take my seat below the gangway as an independent member. If North Warwickshire has not the courage to support her member when he seems to be isolated on a division, and has not the inclination to abide by the opinions which she had so long directed him to advocate, and I can say is that I await the expression of her opinion, and if she is changed in principle I shall readily acknowledge the justice of her verdict if she declares that I am no longer fitted to be her representative. But I must remind North Warwickshire of this: for 16 or 17 years I have taken an active part in public life, always in the sense of the principles on which I was first returned. You cannot give me back these 17 years; you cannot cancel them; and were I now to abandon those principles I should not stand like a young man free from all engagements in entering Parliament for the first time, but it might be that my whole past conduct would rise up against me and condemn me. I should have to struggle forward, constantly reminded of abandoned principles, of abandoned opinions. I should be impotent for good, and therefore I qualify the question that has been put to me, 'Will you support Lord Derby and his party for every constitutional purpose and in every constitutional mode of action?' But if I find either Lord Derby's party or himself departing from the great fundamental principles of our Protestant constitution, I will oppose the leaders of that party acting, I am happy to say, with the body of that party in the House of Commons, as I did upon the Prison Ministers Bill—a Bill for the qualified establishment of Roman Catholic chaplains in every gaol to be paid by the ratepayers. I will oppose them as I did on the Lords' Bill, which was an exaggeration of the principles proposed by Sir G. Grey during the last Session. In accordance with the principles to which I adhere, I will support Lord Derby's party, as I have always done, but I will not be carried beyond those principles."

WINDSOR.—On Monday morning the massive sarcophagus, which is intended to be placed in the new Mausoleum at Frogmore, as a receptacle for the remains of the Prince Consort, was conveyed from the Windsor terminus of the Great Western Railway to the royal grounds at Frogmore. The sarcophagus, which is of a dark polished Scotch granite, arrived at Windsor from Aberdeen on Sunday morning. It consists of two parts, each of which was carefully packed in a strong wooden case. They weigh together about 13 tons. The recumbent statue of the Prince Consort, which is to be placed on the top of the sarcophagus, will be the work of Baron Marochetti. The Mausoleum itself is now nearly finished.

THE YELVERTON CASE.—Major Yelverton's petition to apply the judgment of the House of Lords was in the "single bills" of the first division of the Court of Session last week, and was remitted to the summer roll. On Saturday an application was made to the Lord President on behalf of Mrs. Theresa Longworth or Yelverton, craving leave to put in a condescendence res noviter to the effect that Major Yelverton had repeatedly admitted the Scotch marriage to his brother Frederick Yelverton, now deceased, and in particular had talked with him during his last illness, in presence and hearing of Sarah Mullins, his nurse, in terms implying an acknowledgment of said marriage. The application concluded with a prayer that it should be received with other documents, and "remitted to probation." The application was directed to stand over till the judges had seen the "condescendence" and other documents which the counsel for the "pursuer" had in hand. The calling lists of the Court of Session also contain notice of an action of damages at the instance of the Honourable Maria Theresa Longworth or Yelverton, residing in Edinburgh, against Alexander James Beresford Hope, of Bedgebury Park, Kent, and John Douglas Cook, of The Albany, Middlesex, both residing in or near London, or elsewhere furth of Scotland, against whom arrestments have been used ad fundandam jurisdictionem. The defenders are the registered proprietors of the Saturday Review, and the grounds of action are the alleged libel in the article on the Yelverton case which appeared in the Saturday Review soon after the House of Lords' decision. The damages claimed are 3000*l*. In connection with these proceedings we may mention that the Irish papers announce the death of "Father Mooney," the Irish priest who performed the marriage ceremony between Miss Theresa Longworth and Major Yelverton, in the little chapel of Kilbroney, Rostrevor. The deceased gentleman was subjected to a very severe cross-examination at the trial of the Yelverton case, in Dublin, and it is said "he was never himself since."

FATAL CATASTROPHE AT GLASGOW.—On Wednesday night a harbour ferry boat, containing 22 persons, was upset by the swell of a steamer. Four of the passengers succeeded in reaching the shore, and under medical treatment were so far restored in the course of an hour or two that they were able to be taken to their homes. Three others were found holding on by the keel of the boat, and one was found beneath immersed in the water convulsively clutching the gunwale. The three men on the keel were taken ashore little the worse, but the fourth, a man about 50 years of age, died in the course of the evening. The remaining 14 persons were drowned.

Railways.

LOCKING UP PASSENGERS IN RAILWAY CARRIAGES.—The Lord Advocate, in a lecture delivered at Portobello on Friday evening, observed: "Posterity will say—'What times those were when travellers were stopped at Bagshot, or Hounslow, or Shooter's Hill! Railroads, no doubt, put an end to these adventures, but only to give rise to greater danger. Would you believe it?' My successor in this hall may say in 1964: 'Would you believe it, a 100 years ago they treated a traveller like a convict? They locked him in a box, and, ill or well, living or dead, no man could see him, and he could see no man, until he had gone 40 miles. It is a fact. He might be shut up with a murderer, a madman, with a drunkard, or a villain; he might die of apoplexy; he might have his throat cut; all this was thought of no consequence at that time. The simple arrangements which we now make were often proposed, but resisted with frantic wrath as being utterly impracticable. They had built their carriages for people to be imprisoned in them, and therefore imprisoned they must be. The easy expedient of a gangway outside the carriage and a bell inside was assailed with a hundred good and conclusive objections. People would use it recklessly; and it was a pity to disturb the guard when asleep. It would enable anybody to stop the train, although, as you all know, it does not enable any one to stop the train; it would enable thieves to leave the carriages and to escape—which is about as good a reason for not making a road to your house."

EXTRAORDINARY TERMINATION OF A SUPPOSED RAILWAY TRAGEDY.—About 10 o'clock on Monday the 21st ult. the Liverpool detectives received a telegram from Rugby stating that a man had been robbed and murdered in the London express train to Liverpool, and it was believed that he had been thrown out of the railway carriage. A number of detectives awaited the arrival of the train at Liverpool, and on its reaching the platform at once proceeded to the compartment indicated in the telegram, and arrested four sailors and an artillery sergeant as the parties concerned in the outrage. These men were at once taken to the police office and closely questioned, but two of the sailors were so much intoxicated that they could give no account of the affair. The artillery sergeant, however, stated that when near Rugby a sailor, who had been the messmate of the other prisoners in Messrs. Baines & Co.'s ship Commodore Perry, while in a state of intoxication, lurched against the door, which flew open, and he fell out, while the train was going at express speed. In the course of the night the Rugby and Stafford detectives telegraphed that they could not find or hear anything of the missing man. The sailors and the soldier who had been arrested were therefore detained in custody until Tuesday morning, when Mr. Eccles, of the Rugby police, telegraphed that the supposed victim had been discovered dancing in a fell near the railway, a few miles from Rugby, "to keep himself warm." A few hours afterwards the man himself appeared before the Liverpool stipendiary magistrate, sound and well, and without even a scratch on him. He stated that when he awoke in the morning he found himself, to his great astonishment, in a ditch at the foot of a railway embankment, without having the slightest idea how he came there. His escape, which of course gave great satisfaction to his fellow-passengers, was almost miraculous under the circumstances, as the train was going about 40 miles an hour when he fell out.

Law.

COURT OF CHANCERY (Before the Lords Justices.)—Brooke v. Lord Mostyn.—The hearing of this suit occupied the Court for several days in June last, and their lordships now delivered judgment. Sir Thomas Mostyn, who died in 1831, devised certain of his estates in Wales, which were subject to mortgages amounting to 270,000*l*., to trustees for 500 years, upon trust to raise certain legacies, one of which was a legacy of 20,000*l*. to his natural daughter, Eliza Mostyn, and subject thereto the estates were given to Lord Mostyn for his life, and to his son, the present Lord Mostyn, in tail. Eliza Mostyn, in 1840, married Captain Brooke, and the legacy of 20,000*l*. was then vested in trust for the husband and wife for their lives, and after their death for their children: the plaintiff, Charles Hyde Mostyn Brooke, being the only child. Interest was partially paid for some time on the legacies, and the legacy duty was paid; but in 1842 an application was made to the Legacy Duty Office by Lord Mostyn for a return of the legacy duty, on the ground that the personal estate and the real estate charged with the legacies were insufficient. This led to further arrangements, and an Act of Parliament was obtained for the sale of the estates; the other legatees released their legacies, and a suit of "Brooke v. Mostyn" was instituted for the payment of the 20,000*l*. legacy. A petition was presented for a compromise, and reference made to the Master to inquire whether it would be for the benefit of the infant. The Master, on evidence of the value of the estates, approved of the compromise, the terms of which were that the trustees of the settlement released the estate and accepted the bond of Lord Mostyn for 20,000*l*. in lieu thereof, the evidence laid before the Master showing that the trustees would get nothing of the legacy from the estates. The estates were afterwards sold for large sums of money, which appeared to leave a surplus. The plaintiff came of age in 1860, and instituted this suit, praying to have the compromise set aside, on the ground of fraud, and to be allowed to charge his legacy on the proceeds of the sale, Lord Mostyn's bond proving worthless. The Master of the Rolls dismissed the bill without costs, holding it doubtful whether at the time the estates would have realised enough, and holding that the compromise was proper and bonâ fide. The plaintiff appealed. The judgment of the Lord Justice Turner occupied above two hours in delivery, nearly the whole time being occupied in reading portions of the pleadings and evidence; at the conclusion of which he said that the jurisdiction of the Court to approve of compromises on behalf of infants was most beneficial, that no compromise between adults would be set aside unless fraud, by which he meant moral fraud, or concealment, was proved, and that a compromise, with the sanction of the Court, in which infants were concerned, was equally binding. Nor did the value for which the estates were ultimately sold affect the compromise, nor several other things which had been relied upon. The evidence before the Master was a valuation by a surveyor, Mr. Sisson, in which he valued the estates subject to the legacy at 151,000*l*. But there was at that time in the possession of the plaintiffs a report by Mr. Sisson, from which it appeared how he had come to this conclusion. He estimated the net rental by what it had been on the average of the last ten years, but during that time one-fourth, or sometimes one-half, had been laid out in repairs, and if these facts had been brought before the Master, no doubt he would have made a special report on the subject, or would have refused to sanction the compromise; at all events this report ought not to have been kept back. His lordship therefore thought that the decree of the Court below ought to be reversed. Lord Justice Knight Bruce concurred. The compromise must be set aside, and the plaintiff—if it would be of any use to him—must have an account of the proceeds of the sales of the estates. The decree must be very carefully drawn up, and the cause should be in the paper for December 13.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH: (Sittings in Banco, befor Justices Crompton, Mellor, and Shee.)—Fisher v. Howard.—The Bonâ fide Traveller Question.—This was an appeal against a conviction of Mr. Arnold, one of the metropolitan police magistrates, under the 2d and 3d Vict., c. 47, sec. 42, by which it was enacted that "no licensed victualler should open his house for the sale of fermented liquors on Sundays, Christmas Days, and Good Fridays, before 1 o'clock in the afternoon, except for the refreshment of travellers." It appeared that some persons were going from the Victoria station to Croydon on a Sunday. They had absolutely taken their tickets, and they then, before the train started, went into the appellant's refreshment rooms at the station, and were served with some refreshments. Mr. Arnold convicted the publican under the Act, upon which he appealed on the ground that the parties supplied with refreshments were travellers, and came within the exemption in the Act. Mr. C. Pollock now urged, on the part of the respondent, and in support of the conviction, that these persons were not travellers. The Act said nothing respecting persons being passengers by railways. Justice Crompton.—What is the meaning of the word "traveller?" When does a man become a traveller? Mr. Pollock said that according to the view of the other side a man would become a traveller as soon as he left his house. Many of the persons who kept refreshment houses were also innkeepers. If the appellant was justified in serving these parties with refreshments, any publican had a right to give refreshment to any one who alleged that he was going by a railway. A man might feel a want of something before he reached the railway station. A man might live at Highgate and might feel a necessity of tasting something soon after he started from his home. Would the publican be justified in serving him? If so, it would render the statute nugatory. The Act had no reference to railways. Justice Mellor: A man takes a railway ticket, and although he did not start at the moment, yet surely he was a traveller. Justice Crompton: When a man has taken his ticket he certainly must be considered to have become a traveller, and he might feel anxious to have a glass before starting. Mr. Pollock: I cannot say such a man is not a traveller. Justice Crompton: Some persons require more refreshment than others, and a person might like to take something before starting, fearing he might not be able to procure anything for some time afterwards. Justice Mellor: Here is a man who has taken his ticket, and just before starting felt some cause for a little fermented liquor. Surely he might take it. Mr. Pollock said: Supposing he left his chambers on a Sunday morning to go to see his aunt, who lived at Croydon, why should he go all the way to the station before he could get anything! Why might he not get it as he was walking to the station at the first public-house he came to? He thought a man was as much a traveller when he left his house as he was after he got to the station and had taken his ticket. Justice Mellor said there was reason in every case. If it was to be said that after a man had taken his ticket he was not a traveller, and could not obtain refreshments, railway travelling on Sundays might be stopped altogether. Mr. Pollock said he thought that two men walking from Highgate were as much travellers as those who were going by railway. Counsel for the appellant were not heard. Mr. Justice Crompton said the conviction must be quashed. The parties in this case were travellers in the full sense of the term. For himself, he thought a man might be considered a traveller who was going by rail before he took his ticket. Mr. Justice Mellor said the Act was for the prevention of persons going into public-houses and sitting down drinking and smoking. These cases must be decided in a great measure by common sense. Conviction quashed, and judgment given for the appellant.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.—(Sittings in Banc) before Lord Chief Justice Erle and Justices Byles and Keating.)—Taylor v. Humfreys: The Bonâ-fide Traveller Question.—The Court on Friday the 18th ult. gave judgment in this case, which was an appeal from a decision of justices. The case stated that a policeman had gone to a public-house in the village of Moseley, two miles from Birmingham, at half-past 11 o'clock on a Sunday morning in May last. The door was closed, but not fastened, and on entering he found a number of persons in the house—32 altogether, some of whom were getting bread and cheese and beer, and others beer. He accordingly laid an information against the landlord for keeping his house open during Divine service. The landlord called two of the men last admitted, and who were eating bread and cheese and drinking ale, and they proved that they were artisans, and that they had left Birmingham that morning for a walk, and had taken a walk of seven miles by the lanes and fields, and were returning home to Birmingham through Manly, and, being fatigued, and having yet two miles to walk, they demanded admission into the public-house. They were asked if they were travellers, they said they were, and were admitted, and had bread and cheese and beer. The justices were of opinion that they were not travellers, that they had stopped at a distance not near to their homes that they had ceased to be travellers, and their journey had come to an end, and that it was the same thing as if they had stopped at a public-house in their own street close to their own doors. It was contended for the respondent that they must be bonâ fide travellers; that they must be wayfarers to be entitled to admittance; that persons who merely went out for a walk, and turned into the nearest public-house were not travellers; that these men were not, and the conviction was right. For the appellant it was contended that the men had not ceased to be travellers, for they had two miles further to walk; and that the decision of the justices was not in accordance either with justice or common sense. These men were fatigued with their walk. They were artisans who, having toiled in close workshops all the week, sought a breath of country air, and being fatigued and having two miles further to go, a rest and some refreshment to them made all the difference whether the walk did them good or harm. It was therefore submitted that they were travellers within the meaning of the statute, and that the appellant really believed them to be so. Mr. Justice Byles asked whether, supposing that they were travellers and the innkeeper would not believe them not open his door to them, he was not liable to an action? Counsel for the appellant replied that he would be liable not only to an action but to an indictment also. The Court, in giving judgment, said there were a great number of persons, such as artisans, to whom Sunday was the sole opportunity of taking exercise, and these persons walking out for that purpose under the circumstances stated had certainly a right to obtain refreshment. The object of the Act was for the better observance of the Lord's day, and everybody but travellers were prevented obtaining refreshment. Persons were not to be allowed to go to publichouses for the purpose of getting drink. But all those who were abroad either for enjoyment or business, except those who went abroad for the mere purpose of getting drink, if the publican really believed them in that sense to be travellers and to require refreshment, he ought to supply them, and was not liable to the penalties of the statute. A person would not be a traveller if he went abroad solely for the purpose of drinking, and it did not signify whether a person was a stranger or an inhabitant. The Court thought the conviction wrong on the grounds stated, but, as there were other persons in the house besides those persons examined, the case was remitted back to the justices to find whether as to those persons the publican really believed them to be travellers. Conviction quashed.

Obituary.

LORD ELIOT, eldest son of the Earl of St. Germans, died at the family seat, Port Eliot, Cornwall, on the 26th ult. He was born in 1827, and was formerly in the 1st Life Guards, in which regiment he obtained the rank of captain in 1852. For some years his lordship had been an invalid, and during the fortnight had been gradually sinking. By his death his next brother, the Hon. Wm. Gordon Cornwallis, now in the diplomatic service, becomes heir apparent to the family honours.

LADY ALVANLEY died after a short illness on the 2nd inst. in her 63d year, at Thorpe Perrow Hall, Yorkshire, the seat of Mr. and Lady Augusta H. Millbank, where she had been staying since the early part of October. She was the fifth daughter of the first Duke of Cleveland, by his first marriage with Lady Katherine Powlett, the second daughter and co-heir of the sixth Duke of Bolton. Her ladyship was born in 1801, and married, 1831, Colonel the Hon Richard Pepper Arden, afterwards third and last Lord Alvanley of Alvanley. Her two brothers, the second and third Dukes of Cleveland, have died within less than 12 months.

THE DOWAGER COUNTESS OF ABINGDON died on the 26th ult. at 64, Eccleston Square. She was daughter of the late Lord Mark Kerr and the Countess of Antrim, was born in 1810, and in 1841 married, as his second wife, the fifth Earl of Abingdon, who died in 1854.

LADY DICK LAUDER died on the 22d ult. at Greenhill House, Edinburgh, in her 79th year. She was the second daughter of the late Earl of Stair, and was married to Sir John Dick Lauder, Bart.

COUNT PHILIP COLLOREDO MARQUIS OF RECANATI, Grand Master of the Knights of Malta and of the Holy Sepulchre, died a few days since at Recanati, in his 85th year. The venerable successor of Villaret, the Conqueror of Rhodes, and D'Aubusson, L'Isle Adam, and La Vallette, the defenders of Rhodes and Malta, was a link between feudal and modern Europe. He was admitted a member of the Order at Malta under the Grand Master De Rohan, whose code of laws still governs that island; and for 20 years he has been chief of the Order, which, though deprived of its dominions, still preserves the honours of sovereignty and a very large property, and has an Ambassador at several European Courts. One of the last acts of his life was to give to the beautiful church attached to the hospital of the Order in Great Ormond Street, London, a splendid altar of rosso antico, designed by an eminent Roman artist. On Tuesday Cardinal Wiseman officiated at High Mass in commemoration of the deceased Count in this church, which is a little gem of the classical style of architecture, and with the hospital adjoining was built and endowed by Sir George Bowyer, who is a Knight of the Order.

GENERAL WYNYARD, C.B., colonel of the 58th Foot, died on the 21th ult. He entered the army in 1803, served with the Grenadier Guards in Sicily from 1808 to March, 1810, when he was severely wounded at the attack on Santa Maura, for which he subsequently obtained the brevet rank of major; he was also present and on the staff with the force that occupied Ischia and Procida. He was made a Companion of the Bath in 1846, was aide-de-camp to William IV., and was appointed colonel of the 58th Regiment in 1851. He attained the rank of general in 1860.

GENERAL IRVING died on the 22d ult. at Balmae, near Kircudbright, aged 91. He was formerly a captain in the Royal Irish Artillery, and retired upon full pay when that corps was broken up. He entered the army in 1793, and attained the rank of general in 1856.

THE RIGHT REV. DR. M'NALLY, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Clogher, died at his residence in Monaghan on the 21st ult. after a painful and protracted illness.

MR HUGH ANDREW JOHNSTONE MUNRO died suddenly a few days since from disease of the heart. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and was known to artists as one of the most successful and hard-working of amateurs. He was born in 1820, and was the son of Sir Alexander Munro, of Novar, Ross-shire, and nephew of General Johnstone, of Auchin Castle, Dumfriesshire. In spite of his birth and position as one of the chief Highland proprietors, and of the ample means at his disposal, he was singularly averse to any sort of ostentation, and he lived by choice the life of an artist. His large income was devoted to the improvement of his estates, to the extension of his gallery of works of art, and to numerous acts of kindness to the class of artists for whom he had an especial regard. His studio at Hamilton Place was the resort of connoisseurs and men of letters; and there can be no doubt ...st, had he adopted art as a profession, he would have taken high rank among Royal Academicians. He leaves one sister, who inherits his magnificent gallery of pictures and estates, Isabella Margaret, who married in 1834 the Hon. Henry Butler Johnstone, brother of Lord Dunboyne, and formerly M.P. for Canterbury.

Mr. James Skene, of Rubislaw, Aberdeenshire, formerly Secretary of the Board of Trustees for Scottish Manufactures, died at Frewen Hall, Oxford, on Sunday last, in his 90th year. He was one of the earliest and most intimate friends of Sir Walter Scott, whose acquaintance he made about 1796, after his return from Saxony, whither he had gone to study German. He was called to the bar of Scotland in 1797, and his was the oldest name but one in that list, that of Lord Brougham, who was called to the bar in 1800, standing next. In 1797 also he was appointed Cornet of the Royal Edinburgh Horse Volunteers, a regiment raised mainly by the exertions of Sir Walter Scott, who filled the office of Quartermaster in it. He married a daughter of Sir William Forbes, of Pitsligo, celebrated in the history of Scottish banking, and by that lady had several children; one of his granddaughters is married to the Archbishop of York. Sir Walter Scott dedicated to him the fourth canto of "Marmion."

The Rev. George Lock, Vicar of Lee, died on the 17th ult., in his 94th year. His family long inherited Norbury Park, Surrey. He was educated at Christchurch, Oxford, and ordained deacon in 1793. After a few years' occupancy of a small family living in Somersetshire he was in 1803 inducted to the valuable living of Lee, in the gift of the Lord Chancellor, and held it up to the time of his death, thereby completing the 62d year of his incumbency. He performed duty in three parish churches on the same site, having outlived the duration of one church which was erected during his holding of the living, and which fell into decay in consequence of defective foundations. The population has grown from 300 to nearly 5000 since his appointment, and Lee has now four churches.

The Rev. Dr. Cahill, who at one time occupied a prominent position as a popular lecturer on scientific subjects, died at Boston, in the United States, on the 28th Oct. He was a politician of O'Connell principles and opinions, and established and edited in Dublin a paper called The Old Irelander; but the enterprise was not profitable, and he became embarrassed, in consequence of which he went to America, and continued up to the period of his death a popular lecturer and preacher at Boston. He was for some years Professor of Natural Philosophy in the Ecclesiastical College of Carlow.

Mr. David Roberts, R.A., fell down in a fit of apoplexy in Berners Street on Friday afternoon, and died at his house in Fitzroy Street in the same evening. He was born in Edinburgh in 1796, and began his active life as a house-painter in that city; he rose in 1822 to be a scene-painter in Drury Lane Theatre, along with another Academician, Mr. Clarkson Stanfield; and after that began to exhibit in the Royal Academy. He then travelled in Spain and in the East, and published more than one fine series of sketches, which gave him a great public reputation, and which entirely justified his election into the Academy in 1841. He was the best architectural painter that our country has yet produced, and it is hard to say whether he most excelled in rendering the solemn cathedrals of the middle ages, with their high altars and gorgeous painted windows, or the stately temples, tombs, and pyramids of antiquity. Apart from the interest which attaches to him as an artist, and which is to be measured by the amount of his actual achievements, there is another interest which belongs to his career, as one of the self-made men, who from small beginnings have fought their way upwards to fame, wealth, and station. Mr. Roberts married early in life. His wife, a person of singular beauty, though of humble birth, was the model of Mary Queen of Scots in Sir William Allan's famous picture of that unfortunate Queen landing at Leith. He leaves only one daughter, who married last year the son of Mr. E. Bicknell, the great collector, whose pictures were sold at Christie's last year.

Miscellaneous.

Egyptian Kings anterior to Moses.—About three years ago, M. Auguste Mariette discovered at Sakharah, in the necropolis of ancient Memphis, not far from the Great Pyramids, the funereal chapel of the tomb of two personages called Nekht and Tounari. These personages filled important offices in Egypt under the reign of Rhamses II.—that is, about the time when Moses lived. One of the walls of the chapel is adorned with a bas-relief, containing a hieroglyphic list of 85 medallions containing the names of kings, arranged in two lines. This list has been called the table of Sakharah and is the most important feature of the monument. M. Mariette has now, by continuing his excavations, discovered some fragments which were wanting to render it complete. Herr Dümichen has just discovered in a temple at Abydos, dedicated to Osiris by King Sethos, of the 19th dynasty, a tablet containing a list of 76 kings, from Menes to Sethos, without break or erasure. The tablet, of which fragments are in the British Museum, was, no doubt, when perfect, the counterpart of this, differing merely in carrying down the list one king further—namely, to Rhamses II., the son of Sethos, who completed the temple begun by his father. The present tablet gives many names of kings in the earlier dynasties hitherto unknown.

Exploration of the Amazon.—It appears that the Morona, a Peruvian steamer charged with the exploration of the Amazon, has arrived at the port of Mayro, only 95 leagues from the Pacific, carrying 7 feet of water to the port. She came from England, ascended the Amazon 700 leagues, the Ucayati 200 leagues, and then passed up the Pachitea, which till then had only been navigated by Indian canoes.

The Lost Othona.—For several months past works of reclamation have been carried on on the Essex coast, at St. Peter's Head, in the parish of Bradwell, during which traces of Roman buildings have been discovered, comprising portions of a wall of great strength, consisting of regular ashlar, alternating with rows of bonding tiles. In the field where the excavations have been made stands the little Norman chapel—now a barn—of St. Peter's-on-the-Wall, built of Roman materials, and this fact, coupled with the notices of Ithancester (Othona) of mediæval writers, leads to the inference that this is the lost Othona of the Notitia, one of the nine stations of the Fortenses, who, in the decline of the Roman power in Britain, were charged with the protection of this part of the coast against the piratical Saxons. In the immediate vicinity the spade has turned up several skeletons of mediæval interment, and numerous vestiges of Roman occupation, consisting of quantities of Samian and Caistor ware, glass beads, and coins of the Lower Empire.

Discovery of an Ancient British City near Edinburgh.—A few months ago a large number of stone coffins were discovered near the "Cat-stane," about six miles from Edinburgh, by Mr. Hutchison, of Carlowrie. The same gentleman has since discovered the remains of an ancient British town on the western side of Craigiehill, about a mile distant from the former relics, on the Linlithgow side of the Almond River. Many years ago, when cutting a road through Craigiehill, between Kirkliston and Cramond, the workmen came upon a stone kist, the end of which is still to be seen projecting from the bank over the carriage way. Several attempts have been made by archæologists to unravel the mystery of this kist, but without effect. Some time ago Professor Simpson thought he had observed on the hill indications of an ancient British city; and recently he wrote to Mr. Hutchison on the matter, requesting him to obtain permission from the proprietor of the hill, Mr. Hope Vere, to make explorations. This permission was readily granted, and a few weeks since Mr. Hutchison on examining the hill came upon traces of three walls or ramparts enclosing a space near the western top of the hill, upon which were numerous raised circular rings of stones, apparently the foundations of British houses. Professor Simpson, accompanied by Dr. Macbean and Mr. Hutchison, subsequently made a more systematic investigation, which exposed portions of the faces of the three lines of walls, one of the raised circles inside, and a gate which had formed one of the entrances to the encampment. The ramparts are arranged in a fortified manner, as parallels, and towards that part of the hill from which alone any attack could be made, the other sides presenting natural barriers which, in those times, no invading force could have hoped to overcome. Excavations were made behind the old stone kist, which seems to have been placed just outside the city walls, but nothing of interest was found there.

Iron Fortifications.—A few days after the arrival of General Todleben in London, the directors of the Millwall Ironworks Company invited a large number of military and scientific gentlemen to visit their premises at Millwall to view a three-gun wrought-iron shield which they had completed to the order of the Russian Government, for the defence of Cronstadt. There were present, among others, General George, C.B., General Elias, General Lefroy, Admiral Collinson, Colonel Willmott, Colonel Campbell, Colonel Atchinson, Colonel Haggarton, Colonel Harness, Major Fenwick, Major Millward, Major Field, Commodore Stewart, Captain Sir J. Hay, Captain Chads, Captain Hall, Captain Sherard Osborn, Hon. Captain Egerton, Captain Harrison, Captain Heath, Captain Galton, Dr. Percy, Mr. Reed, Chief Constructor of the Navy; Mr. Tucke, chief inspecting officer of the Admiralty; Mr. Baskcombe, practical instructor of shipbuilding at South Kensington; Le Comte de Vandine, Hon. A. Kinnaird, M.P.; Mr. Leicester O'Beirne, Mr. Bessemer, &c. The shield in question is constructed on the system of fortification patented by Messrs. Hughes & Lancaster. It is 43 feet 6 inches long by 10 feet in height, and is composed of wrought-iron bars, of a size hitherto unattempted in "grooved rolls," 12 inches by 12 inches rolled with a "rebate" and corresponding hollows on the opposite sides strengthened by dovetailed ribs at their back, 3 inches in thickness, which are attached by keys or wedges in dovetailed holes to upright beams or girders, 14 inches by 14 inches, on each side of the embrasures and at the ends, and in two equal divisions of its length, to four frames or brackets like the letter A, with one vertical side. The foundation plate on which the whole structure stands, is 43 feet 6 inches long, 2 feet wide, and 3½ inches thick, rolled in one length. The total weight of the shield is about 140 tons. Each embrasure is 4 feet from the platform, and 4 feet high. In the throat it is 2 feet 2 inches in width, or, with the shelving of the cheeks, 2 feet 9 inches. The military advantages of such an opening in an iron parapet of 15 inches thickness is that the guns can be worked so as to take a greater sweep of range than is possible where the parapet is of masonry. In point of strength, an inch thickness of iron is equal to one foot thickness of stonework, so that the power of a resistance of the shield in question is equivalent to that of a wall 15 feet thick. As a matter of experiment it is to be put upon the parapet of one of the outer ports at Cronstadt, but should it be found to answer the expectations of General Todleben it will itself take the place of the parapet, the whole metal platform being fastened by clamps and rivets into the granite rampart. The piece of work excited general admiration. The visitors also saw a 6-inch plate rolled for the defence of a ship's side, of which the Company is at present executing a large order for the Russian Government.

BRITISH WOOLS.—London, Dec. 1.

We have had a brisk demand for most descriptions of wool, but especially long wool, and at a considerable advance up to the end of last week, but this week a halt has taken place, and we expect a calm for the remainder of the year.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Nov. 28.

The supply of Beasts is very much smaller than for a long time past. Good qualities are readily disposed of at high prices. In a few instances even last quotations are exceeded. All kinds are dearer. The number of Sheep is also small, and prices are higher. A good clearance is effected. Good Calves are scarce and dear. From Germany and Holland there are 850 Beasts, 600 Sheep, 68 Calves, and 95 Pigs; from Scotland, 100 Beasts; from Ireland, 500; and 2000 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Dec. 1.

The supply of Beasts is again short. The demand is active, and Monday's quotations are readily obtained. The number of Sheep is considerably larger than on Thursday last, yet it is not excessive. Trade is not quite so brisk, but there is no quotable reduction in price. Calves are more plentiful; there is, however, a demand for them. Our foreign supply consists of 1067 Beasts, 240 Sheep, 287 Calves, and 140 Pigs.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Nov. 28.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and met a slow sale at last week's quotations, the greater part not being disposed of towards the close of the market. The attendance was limited, and foreign Wheat neglected, the sale being confined to retail purchasers on late terms. Barley of all descriptions was difficult of sale at last week's rates. Beans and Peas were unaltered in value. The arrivals of Oats being very short, the trade was firm, and Russians brought rather more money. Flour was steady at late prices.

FRIDAY, Dec. 2.

The weather since the 25th has been wet, with gales from the S. and S.W.; yesterday and to-day fine. We have to report a continuance of the dull inactive trade which characterised the business in Wheat since so long a time, but as there is a serious falling off in arrivals from abroad at our English ports, late rates have been maintained. Barley prices still tend downwards. Beans remain as last quoted, but Peas were the turn cheaper in some markets. Oats met a better inquiry, and old sweet boiled parcels have improved in value; Russians have advanced 6d. to 1s. per qr. from the lowest point. Flour remained unaltered. Since Friday last 22 vessels have been reported off the coast. The arrivals continuing to be very small, and there being only very little demand for all descriptions of grain, the floating trade has been inactive, and we cannot quote any alteration in prices. Paris, Dec. 1.—Flour has remained dull and unaltered in value. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. 3d. per 196 lb. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 71,000 cwt. There is still little doing in Wheat, and 9d. per quarter lower rates have been accepted in some instances. The arrivals of Wheat this week, both English and foreign, have been to a fair extent, also of Barley, and small of Oats and Flour. The attendance was very limited, as was also the business transacted. Wheat, both English and foreign, may be quoted the same as on Monday. Barley, Beans, and Peas were a dull sale. Monday's currency for Oats is fully supported.

LIVERPOOL: Nov. 29.—We have not had a large attendance at our corn exchange this morning, and the demand for Wheat has been only of a moderate character; prices, however, are fully as high as last market day, and in some instances even rather higher. Flour has improved 6d. per barrel and sack, and there is some business passing in French for shipment early next year. Indian Corn is offered sparingly to-day, and Danubian finding rather more inquiry, holders advanced their pretensions 6d. per qr.; no change in American. Oats a shade dearer, but Oatmeal being in better supply shows no alteration in value. Beans, Peas, and Barley are each slow of sale at our quotations. Market closes remarkably firm.

FRIDAY, Dec. 2.—Market very moderately attended. Wheat in consumptive demand at full rates. Flour in fair inquiry without change in value. Indian Corn 6d. dearer for Galatz. Mixed American unchanged. Beans, Oats, and Oatmeal steady.

News of the Week.

ADVICES from New Zealand confirm the telegraphic announcement received a fortnight since through Australia that the hope of a permanent peace with the Maories may be considered at an end. The 200 Waikato prisoners who escaped from the island of Kawau, near Auckland, on the 12th September have entrenched themselves in a strong pah in an almost inaccessible position in the northern part of the island, which has hitherto remained at peace. They have there been supplied with firearms and provisions, and it is feared that the neighbouring tribes which have heretofore taken no part in the hostilities will be induced to join them. From Tauranga, also, where peace was supposed to have been established by the last victory, the Maories who declined to join in the submission of the others have built a large work near the site of the Gate Pah, and have stopped the surveyors in measuring the confiscated lands on the highway to the Waikato district. Two pahs have been captured and destroyed by the troops in Taranaki, but the real campaign in that province has not yet commenced. This unsatisfactory state of affairs has been complicated by a dispute between the Governor and the Ministry on the policy and conduct of the war. The Ministry, it appears, required that the Maories should be required to give up their arms and sufficient land to enable the colony to keep faith with the military settlers. Sir GEORGE GREY refused both requests, and the Ministry thereupon resigned. The Governor, however, refused to accept their resignations, and it is understood that the Ministers have consented to retain office until the meeting of the Assembly.

A despatch from Madrid announces the resignation of the Narvaez Ministry, caused, it is said, by the resolution of the English Government to recognise the insurgents of San Domingo as belligerents, in pursuance of the reservation expressed by England when the island was annexed to Spain. The Spanish Cabinet accordingly decided on the abandonment of San Domingo, but the QUEEN refused her consent, whereupon the Ministers tendered their resignations.

The long debate in the Italian Senate on the Bill for the transfer of the capital was brought to a conclusion on Friday, when the Bill was adopted by a majority of 87, the numbers being 134 to 47. The Bill received the Royal assent on Monday, and on the following day the Minister of Finance announced that the transfer of the capital will be carried out in the course of next May. A Royal decree has since been issued sanctioning the Convention of the 15th September.

Accounts from Constantinople state that the Porte has accepted the proposition which it had previously refused for the appointment of a commission by the great Powers, to place the police of the Danube under international control. A convention has been signed between the Porte and Persia for a new Indian telegraph line.

From the United States we learn that General SHERMAN, after having been repulsed in his first attempt to cross the Oconnee River, has succeeded in crossing it with his main army, and avoiding Macon, Augusta and all the other large towns against which he was supposed to be marching, is making his way to the sea at Beaufort. He is still however 100 miles distant from the coast, and is harassed on all sides by the Confederates, who are rapidly concentrating their forces around him. General HOOD attacked the Federal army at Franklin, in Tennessee, on the 30th ult., scaled their works, and captured some guns and prisoners. General SCHOFIELD, the Federal Commander, was subsequently reinforced and recovered the ground, but nevertheless evacuated the position on the same night, and retired on Nashville, a distance of 30 miles, closely followed by General HOOD. The two armies are now facing each other before Nashville, and a great battle is considered imminent. General GRANT has made a cavalry reconnaissance of the Confederate position, and is supposed by the Richmond papers to be preparing an early demonstration against General LEE, who was never, they say, so well prepared to receive him as he is now. The Confederate Congress has unanimously rejected the peace propositions of the Washington Cabinet. Admiral PORTER announces that the Confederate cruiser Florida has been "accidentally" run down and sunk in Hampton Roads, with all her guns on board, by a Federal transport.

THE COURT.—The Queen and Royal family are, according to the latest arrangements, expected to leave Windsor Castle to-day for Osborne, where the Court will probably remain for about eight weeks. On Saturday morning the Queen walked and drove in the grounds, accompanied by Princess Helena. Princess Louisa took a carriage drive. The Archbishop of Canterbury arrived at the Castle on a visit. On Sunday morning the Queen, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service in the private chapel. The Rev. W. R. Jolley read the prayers, and the Archbishop of Canterbury preached the sermon. On Monday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, walked in the grounds. Princess Helena rode in the Riding School, and Princess Louisa went out driving. Prince Leopold went by the South-Western Railway to Richmond, and visited Lady Bowater at Richmond Park. The Archbishop of Canterbury left the Castle. On Tuesday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Louisa, walked and drove in the grounds. Princess Helena rode in the Home Park, and Princess Beatrice went out walking. Princess Louisa drove out. Prince Arthur and Countess Blucher arrived at the Castle on a visit. On Wednesday morning the Queen, accompanied by the Royal family, went to the Royal Mausoleum at Frogmore, and remained there some time. Her Majesty passed the day in complete retirement. On Thursday morning Prince Arthur left the Castle for Greenwich Park. The Queen walked and drove in the grounds. Princess Helena rode in the Home Park, and Princess Beatrice went out walking.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE PRINCE CONSORT'S DEATH.—Wednesday being the third anniversary of the death of the Prince Consort, the day was observed with much solemnity at Windsor. About half-past 11 in the morning the Queen, accompanied by the younger members of the Royal family, attired in deep mourning, repaired to the Mausoleum in the grounds of Frogmore House, where the remains of the late Prince are interred. The Mausoleum, which is a building of noble proportions, and is adorned with costly stones and marble, is approached by a flight of steps furnished with stone balustrading. At the top of the steps is an open portico, within which is a door, having over it a coat of arms and the monogram "V.A." entwined on each side of it. Beneath the coat of arms is a brass tablet, with a raised Latin inscription, recording the death of the Prince, while the roof of the portico is decorated with Venetian mosaics, representing a blue sky with golden stars and other ornaments. The interior of the Mausoleum contains the tomb of the Prince, the body being interred at present in a temporary sarcophagus till the building is finished, when it will be placed in the granite sarcophagus lately received from Scotland. On the tomb, which is approched by a flight of steps at the foot, lies the recumbent effigy of the Prince, while two small portable flights of steps covered with black cloth are placed on each side of the tomb near the head. Above all is a carved wooden canopy, which on Wednesday, together with the tomb itself, was hung with wreaths and garlands, immortelles, white azaleas, and evergreens, while a heap of wreaths of immortelles was lying at the foot of the tomb, near which was a burning lamp, for the purpose of throwing light on the objects near at hand. Choice exotics were also disposed around the interior, giving it a very beautiful appearance, although yet in an unfinished state. By the permission of her Majesty the servants of the Royal Household and the Queen's tradesmen, with their families, were allowed to visit the Mausoleum between the hours of 12 and 3, and, accordingly, some hundreds availed themselves of the privilege, and during the time set apart for the admission a constant stream of visitors passed through the upper part of the Long Walk to the Frogmore grounds, on their way to the tomb. The public were rigorously excluded, the Mausoleum and its approaches being strictly guarded by the Royal Household police, who were instructed to refuse the very numerous and constant applications for admittance to the grounds.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.—The Prince of Wales and his distinguished visitors have been shooting on various parts of the estate since the last reports were published. On Saturday Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, Prince Teck, the Earl of Sefton, the Marquis of Hartington, M.P., Colonel Bailey, and Admiral Seymour left Sandringham. On Sunday the Prince and Princess attended Divine Service at Sandringham Church. The Rev. P. B. Moxon officiated and preached. On Monday Colonel the Hon. H. Percy left Sandringham. The Prince and Princess will pay a visit of two or three days to the Earl and Countess of Leicester, at Holkham, about the 2d of January.—The wedding present from the people of Victoria to the Princess of Wales, the result of a shilling subscription, comes home by the Black wall clipper Monarch, which sailed on the 22d October." It consists of a flower vase, of which the following is a description. From a stand, composed of polished blackwood from Mount Macedon, rises a rockwork of quartz specimens streaked with gold obtained from Wood's Point, Castlemaine, and Tarnagulla, and bright black nubbly antimony from Costerfield. Supported by this is a base of St. Arnaud silver, exhibiting specimens of the Australian fauna and flora. From the centre of the group spring two golden stems of the oak, symbolising England and Denmark; and the tree fern, representing Victoria. The whole is surmounted by a fluted silver bowl for flowers, round the border of which are grapes and frosted vine-leaves. The cost is 300 guineas.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—It is understood that Parliament will meet on the 7th February for the despatch of business. Mr. Davenport Bromley was elected for North Warwickshire on Tuesday without opposition. Messrs. Labouchere and Flower are candidates for Windsor in the Liberal interest, in opposition to the two sitting members, Mr. Vansittart and Colonel Vyse.

ORDER OF THE STAR OF INDIA.—The Queen has appointed his Highness Furzund Dilbund Rasekhul Itgad Dowlut-i-Englishia Rajah Rajegan Rajah Rundheer Sing, Bahadoor of Kuppoorthulla, and his Highness Maharajah Rugbeo Raj Sing, Bahadoor of Rewah, to be Knights of the Star of India.

THE CASE OF BISHOP COLENSO.—The appeal of Dr. Colenso against the decision of his Metropolitan, the Bishop of Cape Town, depriving him of his see of Natal, and prohibiting him from "the exercise of any Divine office within the metropolitan province of Cape Town," because of the views promulgated by him in certain works which he has published, came on for hearing on Wednesday morning before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The members of the Council present were the Lord Chancellor, Lord Cranworth, Lord Kingsdown, Dr. Lushington, and the Master of the Rolls. Mr. W. James, Q.C., of the Chancery bar, Mr. Fitzjames Stephen, Mr. Westlake, and Mr. E. Charles appeared for the appellant; Sir Hugh Cairns, the Queen's Advocate, and Mr. Badeley for the Bishop of Cape Town. Bishop Colenso in his appeal not only prays for a reversal of the sentence of deposition pronounced upon him by Dr. Gray, the Bishop of Cape Town, on the 16th December last, but also denies the validity of that sentence and the jurisdiction on which it purports to be founded. On this ground he prays Her Majesty, through the Judicial Committee, to declare that the Letters Patent under which he holds his episcopate, constitute an indefeasible title until they shall be recalled for some legal cause of forfeiture, and that the Letters Patent by virtue of which the Bishop of Cape Town claims to have acted were unduly obtained from Her Majesty, and cannot, for other reasons, affect his own rights. Should the opinion of the Court be adverse to him on this point, he further prays that his petition may be heard by way of appeal from the sentence of which he complains, and thereby raises another issue on the question of jurisdiction, inasmuch as the Bishop of Cape Town recognises no appeal from his own Court except to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and, in conceding that, affects to waive "any real or supposed rights of this Church." The Bishop of Cape Town in fact appears "under protest," denying that her Majesty in Council has any jurisdiction in the subject-matter of the said petition, or that any appeal lies from what he has done in the matter of the complaint of the Right Rev. Dr. Colenso, either to her Majesty in Council or to the Judicial Committee, and concluding by stating various reasons why, Dr. Colenso not having availed himself of the liberty of appeal to the Archbishop of Canterbury, as provided, his appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council should not be allowed. The Judicial Committee, therefore, have first to decide whether or not all the proceedings at Cape Town in December last were null and void, and, secondly, whether or not the Royal supremacy, in its most important function, extends to the Colonies. Until the first of these questions shall be determined in the negative, and the second in the affirmative, the Judicial Committee cannot proceed to entertain the merits of the cause. Mr. W. M. James opened the case on the part of the appellant, Dr. Colenso, and occupied nearly the whole day with an argument to prove that Bishop Gray has no legal authority over Dr. Colenso, and that the Court ought to annul the sentence. Mr. F. Stephen followed on the same side, and had not concluded when the Court rose. On Thursday Mr. Stephen entered into an elaborate argument to prove that the powers granted to the Bishop of Cape Town in his letters patent were null and void, beyond the constitutional powers of the Sovereign to grant, and therefore of no effect in law. The Queen's Advocate was then heard for the Bishop of Cape Town, and continued his argument till the Court rose. Yesterday the Queen's Advocate resumed his address, and contended that the Metropolitan had a right to deprive, and that the Metropolitan constituted the court; that Bishop Colenso had solemnly accepted his appointment subject to the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Cape Town, and was by every consideration bound by the Metropolitan jurisdiction. Sir H. Cairns followed on the same side, and had not concluded when the Court rose.

THE CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.—The Lords of the Treasury have issued a minute directing that Monday, the 26th inst., shall be observed as a holiday at the Custom House, the Inland Revenue Office, the Post Office, and generally in all places that are under Government control. They have also given notice to the Bank of England to pay all bills accepted by the Paymaster General on the 24th if they are presented for payment on that day, but at the same time add that if they are presented on the 26th they must be then paid. The day cannot therefore be observed as a general holiday at the Bank of England, and the same reasons will operate with regard to all other banks.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor, the Empress, and the Prince Imperial returned to Paris on Wednesday. A Cabinet Council was held at the Tuileries on Thursday. The Moniteur of Wednesday publishes the Treaty of Commerce concluded between France and Switzerland. An Imperial decree orders that from the 1st of January next the transfer dues imposed by the law of 1857 on foreign companies shall be levied upon half the capital represented by shares, and upon the whole amount of obligations. The funeral of M. Mocquard took place on Monday. A large body of Ministers and persons of note were present. Marshal Vaillant pronounced a funeral oration over the grave, in which he recalled the fidelity of M. Mocquard to the Emperor. He said that he had come to bring the last farewell of the Sovereign from whom the deceased had so lately received a last embrace. M. de La Guéronnière also made a speech, in which he paid a tribute to M. Mocquard in the name of the Senate and the Press. A remarkable character recently died in Paris, the dwarf Richebourg, who, though not quite so celebrated as "General Tom Thumb," was an historical personage. Richebourg, who was only 60 centimetres high, was in his 16th year placed in the household of the Duchess of Orleans, the mother of King Louis Philippe. He was often made useful for the transmission of despatches. He was dressed up as a baby, and important State papers were placed in his clothes, and thus he was able to effect a communication between Paris and the emigrés, which could hardly have taken place by any other means. The most suspicious of sans culottes never took it into his head to stop a nurse with a baby in her arms. For the last 30 years he lived in Paris in one of the houses in the remotest part of the Faubourg St. Germain. He had a morbid dread of appearing in public, and it is recorded that during this long period he never put his foot outside the house. He received from the Orleans family a pension of 3000f. per annum. He had attained the ripe age of 92. The Constitutionnel of Friday contains an article, signed by M. Limayrac, on the connection between Tunis and Turkey, of which the following is a summary:—

"It reverts to the declaration of France that she would not permit any change in the nature of the relations between the Bey and the Sultan, and would oppose the establishment of Turkish domination over any part of Tunisian territory. The journey of the Tunisian Envoy, Kaireddine, to Constantinople, was declared by the Bey and the Divan to be a visit of pure courtesy. If, however, he had the mission of modifying the present conditions of sovereignty in the Regency, it was [illegible] both at Constantinople and Tunis, how France would [illegible] such a pretension."

The steamship Louisiane has arrived at St. Nazaire from Mexico with 5,000,000f., 2,000,000f. of which are on account of the French Government. The English steamer Iowa, of 1700 tons, which sailed from Havre on Wednesday week for New York, ran ashore during the night at Omonville, near Cherbourg. The crew and passengers were saved.

SPAIN.—A Council of Ministers was held on Friday night, and terminated at about 1 A.M. on Saturday, after which Señor Llorente, Minister of State, presented his resignation. Señor Antonio Benavides was subsequently appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs in place of Señor Llorente, and took the oath of allegiance to the Queen. The entire Ministry has since resigned. The Noticias of Wednesday says that it has been officially announced that the English Government intend to recognise the insurgents of San Domingo as belligerents, the Ministers resolved to tender their resignation. The Epoca of Wednesday says that the Council of Ministers had unanimously decided to announce the abandonment of San Domingo in the Speech from the Throne, but the Queen having refused her assent to this resolution a Ministerial crisis took place. The resolution of England to recognise the rebels as belligerents was in pursuance of the reservation expressed by her at the time of the annexation of the island to Spain. This course was adopted by England on account of the Spanish blockade of San Domingo having been declared ineffectual. The Government has reinforced the Pacific squadron by sending out the iron-clad frigate Numancia, just finished in France.

PORTUGAL.—A telegram from Lisbon, dated the 12th inst., announces that the Minister of Marine had resigned. It was also asserted that a similar step had been taken by the Minister of Public Works.

SWITZERLAND.—The following decree has been issued by the Swiss Federal Assembly:—

"Considering the petitions of a large number of Swiss citizens domiciled at Trieste, Smyrna, and St. Petersburg and the message of the Federal Council of the 25th November 1864, the Federal Assembly of the Swiss Confederation decrees —1. The Federal Council is authorised to permit the use on sea of the Swiss flag for Swiss vessels; 2. Until an [illegible] decision of the Federal Assembly, the Federal Council [illegible] receives full powers to adopt the necessary measures for the execution of the present decree."

The opening of the Assizes in Geneva took place on Tuesday, in the presence of a large crowd of people. The families of the persons who were killed during the late disturbances demanded permission to put forward claims for indemnity, which was granted by the jury.

DENMARK.—King Christian, in his reply to the deputation of North Schleswigers who recently visited him at Kolding, said that he most deeply regretted the separation of Schleswig from Denmark, but that, having once ceded that province, he hoped that the Schleswigers would be reasonable, and submit to their fate with patience. Prior to their reception by his Majesty the members of the deputation laid aside the Danish colours they were wearing, as the King would only receive them as Schleswigers.

THE DUCHIES.—It has recently been announced that Prussia has put forth a formal claim to the succession of the Duchies, on the ground that the King of Prussia is a descendant of the Princess Elizabeth, daughter of King John I. of Denmark, who was married in 1500 to Joachim I., Elector of Brandenburg. It is stated that on the occasion of that marriage it had been stipulated that, if King John remained without any male descendant, the succession in the Duchies should be open to the children of his daughter Elizabeth. Those stipulations have never been executed, but the fact that the descendants of the Elector Joachim have not maintained the rights which were secured to them, is said to prove nothing against the validity of those provisions. The Austrian journals oppose this argument with the greatest energy; they allow that they did not at first regard the affair in a serious light, but now that the rights of the House of Hohenzollern have been seriously brought forward in the settlement of the succession of the Duchies, they endeavour to prove that those pretended claims are only a "juridical curiosity." The New Free Press of Vienna is of opinion that if the result of a marriage contracted 364 years ago between an Elector of Brandenburg and a Danish Princess be brought forward, pretensions much better founded than those of Prussia may be raised. It therefore considers it a duty to establish that the rights of the daughter of Christian II., successor of John I., take precedence of those of the children of Elizabeth, his sister. The daughter, the Princess Christina, who married Francis of Lorraine, is the mother and grandmother of all the Princes of the House of Austria. The latter must therefore, it says, come before the House of Prussia.

PRUSSIA.—The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia, who have been residing in Switzerland for some time, arrived at Carlsruhe on Saturday on a visit to the Grand Duke and Duchess of Baden. The Kreuz Zeitung announces that the Prussian Government will no longer content itself with taking measures against the journals which publish letters hostile to Prussia, but will also attack the correspondents themselves. A statistical return states that there were killed in Berlin, from the 1st October, 1863, to the 1st October, 1864, 1552 horses, the flesh of which was sold for food at 25c. and 30c. the pound.

AUSTRIA.—In the Lower House of the Reichsrath on Tuesday, it was determined to continue the increased taxation until the end of March, 1865. A petition of General Langiewicz was laid before the Chamber by Dr. Reichauer, in which the petitioner requested to be set at liberty. The Marquis de Lisboa has arrived at Vienna from Brazil, to formally solicit the consent of Duke Augustus of Saxe-Coburg to the marriage of the young Prince of Saxe-Coburg Gotha to the Princess Leopoldine of Brazil. On the return of the marquis to Brazil the marriage will be celebrated in that capital.

VENETIA.—The Garibaldian bands of Friuli have been entirely dispersed, and the Austrian Lieutenant at Venetia has proclaimed the cessation of martial law.

ITALY.—In the sitting of the Italian Senate on Friday the Bill for the transfer of the capital to Florence was passed by 134 against 47 votes. Two members abstained from voting. The Royal assent has since been given to the Bill, and from the date of that assent the two years within which the French will evacuate Rome, will be calculated. The Official Gazette of Thursday publishes the law for the transfer of the capital, countersigned by all the Ministers. The same paper contains a Royal decree sanctioning the convention of the 15th September. In the sitting of Tuesday the Minister of Finance said that Parliament would probably continue its sittings during the first two months of 1865, and then adjourn for a considerable time to allow of the transfer of the capital. This measure would be carried out in the course of next May. It is said that the successive recall of the French army of occupation from Rome is to commence at the end of January. It is asserted that a plot has been discovered at Rome against the life of the Pope, Cardinal Antonelli, and the ex-King of Naples. The conspirators are said to be three brothers from Ferrara, who dressed exactly alike, and were so much like each other that one could easily be mistaken for the other. Arms and letters compromising several high personages are said to have been discovered at their lodgings. It is positively stated that the Pope will hold no Consistory at Christmas, as was expected. It is also asserted that the Pope had determined to send a passport to Baron Meyendorff, the Russian Minister at Rome, but afterwards relinquished his intention. It is said, however, that Baron Meyendorff will not in future be received at the Vatican. A French court martial has passed sentence of death upon a Neapolitan named Graziani for the murder of two French gendarmes. The environs of Bologna have been inundated by the overflowing of the rivers in the vicinity of that town.

FRANCE.—The King took the oath to the new constitution on the 28th ult. The Bishop of Athens recited the customary prayers, and one of the secretaries presented to his Majesty the formula of the oath. The King then rose, and placing his hand on the Book of the Evangelists, took the following oath:—"I swear in the name of the Holy, Consubstantial, and Indivisible Trinity, that I will protect the dominant religion of the Hellenes; that I will watch over the constitution and the laws of the Greek people; and that I will preserve and protect the national independence and the integrity of the Greek kingdom." His Majesty pronounced the oath in Greek, and in a strong, firm voice, distinctly heard in every part of the chamber. A salute of 101 guns announced to the public that the ceremony had taken place. His Majesty then returned to the palace amidst the acclamations of the people.

TURKEY.—A Convention has been signed between the Porte and Persia for an Indian telegraph line. The service will soon open. The Porte has accepted the proposition previously refused for the appointment of a commission by the great Powers to place the police of the Danube under international control.

WEST COAST OF AFRICA.—The Governor of Cape Coast Castle has levied a tax upon licences for the sale of spirits, &c., to assist in meeting the heavy expenses incurred during the Ashantee War. On the 21st October her Majesty's ship Investigator arrived from a cruise of 400 miles up the Niger, bringing highly satisfactory reports as to the resources of the river for trade. Dr. Baikie, who has established a native colony and has resided for some years in the interior, returned by her. He purposes proceeding to England by next steamer.

JAPAN.—Advices from Japan state that the late fight at Shimonosaki has had the happiest effect upon the Daimios, and that the representatives of the European Powers have been received at Jeddo by the Grand Council of the Empire, who gave them complete satisfaction. The silk trade is to be freed from all restrictions, and the territory of the Prince of Nagato having been confiscated by the Tycoon, the latter will pay the indemnity demanded by the European Powers. It is said that the Prince of Nagato has been stripped by the Mikado of all his titles.

AUSTRALIA.—The dispute between Victoria and New South Wales on the question of border customs is as far from adjustment as ever, and custom-houses and officers still guard both sides of the Murray river. Meetings have been held in various parts of the colony to protest against the continuance of transportation to Australia, and in each case a petition to the Queen on the subject has been unanimously adopted. The people of Albany, Western Australia, have resolved to co-operate with the eastern colonies in the matter; and the Adelaide Parliament have adopted a bill which is a copy of the Victorian Act, and is intended to prevent the landing in South Australia of all liberated convicts whose sentences have not expired for at least three years.

POLYNESIA.—Bishop Patteson's mission party were savagely attacked at a village of Santa Cruz island by the natives. Two young men were killed and one wounded. The bishop escaped unhurt. The French have taken possession of the three islands of the Loyalty group, as dependencies on New Caledonia, and have sent out Catholic missionaries to convert the natives, many of whom had already been converted to the Protestant faith by the missionaries of the London Missionary Society.

NEW ZEALAND.—The hopes of permanent peace with the natives of New Zealand have been abruptly dispelled. The dearly-bought victory at Rangariri, it will be remembered, left 200 prisoners in our possession. For several months these men were lodged on a hulk named the Marion, lying in the Waitemata, off Auckland. Unused to confinement, however, they suffered in health, and on this account Sir George Grey gave up to them a little island—his own property—termed Kawau, lying 20 miles from Auckland. This island, upon which Sir George Grey has a comfortable establishment, and which he uses for acclimatisation experiments, lies two miles off the main land. The breadth of water was considered a sufficient guarantee against any attempt at escape, and the prisoners were left to wander about the island under the surveillance of a chaplain, an interpreter, a surgeon, and a warder. One Sunday morning, however, it was discovered that they had left the island, taking with them everything they could carry. Subsequent information showed that during the night they took to the boats with their spades, and using these implements as paddles easily succeeded, all but two, in reaching the opposite coast. These two happened to be left behind; but when the alarm had been given and men-of-war brought up, they actually contrived to slip into another boat and follow their comrades under the very eyes of the authorities. The fugitives proceeded to the northern part of the island, which has hitherto remained in peace, the tribes having taken no part in the hostilities one way or the other; but there is reason to fear that this unfortunate incident may precipitate a struggle. Not only have the escaped prisoners been allowed to build a strong intrenched pah in an almost inaccessible position termed the Great Maha, but they have been supplied with firearms and provisions. An interpreter, who was despatched to invite them back to custody, at first found them open to terms, and it was thought that they would evacuate their position on a promise of 4000 acres of desirable land to be assigned them in settlement. Subsequently, however, they thought better of their opportunity, and "resolutely refused to do anything else but remain where they were." One of the leading chiefs of the northern tribes has publicly said that the Waikatos are not to be interfered with, but are to be left "to work their own deliverance," that is, they are to be left to defy the Government, and to live by plundering the settlers of their cattle. It is feared that some of the tribes may be induced to join the Waikatos, and it is now anxiously remembered that there are at least 14,000 defenceless men, women, and children in the district north of Auckland, and two millions worth of property. The news from Tauranga, where it was hoped that the last victory, and subsequent submission, had established peace, is not satisfactory. A number of natives, who declined from the first to come in, have built a large work near the site of the disastrous Gate Pah, and have stopped the surveyors in measuring the confiscated lands at Te Puna, which is on the highway to the Waikato district. A force of 300 men, under Colonel Warre, was despatched against two rebel pahs at Matahani and Mataitawa, in the Taranaki province, which they captured and destroyed. The only casualty to our force was one private wounded; the rebels had one man killed. To add to the complications, disputes have arisen between Sir George Grey and the Fox Ministry, who having pledged themselves to thoroughly suppress the native outbreak, have been unable, since the receipt of Mr. Cardwell's last dispatches, to work cordially with the Governor, and have tendered their resignations. Sir George, however, has declined to accept them, and it is understood that the Ministry will continue in office until the meeting of the Legislature.

UNITED STATES.—Richmond papers of the 29th ult. assert that General Sherman was baffled in his attempt to penetrate Georgia. He neither captured Macon nor threatened Augusta, and for a whole week was unable to advance 10 miles, being harassed on his flank and rear, manfully resisted in front, and forced to avoid all important towns. Augusta papers of the 26th state that he was repulsed in crossing the Oconnee River, but General Grant has reported to Mr. Stanton that his main army has since crossed that river, and is now en route for the sea coast, leaving Augusta behind. His advance cavalry endeavoured to open communication with Beaufort, but were intercepted near Savannah River, and the whole force either killed, captured, or driven back. It is reported that the two columns of Sherman's army are endeavouring to form a junction. The Richmond papers say that Sherman is still 100 miles from the sea, and harassed on all sides. Five thousand negroes are working on the defences of Augusta. Generals Beauregard and Johnston were in Augusta on the 23d, and General Bragg has left Wilmington for the same city, where a heavy Confederate force is concentrating from all quarters. It is reported that Burnside has sailed from Fort Monroe with 20,000 men to meet Sherman. A battle took place on the 30th ult. at Franklin, between a portion of Thomas's and Hood's armies. The Confederates drove the Federals back and scaled their works, capturing guns and prisoners. The Federals were subsequently reinforced and recovered their ground, but evacuated their position the same night, and retired on Nashville, a distance of 30 miles. The Confederates crossed Harpeth River next morning at the fords near Franklin, and were confronting Thomas on the 4th inst. The Federals claim the capture of 1000 prisoners in the battle at Franklin, and estimate the Confederate killed and wounded at from 3000 to 6000, among whom were Generals Clewburn and Wirt Adams; they state their own entire loss at less than 1000. Thomas's army was in line of battle about Nashville throughout the 4th. Skirmishing was continuous and severe, but there is as yet no announcement of the expected general engagement. Administration journals admit that if Hood decides not to attack Thomas in his present strongly fortified position, there is no material obstacle to prevent his uniting with Breckenridge, destroying the communication of Chattanooga and Knoxville, invading Kentucky, or of establishing permanent communication with General Lee. The retreat of Thomas for 29 miles, after the battle at Franklin, is now pronounced a piece of strategy. The Federals have evacuated Columbia, removing their wounded to Nashville, where great excitement prevails. The latest advices from the Army of the Potomac report that heavy artillery and musketry firing was heard early on the 29th ult. on the north side of James River, in the vicinity of Dutch Gap. The gunboats were also supposed to be engaged; but no particulars had been received up to the sailing of the mail boat. General Grant despatched Gregg's cavalry on the 1st on a reconnaissance to ascertain if Lee was sending troops south. Gregg captured and destroyed Stoney Creek Station and a quantity of stores, and afterwards retreated, followed by the Confederates, towards the Federal camp. He obtained no information of troops passing southward. The Florida has been "accidentally" run into by a Federal transport off Fort Munroe. She was badly damaged, and sank with all her guns on board in nine fathoms of water. The New York World thinks the pretence of accident too shallow to deceive any one, but adds that it is possible the Government had no complicity in the transaction. Mayor Gunther has recommended the Common Council to offer a reward of 25,000 dollars for the detection and legal conviction of the New York incendiaries, and the Association of Proprietors has offered 20,000 dollars for the same object. General Dixon, in an order dated the 26th, declares that if they are detected and convicted they shall be executed without a day's delay. The examination of the persons suspected of firing the hotels was commenced on the 2d inst. by a military commission. Publication of the proceedings is for the present prohibited. Mr. Seward has refused to present the British peace address to Mr. Lincoln. The Confederate Congress has unanimously rejected the proposition of pacific measures on the basis of the recognition of State rights, and the original statutes of slavery. Resolutions have been submitted in the Confederate Congress to the effect that the South would, if shortly recognised by the North, unite with the North in maintaining the Monroe doctrine. If recognition was delayed, the South would abandon the Monroe doctrine in exchange for material advantages for herself. The Confederates are constructing formidable defensive works at Alexandria, Louisiana, rendering it impossible for the Union gunboats to ascend Red River. The Confederate Governor of the State has organised 10 regiments of negro troops at Shreveport, where they are engaged at present in strengthening the defences of the place, but are regularly drilled and disciplined. Governor Allen was endeavouring to induce the Confederate Government to incorporate them into the army. Captain Semmes, of Alabama notoriety, arrived at Bagdad, Mexico, on the 15th October, on his way to Richmond viâ Matamoras. The Chickamauga has arrived at Wilmington, after a slight brush with the blockaders, and the Tallahassee was safely in that port, and was to leave in a few days with a cargo of cotton for Bermuda.

CANADA.—The Canadian Government has refused the request of the St. Alban's raiders to refer to Richmond for evidence of their connection with the Confederate Government.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—Since the arrival of the Hon. Admiral Denman to take command of the squadron in the Pacific, Esquimalt has been made the chief naval station in lieu of Valparaiso. All ships of war, previous to their return to England, will therefore return to Vancouver Island.

MEXICO.—Advices from Mexico, published in the New York papers, state that on the 18th ult. the French landed troops at Mazatlan, and took possession of the town, which had been evacuated on the previous night. Alvarez had defeated the Imperial forces, and was marching on Acapulco.

SAN DOMINGO.—Advices from San Domingo report that successes have been gained by the native forces over the Spanish troops.

THE THAMES EMBANKMENT.—At a meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works on Friday, Mr. Samuda called attention to the fact that No. 1 contract of the Thames Embankment between Westminster and Waterloo Bridges, in the hands of Mr. Furness, was proceeding at a rate which would require eight years for its completion, instead of two years and a-half in which the contractor was bound to complete the task. A letter was read from Mr. Furness, making various excuses for the slow progress hitherto made, but they failed to satisfy the Board; and it was unanimously resolved that it be referred to the Main Drainage Committee to investigate the matter, and report what steps ought to be taken in consequence of the delay.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—The trustees of the British Museum, in consequence of Christmas Day falling on Sunday, have granted the employés in that institution a holiday on Monday, the 2d of January, instead of Monday, the 26th inst. By this arrangement the public will not be deprived of the opportunity of visiting the Museum. On the last occasion of Christmas Day falling on Sunday the persons who visited the Museum on the day following exceeded 20,000.

DESTRUCTION OF THE EXHIBITION BUILDING.—On Monday the complete demolition of the grand entrance to the Great Exhibition Building in the Cromwell Road was accomplished by the Royal Engineers and Sappers and Miners, under Lieut. Knocker, in the presence of General Sir J. Burgoyne, Lord Mountcharles, the Marquis of Salisbury, Sir Charles Forbes, Col. Chapman, Captain Fowke, and a larger crowd of spectators than on any previous occasion. The grand entrance, it will be remembered, was a structure of great magnitude and strength, consisting of three arches, and containing a total amount of between 5000 and 6000 tons of masonry, 150 feet in length by 63 in height. There were 110 charges or chambers, containing a total force of 180 lb. of gunpowder, for the purpose of displacing at one discharge this formidable mass of material. When the bugle sounded the three batteries were fired, and almost instantaneously the structure crumbled down from crown to base, amid the cheering of the spectators, falling entirely within the enclosure, and without scattering any of the bricks or débris in the adjoining road, or near the neighbouring houses, which were crowded with spectators. The entire space will now be cleared and railed in, until it is determined what form the new museum on its site is to assume.

THE NAVAL MODELS.—The collection of models of naval architecture which has hitherto been deposited in Somerset House has been removed to the South Kensington Museum, until suitable premises are built. It will be opened to the public for the first time, without restriction, on the 19th inst. The series begins with the "Great Harry," of Henry VII.'s time, and is continued to the iron ships now building both in her Majesty's dockyards and private yards.

THE WESTMINSTER PLAY.—The Phormio of Terence was performed on Thursday evening by the senior pupils at Westminster School, when the theatre was crowded by old Westminster scholars and the friends of the students; the slips being filled with ladies. The epilogue contained some humorous allusions to street music, Mr. Bass and his Bill, Mr. Babbage and the German bands, the Civil Service examinations, amateur naturalists, the aquarium mania, and other topics of the day.

UTILISATION OF SEWAGE.—On Saturday a deputation of gentlemen, including the chief corporate officers and other gentlemen of Birmingham, Nottingham, Derby, Wolverhampton, Coventry, Preston, and Bath, arrived in town to present to Sir George Grey a memorial of the Council of the Borough of Birmingham adopted for that purpose, praying for the introduction of a public general Bill for the utilisation of sewage, and for preventing the pollution of rivers and streams. Previous to proceeding to the Home Office, they held a meeting at the Westminster Palace Hotel, for the purpose of discussing the question and coming to such resolutions as would enable them to offer Sir G. Grey some practical suggestions as to what was best to be done. Mr. Henry Higgins was called to the chair, and pointed out how necessary it was for them to have some definite proposal to make when they wished the Government to bring in a Bill to meet their wants. The Bill that they must ask for must be a general one, that would meet the requirements of all places, and he thought it would be the best way to give Sir G. Grey a general outline of what they wanted, and leave the Government to deal with the details. Alderman Madeley thought that large towns ought not to be allowed to pollute the streams and rivers, but that the sewage should be put upon the land. All the members of Parliament considered it a very important, but at the same time a very delicate, question to deal with. He thought all they would be able to do that morning would be to pass a resolution to affirm the desirability of something being done, but not to come to a resolution to support the report of the Town Council. Mr. Heron, town-clerk of Manchester, said they had not pure streams in Manchester, but, for all that, he did not think the present system of water closets was the best mode of dealing with the question. There had been a host of proposals put before the Town Council of Manchester, and it was considered that they ought to adopt one of them. With regard to the evidence taken before Select Committees of the House of Commons, he said the fault was that no practical man had been examined before them, and the only result of their inquiry was that they recommended that something should be done, but did not say what; and it was only when they came to frame a Bill that they would find the great difficulties they had to contend against. He believed that it would be impossible for them to have anything but a permissive Bill. If a compulsory Bill were to be proposed in Parliament, the very corporations which were there that day would rise up and oppose the imposition of a duty which would entail upon them considerable cost and difficulty. Therefore he was satisfied that nothing but a permissive Bill would be tolerated in Parliament. Mr. Bass called attention to the last Agricultural Society's meeting at Brighton, where a gentleman who farmed extensively and used to cart the soil in its solid state, said that he had been compelled to give it up since it had become diluted with water. Mr. Standbridge said that if they could get the power they wanted there would be no necessity for them to attempt to separate the solid part of the manure from the liquid, as they could get it all used. It would be impossible for them to return to the old system, for it would cause the demolition of a great part of Birmingham, and would besides seriously affect the manufacturing interests, as they must have a sewer for the drainage of the manufactories. Mr. Page said that a gentleman he knew had done away with water-closets in houses on his property, and resorted to the old system. The result had been that he could let the houses at 3*d.*, and in some cases 6*d.* per week cheaper, and, as an agriculturist, he found the value of having the manure in the state in which it ought to be brought on the ground, instead of having it spoiled by being diluted with water. The memorial, as he read it, was not to compel any town to adopt it, but give them power, where there was a river of water, they thought it desirable to preserve the power to purchase land, the same as railways did, for the purpose of providing for the sewage without letting it go into the river. Mr. Sadler said that if there was not a single water-closet in Birmingham the stuff that flowed into the river from the manufactories would be so bad that no fish would live within miles of it. They wished to have the permissive power given to the governing local bodies to deal with the question in their own localities. He thought that if the Government declined to give them local powers to purchase or lease land, and to cede the sewage to persons who would carry it to the land, and to take advantage of every circumstance that would facilitate that object, it ought to take the matter into its own hands, and construct carriers to convey the sewage from all the large towns to the country, where it could be utilised, and not allow it to go into any of the rivers in the kingdom. The town of Birmingham had grown so largely that the sewage discharged into the River Tame had increased from 10,000,000 to 15,000,000 gallons per day, and that was still further augmented by numerous little townships that were springing up in the vicinity of Birmingham. He suggested that the sewage should be taken to districts where it could be spread over the land, and the towns and townships should pay a rate towards the expense according to their population. The Birmingham deputation had invited the other gentlemen to join them not in going for anything special, but for something general. The Chairman thought the time had arrived when the Government ought to give to local governing bodies the power to deal with their sewage. Mr. Beale said it was very desirable to know if the sewage was as valuable dry as it was in a liquid state, because the process of drying was very simple. Mr. Bass said that was not the question; they had not met to discuss the chemical properties of manure, but to try and get Sir George Grey to include in a Bill power to compel those townships which might afterwards come into the system of sewage they might adopt to pay their quota of the expense of making the sewers. Alderman

Bath thought they ought to come to an unanimous opinion as to what they ought to ask Sir G. Grey. They ought to confine themselves to elementary principles, and by that means he would be able to understand what they wanted, and be more likely to bring in a Bill that would be suitable for all the country, instead of for individual towns. Whatever might be their opinion with regard to watercloset, it was certain they must have liquid sewage to deal with, and they must not let it go into their streams and rivers. He therefore thought it would be desirable they should agree upon some principle to lay before Sir George Grey for a Bill that would be suitable to all towns in the country. The Chairman said that by way of bringing the matter to a practical shape he would move the following resolution :—

"That in the opinion of this meeting it is absolutely necessary that a Bill should be introduced into Parliament in the present session by her Majesty's Government, to enable local authorities to deal with and utilise the sewage of their towns and districts so as to prevent the pollution of rivers and streams."

Mr. Page seconded the motion, and thought the Government would pay great deference to the opinion of so high an authority as Professor Liebig. The Mayor of Bath said the case of Birmingham was totally different from that of Bath. The latter was situated in a rich valley, and could not adopt a system of sewage such as that suggested in the memorial. Nevertheless, the Corporation of Bath would give the meeting all the co-operation and support in its power. The resolution was then put and carried unanimously. The meeting then broke up, and proceeded to the official residence of Sir George Grey, where they were met by Mr. Scholefield, M.P., who introduced the deputation. The interview having commenced with the reading of the preceding resolution, a long conversation ensued between the Home Secretary and the deputation, on the defects in their existing powers which the corporations complained of, and the powers they wanted to gain. The deputation stated in effect that they wanted a more extended outfall; to have the means of distributing the sewage in the cheapest manner possible; to have the power to carry it along turnpike roads; to be protected from responsibility in the case of smaller towns in the watershed polluting the rivers; to have power to act independently or collectively along the whole line of the watershed for the distribution of the sewage over the land, and also to sell the sewage to a company if it should be thought desirable to do so; to have power to cross rivers, and purchase such lands as might be necessary to distribute the sewage; to have power to compel parishes or private individuals to let them cross their land on giving compensation, and also to compel parishes to join in the expense of getting rid of their sewage.—Sir G. Grey in reply said that he had better have a case stated. The subject was a very important one, and had been under the consideration of the Government, but what he wanted was to have some practical suggestions as to the remedy which they asked.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—By an order of the Lord Chancellor, dated the 3d inst., and to take effect from the 11th proximo, Mr. Mansfield Parkyns, the official assignee of the Court of Bankruptcy for the Exeter District, is transferred to the Court of Bankruptcy in London, and appointed an official assignee of the London Court, to act in the room of Mr. Cannan, one of the official assignees in the London Court, who has resigned his office. Mr. Theophilus Carrick, one of the official assignees for the Leeds District, is transferred to the Exeter Court, in the room of Mr. Parkyns; and Mr. George Young, one of the official assignees for the Leeds District, in addition to being appointed official assignee at Leeds, is also appointed official assignee at Hull and Sheffield.

THE LATE MURDER OF MR. BRIGGS.—The statement that Matthews has received the reward of 300*l.* offered for the conviction of Muller is contradicted. It is said that the railway company and the bank have handed over their respective sums to Sir Richard Mayne, and when Government add their portion, the question of how the money shall be divided will then come under consideration. It is said, however, that it will be equally divided between Mr. Death, Matthews, and the two Repsches.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended on Saturday the 10th inst. were 1522. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 years 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1467. The present return is therefore 55 over the average. During the week the births of 1020 boys and 941 girls, in all 1961 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1886.

BRADFORD.—A Reform meeting was held in St. George's Hall on the 8th inst., and was attended by Sir F. Crossley, Bart., M.P.; Mr. Stansfeld, M.P.; Mr. Baines, M.P.; Mr. Forster, M.P.; and reformers from all parts of the West Riding. Mr. Forster, M.P., was called to the chair, and spoke as follows :—

"The necessity for reform was as great now as when the present Parliament was elected, and the demand for it was equally urgent. He admitted that he did not expect an extension of the franchise would be obtained from the present Parliament, and he urged the working classes to take measures to make their opinions known when the House of Commons was dissolved. The present feeling as to reform was not so strong as at the passing of the last Reform Bill, or even at the time of the Chartist agitation; but there was still so much feeling in the large towns and amongst prominent leading men of the Liberal party, that he would venture to prophecy, that when the dissolution of Parliament took place, the Liberal members would be just as much pledged to reform as they were at the last dissolution. The question, therefore, was—were those pledges to be taken seriously? In fact, would it not be dangerous if those pledges were to be trifled with by the next Parliament, as they had been by the present Parliament? If Parliament admitted that changes were required, and they trifled with them as they had done in times past, he considered that it would be destructive to political morality, dangerous to Parliament, and the least evil would be, that it would be utterly destructive, for many years, of the Liberal party. Although he was not so sanguine as to expect reform at the hands of Lord Palmerston, he looked forward to the future that lay before Mr. Gladstone, who felt that he had responsibilities, and if the people did their duty would not forsake them. Looking at the position in which they stood, he believed that it was more hopeful than was generally supposed. At the next dissolution the Liberal party would be again pledged to the reform measure. If they found themselves in opposition, they would be bound to bring the matter forward with a determination to carry it, and if they were in power they would have to stake that power upon its adoption. He believed that the country would have a Reform Bill, and he agreed with Mr. Leatham, that the danger was not so much that they should have no reform, but that the Reform Bill would be a bad one. He hoped that the working men would keep themselves informed of what was going on. He directed them to study a work recently written by Earl Grey, and called attention to the writer's comments on the representation of minorities, which he said would give enormous power to men with crotchets; and as to plurality voting, which was one of the subjects Lord Grey dwelt upon, he thought it required little time to form an opinion on a course so contrary to every principle of representative government. Sir F. Crossley moved the first resolution as follows :—"That the present state of Parliamentary representation, excluding as it does a majority of the people from any share in self-government, is most unsatisfactory and unjust." The hon. baronet advocated an extension of the franchise and vote by ballot, and combated the objections which were urged against those measures.—Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., seconded the resolution. After noticing the failure of the reform measures of the Conservatives, and of the Liberal measure introduced at the opening of the present Parliament, he said there were many reasons which induced him to imagine that the question of reform could hardly fail to be seriously raised in the next Parliament. Pledges would be again invited; but he conjured them, in fairness to their representatives, to invite no such pledge unless they were prepared to support those of whom they asked that pledge. He trusted, too, that, warned by the past, no candidate would accept such pledge, unless, as far as in him lay, he was prepared to insist that his party should redeem it. There had been a fault in the out of doors agitation upon reform which it was necessary to avoid in the future. It had been treated sentimentally rather than in practical earnest. Discussions had been held as to whether they should start with the principle of a compromise; and if a compromise, what compromise; and then, but too often, experience had shown them that a programme at length accepted had been as far as all practical labour was concerned, allowed to fall to the ground. In his judgment such discussions continued too long were worse than a waste of time. Let every man, let every association of men, declare with the utmost of freedom the utmost extent of their wishes; but let them, at the same time they spoke openly and thought freely, show that they possessed judgment and common sense. Let them recognise the fact that reform which was not revolutionary was necessarily progressive and gradual, and that whatever their opinion might be, there must inevitably be a compromise—a poor and a worthless compromise if they refused to assist in the work, but a substantial measure of reform, though still a compromise, if they put their shoulders to the wheel. He noticed a fear of being swamped by the extension of the franchise among those who possessed the monopoly of political power, a disposition to put off the evil day when they must share it with the working classes. They should have no difficulty in dealing with the fear. No reasonable man desired reform of such a nature that its consequence should be that the whole legislation and administration of the country should take its tone from what might be called the working classes' opinion alone. There was not the remotest chance of any measure being even introduced into the House in which such a danger would lurk. He was quite sure Mr. Baines would have no difficulty in proving the innocence of his progeny of any such design, and yet such a measure, should it be forthcoming, would be worthy of their support. If they gained a footing within the pale of the franchise, they became a part of the body politic; their political life might be said to have commenced; and the future would depend entirely on the use they made of the vantage ground they would have gained. Not only would such a measure be worthy of them, but it would require their earnest support if they were to overcome the disinclination of which he had spoken. The public must supply the breeze to fill the sails, and they alone could supply that motive power. It would be a discredit to our statesmanship if the present state of affairs could any longer remain. The present franchise stopped just where a class began; and though the present temper of society was to tone down and obliterate those lines of demarcation, the effect of the present state of affairs was to perpetuate it. He was tired of hearing the praises of the Lancashire operatives sounded by men who did not seem inclined to carry them to their logical results. He had read with great pleasure the thoughtful speech of Sir James Kay-Shuttleworth on the progress of the working classes. One reading such a speech as a page of history, might well expect that the next page would be a record of the admission of such men to take their share in the rights and duties of statesmanship. It was not because of any misgovernment that he would demand reform. He did not mean to say that there was not always plenty for the reformer to do, but that was not the true or the logical ground upon which to base their demand for reform. He would ask for reform because of that progress which had rendered it inevitable, and which proved it to be safe, and all the more safe, and all the more likely to fructify to the advantage of the country if it was willingly accorded. There were statesmen who feared this progress, who called it democracy, and who would seek to stem its tide; but that democracy alone was dangerous which was a reaction against gross misgovernment, and which had its stormy birth in days of ignorance, bigotry, and oppressive rule. In the progress which they desired there was no such danger. There was nothing which they should anticipate in that but increased stability to the institutions of the country—a new power and added lustre to our national life—and above all, and more than ever before, a re-knitting together of the bonds which bind class with class, till the lines of demarcation between them shall be lost in the harmony of the constitutional edifice. There were statesmen, also, who trusted and did not fear. There were those who had faith in their countrymen, and in the destinies of their country. Let them trust those who trusted and they would not be deceived; and when they asked for reform, let them ask for it recognising all the merits and the benefits of the present and the past; let them ask for it as a right, for it was a right let them ask for it also as a duty; let them make their claim to the right of fulfilling all the duties of statesmanship in a great and free, and orderly community, and their claim would be heard. The times were ripening for that event. Its advent was accepted in principle by the intelligence of the country, and it needed but one thing more to secure its realisation, and that one thing was their labour and their will. The resolution was passed amid general acclamation.—Mr. Baines, M.P., moved "That further delay in remedying this injustice, after it had been repeatedly admitted in speeches from the throne and by the leaders of both parties, would be derogatory to the character of Parliament, and destructive to political morality." He showed that all parties, and both Houses of Parliament, were pledged to an extension of the franchise, and he urged that an effort should be made to compel them to redeem that pledge by the introduction of a measure in the next session, which, being the last session of Parliament, was the most favourable for the consideration of such a subject. The first session of a new Parliament was in many respects the worst, as the passing of the measure would necessarily cause a dissolution, and compel many members to pay over again what in fact was the price they had paid for their seats. He thought they would be successful. He had obtained last session 240 votes (including pairs) for the second reading of his Bill, and he was below Mr. Locke King. Yet the success of a private member was not so great as that of a Government might be expected to be, for many refused to vote for such a measure unless as a Government measure. He called upon Mr. Gladstone to lead the Liberal party in passing the measure of reform next session. He replied to the argument that the working classes were indirectly represented by suggesting "turn and turn about." The working classes should get the direct, the upper classes the indirect, representation. As to alleged ignorance of the working classes, it was impossible they could make grosser blunders than had been committed by the upper and middle classes when they upheld the corn and navigation laws, and other restrictions upon commerce and industry. He believed the enlargement of the representation would improve the character of the House. Faith, he agreed with Mr. Stansfeld, was an important element in politics as well as in religion, and he had faith in the working classes.—Mr. R. Kell seconded the motion, which was adopted; and on the motion of Alderman Godwin, seconded by Mr. Councillor Whitehead, and supported by Mr. Alfred Illingworth, the following resolution was adopted :—"That it is necessary reformers throughout the country should co-operate with energy in order to induce the Government and Parliament to settle satisfactorily the reform question. This meeting, therefore, rejoices in the establishment of the National Reform Union for that object, and promises to that organisation its hearty support."

KENDAL.—On Saturday night the 8th inst., Mr. Henry Kirkby, of Underbarrow, and Mr. Robert Dacre, of Lyth, left this town to return home, after attending the market. Both resided on the other side of the steep limestone ridge, known as Scout Scar and Cunswick Scar, which separates Kendal from the valley of Crosthwaite, Lyth, and Underbarrow. They were well-to-do farmers, living on their own estates. The night was dark and stormy, and floods were out in all directions on the low-lying lands below the Scar. Mr. Kirkby however, never reached that point. He was found on the following morning lying dead near a limekiln not many hundred yards distant from Kendal, having apparently been killed by a fall from the top of the kiln. It is supposed that he and his companion had been taking a short cut from the end of the town into the Underbarrow Road. This path traverses the quarries and the ground where the limekilns are situated, and it is probable that Mr. Kirkby mistook his way in the dark. Mr. Dacre was last heard of at the Punch Bowl Inn, Underbarrow, about a mile and a half from his own house. He stated there that he had lost Mr. Kirkby, he did not know how, and was urged not to go forward, as the mosses, across which a portion of his road lay, were flooded. He, however, declined this advice, and has not since been heard of. There is no doubt that he was drowned on the moss, and it is thought that his body has been carried by the swollen stream of the Underbarrow pool and river Gilpin past his own house to the sea at Milnthorpe sands, in Morecambe Bay.

LIVERPOOL.—There is every reason to believe that the ship Floating Light, from Bombay to Liverpool, has foundered in St. George's Channel, with a cargo valued at upwards of 200 000*l.* She was a large Quebec-built ship, of 1400 tons, and belonged to Messrs. Kennedy, of Liverpool. She sailed from Bombay on the 26th August with a crew of between 30 and 40. Her cargo comprised 5300 bales of cotton, averaging in value about 30*l.* a bale, 673 bales of jute, 28 tons of cocoa-nut fibre rope, and 90 tons of linseed. She was due, but no apprehensions for her safety were entertained until the 8th inst., when a seaman's chest was washed ashore on the Pembroke coast, with several bales of cotton and other articles which have been identified as belonging to the Floating Light. A piece of a ship's quarter with the name in gilt letters has since been washed ashore. It is therefore believed that the ship has either foundered or been wrecked in the Channel during the recent heavy weather. Nothing has been heard of the crew, and the worst fears are entertained as to their fate.

MOLD.—A dreadful colliery accident took place on Thursday morning, at the works of Messrs. Craig, Taylor, and Craig, Leeswood Green Colliery, near Mold, whereby nine men lost their lives. The cause of the accident is attributed to water rushing into the pit where the men were working from an old pit adjoining.

SHIELDS.—The Court of Inquiry respecting the loss of the Stanley steamer, have acquitted Captain Howling, and declared him entitled to renewal of his certificate. The Court considered that the absence of leading lights, and other circumstances over which he had no control, led to the catastrophe.

SOUTHPORT.—The Rev. C. Hesketh, rector of North Meols, has given 30 acres of land to the town of South-part, for the purpose of forming a public park. The plot is situated on the north-east side of the town, and is considered admirably adapted for the purpose.

WINDSOR.—On Saturday a large portion of the mosaics intended for the decoration of the interior of the Wolsey Chapel arrived at Windsor Castle. They consist of a number of designs, manufactured by Dr. Salviati, at Venice, from drawings by Messrs. Clayton & Bell, and will be placed in the borders on each side of the eight windows, which will eventually be filled with stained glass. The decorations on the west wall of the chapel will be of the richest description of mosaic work; and the 28 panels between the carved stone-work of the wall will be inlaid, it is understood, with figures of the Sovereigns of England, executed from cartoons by Messrs. Clayton & Bell, while the whole work will be surrounded by a golden border, ornamented with red roses. The walls beneath the north and south windows are to be covered with pictures in marble inlay work by Baron Triqueti. The entire work is to be executed at the cost of the children of the Queen, as a memorial of the Prince Consort.

THE EDINBURGH PRINCE CONSORT MEMORIAL.—It is understood that the Council of the Architectural Institute of Scotland are of opinion that the proposal for the erection of the Prince Consort Memorial on Arthur's Seat should not be entertained.

SUSPECTED MURDER IN COLDSTREAM.—On Monday week the wife of a man named Alexander Thomson was found lying dead in the house occupied by them. The deceased was severely cut about the head, and her arms and other parts of her person were a mass of bruises. The room and bed were saturated with blood, and there were other indications of a violent struggle having ensued. The husband said that he and his wife had quarrelled during the night, and that she had seized the poker and he the tongs, and that they had struck each other. A slight cut was found on his head, and the poker and tongs were smeared with blood. A strong cord was also found tied about deceased's leg. The man was taken into custody, and the sheriff substitute and procurator fiscal are investigating the occurrence, which has created a great sensation in the neighbourhood.

THE SCOTTISH CENTRAL.—It is stated that the directors of the Scottish Central have given orders for fitting up some of their first-class carriages with plate-glass panes between the different compartments.

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE BORDER COUNTIES.—On Saturday an accident occurred on the Border Counties line at Falstone Station, causing the death of two men. At Falstone the single line of rails begins, and the speed of all trains passing the station is reduced to four miles an hour, in order to allow the driver to receive the train-staff. The train to which the accident happened was loaded with coal, and had just passed the station at a low rate of speed, when the engine jumped off the rails, and sank about 2 feet into the ground between the main line and a siding. The tender was twisted round at right angles with the engine, and the driver and stoker were killed on the spot. The line having become blocked by the coal trucks, the whole of the trains over the Waverley route on Saturday were delayed.

Law.

COURT OF DIVORCE.—Stone v. Stone and Appleton.—The only decision of Mr. Justice Cresswell that ever was reversed was in this case, which was a suit brought by Captain Stone against his wife and her medical attendant, who absconded at the commencement of the action. The jury in the first trial in 1863, returned a verdict for the petitioner, with damages against the co-respondent at 2000*l*., but the full court ordered a new trial contrary to Mr Justice Cresswell's opinion. The second trial terminated on Thursday, when the jury reversed the decision of their predecessors, and found for the respondent. As the co-respondent, Mr. Appleton, did not make his appearance, having absconded, it was said, for debt, the judge informed the jury that, though they had found the lady innocent, they must find the gentleman guilty and assess him in damages. The jury at first refused to give damages against him, but on the Judge telling them that they must assess some damages, as he had admitted his guilt by not appearing, they awarded damages of one farthing.

HOME CIRCUIT: CHELMSFORD.—The Murder on Chadwell Heath.—Frances Blunt, alias Toddy, 44, a great hulking fellow, 6 feet high, with deformed feet, was charged upon an indictment, and also on the coroner's inquisition, with the Wilful Murder of Amelia Blunt, on the 24th September, by cutting her throat. This case was fully noticed at the time of the murder in our Provincial news, and it will be remembered that the prisoner and deceased had once cohabited together, but the woman left him on account of his cruelty, and went to live in an old man's cottage on the heath, whose son proposed to marry her, and the banns had been duly published. The prisoner, who had often threatened her for leaving him, called at the cottage at a time when the woman was alone in the cottage washing, and there cut her throat, leaving her hanging over the wash-tub as if still alive. In that position she was found by the old man when he returned to the cottage. The evidence against the prisoner was very conclusive, and the jury returned a verdict of Guilty. Baron Channell then addressed the prisoner, and said: You have been found, after a most careful trial, guilty of wilful murder, and I entirely concur in the verdict of the jury. Upon the facts they could come to no other conclusion, and your life is forfeited. The law will be more merciful, however, to you than you were to your victim, for you will have time to repent, which you denied to her. My duty is to pass upon you the sentence of the law. His lordship then passed sentence of Death in the usual form. The prisoner did not exhibit the slightest emotion during any period of the trial, and when the judge had concluded he turned round and walked deliberately away from the bar. The trial lasted nearly seven hours. Attempted Murder.—Henry Augustus Munns was convicted of wounding a young woman, named Charlotte Turner, in a transport of jealousy, with intent to do her grievous bodily harm, and was sentenced to 10 years' penal servitude. HERTFORD.—The Highway Robbery at Brickenden bury.—George Savage, a young man, described as a bricklayer, of Yardley, was indicted for the murderous attack on Mr. Joseph Barker, farmer, on the 29th October. The details of this case were given last week in our Provincial news, and the facts as there stated were fully proved. When the jury were considering their verdict, one of them turned round and asked whether, if the prisoner was convicted, he would suffer death? Baron Channel: You have no right, sir, to ask that question. Several of the jury desired it to be understood that they had not wished it to be asked. The juror said he alone wished to ask it. The Judge: Sir, you ought, when you are in the jury-box, to deliver your judgment according to the evidence. You are responsible upon the oath you have taken, for finding a true verdict according to the evidence, leaving the law to take its course. In this particular case, however,—that there may be no unfounded notion in the mind of any one of you—I may tell you that though it was a capital offence not long ago, it is so no longer. But I do not approve the question being asked. The Juror: I thank you, my lord. But Lord Brougham— The Judge: Pray, sir, apply your mind to the discharge of your duty.—The jury then turned round in the box, and in a few moments returned a verdict of Guilty of the whole charge. It was then proved that the prisoner in 1859 was convicted of burglary, and sentenced to four years' penal servitude. In answer to the Judge, it was stated that it was not known whether he had served his full time, but it had expired. The Judge then proceeded to pass sentence upon the prisoner as follows:—You have been convicted of wounding with intent to murder, and the jury have shown that they were well aware of the atrocity of the offence. The evidence was so clear and conclusive that I can conceive of no reasonable doubt; and I rejoice that the jury, doing their duty to their country and the law, have not shrunk from giving the verdict which the evidence appeared to require, leaving the consequences to the law. Until a short time ago the offence of which you have been convicted was punishable with death. That is not so now. But, looking at the wicked and atrocious nature of the attack which you made upon the life of this old man, and also considering that this is not your first offence, but that you have been already convicted of a felony with violence, the sentence of the Court is that you be kept in penal servitude for the term of 20 years." The impression produced by this sentence upon the crowded audience was certainly not that it was too severe. On the prisoner it produced no impression beyond exciting his rage, and with a fierce look and in an insolent tone he said, "Ah! I shall be back before long!" Attempted Murder at Watford.—Thomas Fountain, 26, formerly in the Royal Marines, was charged with feloniously and maliciously assaulting and wounding Mary Stone, with intent to murder her. The circumstances under which this charge was preferred were of a rather remarkable character. The prosecutrix was a respectable young woman, in the service of Mr. Coles, a stockbroker, residing at Notting Hill, but at the time of the occurrence she had gone to assist the family of her brother, who had taken a farm called Bushey Lodge Farm, in the neighbourhood of Watford. On the afternoon of Oct. 3 the prosecutrix had been sent to Watford on an errand. On returning home between 5 and 6 o'clock in the evening she found herself seized by the shoulders by the prisoner, who tore off her bonnet, and, without saying a word, drew a large clasp knife across the right side of her neck, close to her jaw, thereby inflicting a wound 5 inches long. She screamed, and the prisoner then put his fingers into her mouth to prevent her from making a noise, and upon her putting up her hand and laying hold of the knife to endeavour to protect herself the prisoner drew the blade through her fingers, and cut two or three of them severely, and he then inflicted a second wound on the left side of the neck of the prosecutrix. Happily at this moment a cart, in which Mr. Thurlow, a farmer living near the spot, and his wife, were returning home from Watford, was heard approaching, and the prisoner jumped over a hedge and made off. On Mr. Thurlow coming up to the prosecutrix she was found to be in a terrible condition, almost covered with blood, and nearly fainting, and with the assistance of other persons who came up she was removed to Bushey Lodge Farm, when a surgeon was sent for to examine her, and it appeared by his evidence that, if the wounds on the neck had been a little deeper it would have inevitably caused almost instantaneous death, as one of the principal arteries would have been severed. After the prisoner had committed the outrage he ran across a number of fields, pursued by several persons, and, in his way, he swam, or waded through, the River Colne, and was at length taken into custody while endeavouring to conceal himself under a hedge. On the route he had taken there were picked up the hat of the prisoner, and also a large clasp knife, such as is used by sailors, which was covered with blood, and there was no doubt that it was with this weapon that the injuries had been inflicted upon the prosecutrix. The defence was that the prisoner had formerly been in the Royal Marines and had received some injury in the head, in consequence of which he was discharged with a pension, and on the day in question he had been to Watford to receive his pension, and had got drunk and was robbed, and, meeting with the prosecutrix, he was under the delusion that she was the person who had robbed him, and this induced him to attack her in the manner described. There was no attempt at robbery, and the prisoner's conduct could not be accounted for in any other manner. The jury, after a short consultation, found the prisoner Guilty of wounding the prosecutrix, with intent to do her grievous bodily harm. Mr. Baron Channell, in passing sentence, said he regretted to see a man, who appeared by the papers before him to have been in her Majesty's service and to have been discharged with a good character, standing at the bar to receive judgment for such an offence as this. There was no doubt that the act had been committed through his giving way to habits of intoxication, which at the moment had deprived him of self-control; but it was equally clear that he had no malice against the prosecutrix, and that the act was not committed with the intention to rob her, or anything of that sort. The offence, however, was still a most serious one, and he felt himself compelled, by his duty to the public, to pass a sentence of penal servitude, but under all the circumstances, it should be for the shortest period allowed by law, which was five years.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT: YORK.—Child Murder near Howden.—Alice Wilson, 25, was charged with the wilful murder of Thomas Wilson, her infant son, nine months old, at Booth, near Howden, on November 12. The prisoner was a married woman, and had two children, the issue of that marriage. The eldest was a boy, who died, and the other, who still survived, was a girl of three years. The prisoner was deserted by her husband in 1862, and she then went to service. In February or March of the present year she returned to her mother's house at Booth, near Howden. She was then in the family way, and gave birth to the child who formed the subject of the present inquiry. As soon as the prisoner was in a fit state to be removed, she, with her two children, the girl and the newly-born infant, went to the Howden Union, and from thence was removed to the workhouse at Beverley. She remained there until November 11, on which day, which was a Friday, she left with her children, the girl and the deceased. At that time the child was suffering from scrofulous or scorbutic eruptions. On leaving Beverley Workhouse, the prisoner went to Snaith, and there remained all night. On the following morning she left that place with her children, and went by the carrier's waggon to Howden. A passenger, Mrs. Gibson, entered the carrier's conveyance in the course of the journey, and then saw the prisoner with her two children, the youngest of whom, deceased, she was suckling at the breast. Mrs. Gibson had some conversation with the prisoner, and said that she was going to attend the statute at Howden on the following Tuesday for the purpose of being engaged as a farm servant, and that then she should put her two children to nurse. Mrs. Gibson told the prisoner she would not be able to maintain her children, and received no reply to this observation. The prisoner arrived at Howden at half-past 12 o'clock, and left the carrier's cart without paying her fare. She stated that her mother lived at Howden, and that she would go to her and get the money for her fare, and return with the money and give it to the carrier. The prisoner's mother did not reside at Howden, and therefore the prisoner made a false statement, apparently perhaps to mislead the carrier as to her whereabouts. After leaving the waggon the prisoner took the road to Booth, which is almost two miles from Howden. About half-past 1 o'clock she was seen a mile out of Howden by a woman named Dennis, who observed her with her two children pass her house, which is nearly half-way between Howden and Booth. Dennis observed that the prisoner was carrying something in her arms having the appearance of a child with a hood upon its head. From this time the prisoner was not seen again until three o'clock in the afternoon, when she was met by a little girl named Mary Barker, whom she was acquainted, on the banks of the river. The prisoner had some conversation with this girl and then left her. At half-past three o'clock the prisoner went to the house of Mrs. Harrison, at Booth, who knew the prisoner well, and had a talk with her about her children. She had then only one child with her, and Mrs. Harrison asked her about the other child. The prisoner said it had been ill all the time it had been in the workhouse, and had died on the previous Monday, was buried on the Wednesday, and that she had left the workhouse on the Friday with her girl. She made this statement although within a couple of hours before she was seen carrying the child, and at that time it was perfectly well. Her mother afterwards returned home, and being dissatisfied with the statements about the child, pressed her with questions, when the prisoner said that she had thrown the child into a neighbour's pigstye, where the body was subsequently found covered with earth and stones. The medical evidence showed that death had been caused by suffocation. The judge having summed up, the jury were engaged in deliberation for three hours, after which they returned a verdict of Guilty, but recommended the prisoner to mercy. Mr. Justice Keating passed on the prisoner the sentence of Death in the usual form, but stated he would forward the recommendation to the proper quarter. DURHAM.—Brutal Outrage on a Woman at Washington.—Henry Lewins, 24, pitman; Thomas Ramshaw, 24, married man, pitman; and Miles Handy, 40, pitman, were indicted for having committed a rape on the person of Maria Page, a married woman 64 years of age, at Washington, on the 15th of August. The circumstances of the case were of the most revolting description, and the result of the outrage upon the unfortunate woman has been that she has since been subject to fits. On coming into court to give her evidence she swooned, and the assistance of a physician was necessary before she was able to give evidence. The case was fully proved, and the jury, after an absence of nearly two hours, returned a verdict of Guilty against all the prisoners. Mr. Justice Keating then said—Prisoners at the bar, you have been convicted on evidence that has satisfied both the jury, and myself, of an offence, one of the most aggravated of this kind, and one in which, during my experience—now many, many years—I think I never before met with. It is but a short time since the offence of which you have been convicted was a capital offence; and had it remained so at the present time you would all have been left, beyond all doubt, for execution. The law is now more mildly administered, so far as the punishment of death is concerned; but it is my duty to pass upon you a sentence scarcely less severe. The sentence of the Court is that you, and each of you, be kept in penal servitude for the term of your natural life. On hearing this sentence Handy appeared perfectly astounded, and stood seemingly unaware of its full meaning, but at length leaned forward and inquired of an officer of the court the nature of the sentence, and on receiving the answer, turned ashy pale, and immediately darted down the stairs, whither the other prisoners had been removed. The cries of the relations of the prisoners were heart-rending. Handy's wife and a number of his children, who were present, appeared to be in a state of perfect frenzy; his wife was taken away fainting by some of her friends. Also were other relations of the prisoners. The case occupied from 10 in the morning until 6 o'clock in the evening. MANCHESTER.—William Slater and Holland Cheetham were charged with having, at Reddish, near Stockport, on the 5th August last, maliciously and feloniously wounded Thomas Wild, a master bricklayer, with intent to do him grievous bodily harm. The interest of the case arose mainly from the fact that the assault occurred in connexion with a trade organisation against the use of machinery for the purpose of pressing bricks, and was one of a series of outrages which had of late been committed by brickmakers in the neighbourhood, and also from the very violent nature of the assault committed. The case lasted nine hours, and the jury returned a verdict of Guilty against both prisoners. Mr. Justice Shee-burn, in passing sentence, characterised this as a very bad case, and observed that trades unions might be very useful in their way, but it was not to be tolerated that such unions should be made instruments of oppression and of interference with men who wished to earn their wages honestly by their labour. He felt it his duty to deal very severely with the case, and sentenced the prisoners to be each kept in penal servitude for 20 years. Arson by a Manufacturer.—David Goldstone, 29, was charged with having, at Manchester, on the 7th November, maliciously and feloniously set fire to a certain warehouse, shop, etc., in his possession, and used by him in carrying on the trade and manufacture of caps, with intent to defraud the British Insurance Company. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty. The judge said there was ample evidence to justify the verdict. The crime was of great magnitude, and the slightest sentence he could pass would be penal servitude for 15 years.

NORTH WALES CIRCUIT: CHESTER.—Attempted Child Murder.—Eliza Ashley, a servant, was indicted for attempting to drown her daughter, three years of age, on the 13th of August. The case presented the usual features—great poverty on the part of the mother, and no means of supporting the child. She tied an apron tightly round its throat, and threw it into a brook. It appears to have managed to keep its head out of the water, and was subsequently found almost dead by a farmer. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty, and Justice Mellor said that he should not be doing his duty unless he sentenced prisoner to be kept in penal servitude for life. Child Murder.—Mary Marsh was tried for the wilful murder of her child at Leeswood on the 31st July. The case was fully proved, and the jury returned a verdict of Guilty, with a recommendation to mercy. Mr. Justice Mellor passed sentence of Death in the usual form.

[illegible] that he would forward the recommendation of the jury in the proper quarter. [Sir George Grey has since considered the recommendation to mercy, and after consultation with the [illegible] has recommended the extension of the mercy of the [illegible] and the sentence will therefore be commuted to penal [illegible] for life.]

[illegible] Circuit: Gloucester. — Child Murder. — Sarah [illegible] was charged with the wilful murder of her female child at Westcote. This was a deplorable case. The prisoner, a woman of 40 years of age, having become enceinte, and being unmarried, was turned out of her house by her mother and brother, and for a month had been wandering about the fields, sleeping under hedges and in hovels at night. On the 9th August she was seen walking across a field apparently ill, and late in the day two women who knew her, and observed an alteration in her appearance, asked her what she had had with it "what she had had." She replied that she had had nothing, but some blood was traced to a heap of stones, under which the body of a newly-born child was found. Its skull was fractured, a bloody stone was picked up with child's hair on it, and there were bruises on the child's body. Evidence having been given proving that the prisoner was near the spot where the body was found, the surgeon who made the post-mortem examination of the child, showed that the child had breathed and had a separate existence, and that death was caused by effusion of blood on the brain, caused by external violence. The child was prematurely born, being an eight months' child, and the mother was partly paralytic. For the defence it was contended that there was no proof of her intention to destroy the child, although the facts might support a charge of concealment of birth. The prisoner was found Guilty of concealment of birth, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. Child Murder at Cheltenham.—Elizabeth Perren was charged with the wilful murder of Louisa Perren, at Cheltenham, on the 6th September, 1863. This case excited a good deal of interest, and the court was crowded. On the 11th August, 1861, the prisoner was delivered of a female child at the Cheltenham Workhouse. On recovering she went out to service, and put the child out to nurse, where it remained till the 5th September, 1863, when she took it away, and it had never been seen alive afterwards. At that time the prisoner was in service at Mrs. Cox's, Ormond Terrace, Cheltenham, and Mrs. Cox noticed a smell in the house afterwards, which she attributed to a defect in the drain pipe. Mrs. Cox left Ormond Terrace in September last, and some alteration taking place in the premises, the dead body of a child was found under the floor. The prisoner was then apprehended in London, and admitted having made away with the child, but there was no proof that the body found was that of her child. The judge in summing up told the jury that they must either find the prisoner guilty of murder or acquit her altogether. After carefully going through the whole of the evidence, and commenting on the statement made by the prisoner, and the absence of any explanation as to what had become of the child, he left the verdict in the hands of the jury. The jury, after half an hour's consideration, found the prisoner Not Guilty. Child Murder at Withington.—Sarah Ann Green was charged with the wilful murder of her male child at Withington on the 1st May. The prisoner was an unmarried woman, and was supposed to be in the family way. A change being observed in her appearance she was questioned, and at first denied that she had been delivered, but on the surgeon being sent to examine her she said she had had a miscarriage, that the child was born dead, and that her stepfather had buried it in the garden. The garden was searched, and the body of a full-grown child was found. A surgeon proved the existence of certain marks on the head of the child, which he said might have caused death. The child had breathed, and had a separate existence from the mother. Mr. Baron Bramwell said there was no evidence to support the charge of murder. The prisoner was then found Guilty of concealment of birth and sentenced to six months' imprisonment. William Belcher stepfather to the prisoner was then tried and found Guilty of aiding in the concealment of birth, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. Attempted Murder at Painswick.—James Billings was charged with firing a pistol at Elizabeth Trow, at Painswick, with intent to murder her, on the 3d October; and also with wounding Job Barnfield with a knife with intent to resist his lawful apprehension. This was a serious case of attempted revenge by a jilted suitor. The prisoner and the prosecutrix had kept company, but for some reason the girl had broken off the acquaintance; and as she persisted in refusing to receive his addresses the prisoner declared that no one else should have her if he did not. On the 3d October the prisoner met the girl, and presenting a pistol fired the charge, carrying away some of her ribbons. He then rushed upon her with a knife, but was stopped. He was found Guilty of unlawfully wounding with intent to do bodily harm, and was sentenced to seven years' penal servitude. Stafford.—The Colliers' Strike.—James Bishop, a working collier, and 18 other miners and colliers, were indicted for conspiracy to keep up the rate of wages by intimidation of workmen, for riot and unlawful assembly, and for assaults upon the police in the execution of their duty. The indictment contained 14 counts. It will be remembered that one method the colliers took to advance their cause was to parade in front of the pits where men were at work early in the morning, with a view to intimidation. On one of these occasions the police interfered, a fight took place, and these 19 men were apprehended. Mr. Kenealy, who defended them, took the novel course in a criminal case of entering a demurrer to the evidence in the case of twelve of the prisoners, which the judge after some hesitation agreed to accept but Mr. Powell, Q.C., who acted for the Attorney-General, refused to join issue, and the trial went on. Mr. Justice Byles in summing up, said if the jury believed the evidence, there could be no doubt that they had been guilty of conspiracy and of an unlawful assembly. At the same time no great harm had been done, and, in the event of the jury finding the prisoners guilty, that would be taken into consideration. The jury, after brief deliberation, returned a verdict of Guilty against all the prisoners. Mr. Powell, on behalf of the prosecution, recommended them to mercy. The Earl of Lichfield, Lord-Lieutenant of the county, also on behalf of himself and the magistracy, recommended the prisoners to the leniency of the Court. He said, the county had remained in the same state as a week, it was when the prisoners were arrested, they could not have done so consistently with their duty, but he was happy to say that order had been restored, and the men generally had returned to work. Considering, therefore, that the prisoners had been in prison for six weeks, and also that they had had enormous sums extracted from them for their defence before the magistrates and on their trial, he hoped the Court would be as lenient to them as possible. Mr. Justice Byles said he should gladly listen to the representations made to him on behalf of the prisoners, and the more so as he did not doubt that they had been misled by others, and from their own ignorance of the law. He thought the course taken by the magistrates during the disturbances and by the police had been most judicious. They appeared to have acted at the very moment, and not before, when by their interference they could do good and prevent mischief. The exercise of wisdom was opportunity, and that the magistrates had seized it was most fortunate for the county and for the prisoners themselves. Under all the circumstances he sentenced Bishop and eight others to one month's imprisonment with hard labour, and discharged the rest upon their entering into recognisances to keep the peace, and come up for judgment in the event of their breaking it. The prisoners appeared to be generally thankful to have got off so easily. The Outrage on a Woman in the Black Country.—Five ironworks operatives at Lea Brook, were charged with an outrage on a married woman, whose leg they broke at the same time. The oldest of the prisoners was 26 years of age, and the youngest two were aged each 18 years. The jury found them all Guilty of the attempt, and recommended them to mercy. Mr. Justice Byles.—To mercy!—on what ground, gentlemen? The Foreman.—On account of their age, my lord. The Judge.—Their age! Why one is 26 years of age, and is a married man. Mr. Justice Byles, in passing sentence said, that if they had been convicted of the capital offence he should have sentenced them to such a term of penal servitude that, before it had expired, the youngest prisoner amongst them would have become an old man. Owing, however, to the evidence of the surgeon not having been quite complete on this point, and to the prosecutrix not having referred to the grosser usage until a fortnight after the offence, when she was visited in the hospital by her husband, the jury had found the prisoners guilty on the lesser count. Their sentence would, therefore, be 18 months' imprisonment each, with hard labour.

Central Criminal Court: Swindling by a Pretended Heiress.—Mary Horsfall, 22, spinster, was indicted for stealing a chain, a ring, two bracelets, and several other articles of jewellery, the property of Miss Caroline Olley. This case has been several times before the public. The prisoner went to Miss Harvey, who keeps an educational establishment at Blackheath, early in September, and introduced herself to her as Miss Horsfall, niece of Mr. Horsfall, M.P. She said she was somewhat backward in her education, and wanted a little polishing. Terms were agreed upon, and she entered Ashburnham Hall as a parlour pupil, and very soon made herself intimately acquainted with the other inmates, and succeeded in getting herself into their good graces in a very short space of time, telling them that she would one day come into possession of vast estates. She slept in the same bed-room as the prosecutrix, and it was while so occupying part of her room that the robbery took place. On the 24th September Miss Harvey and the prisoner left for Bath, on a trip to see the rich relations of the latter, who boasted of the good things in perspective. After she had left the establishment Miss Olley missed the articles mentioned in the indictment. Witnesses were called to prove that the prisoner had pledged the greater part of the property at Mr. Jawley's, Farringdon Street, and at a pawnbroker's at Greenwich. The jury found her Guilty. Two other indictments were then gone into, charging her with obtaining goods by fraud, but by the judge's direction the prisoner was acquitted on both, the false pretence not being made out satisfactorily. The Recorder asked whether anything was known of the prisoner previous to her going to reside with Miss Harvey. Police constable Margetson, said he had ascertained that she was the daughter of very poor parents in Yorkshire, and the wife of a labouring man. He had traced her to Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds, and other places, where she had put up at the principal hotels, obtaining from tradesmen in those towns large quantities of valuable goods under false pretences, and disposing of them in order to maintain the character she had assumed. As a proof of the skill with which she imposed on people it was mentioned that she had at Birmingham become acquainted with a gentleman named Hewitt, over whom she gained such an ascendancy as to obtain from him a promise of marriage, and a carriage, horses, five pianos, and other expensive articles had been ordered preparatory to the ceremony. The Recorder sentenced the prisoner to 18 months' imprisonment with hard labour. The Clerkenwell Murder.—Alfred Thomas Jackson, 22, jeweller, was tried upon an indictment charging him with the wilful murder of James Ploughman Roberts. It will be remembered from the details of the case, which have already appeared in our Metropolitan news, that the prisoner and deceased were employed at a working jeweller's at Clerkenwell, and were together in the shop after the other workmen had left. The deceased was found nearly insensible, but intimated that the prisoner had assaulted him, and died soon after. The jury found a verdict of Manslaughter. Baron Pigott, in passing sentence, told the prisoner that the jury had taken the most merciful view of his case. He was bound to tell him that he thought his was a very bad case, and that he did with great cruelty and determination inflict very grievous injuries on this unfortunate youth, and he saw nothing in the circumstances which could reduce its enormity. The prisoner must be taught, and others must be taught the sacred nature of human life, and that they must not beat out a fellow-creature's brains without incurring the gravest punishment. For that very heinous crime he felt it his duty to pass upon him the severest sentence in his power—namely, that he be kept in penal servitude for the remainder of his natural life. Child Murder.—Elizabeth Strangeways was indicted for the murder of her infant child. The prisoner, who is barely 16 years of age, had lived as a domestic servant in Kennington. The dead body of an infant, to which she had given birth, was found on the evening of the 9th November tied up in a piece of black silk in a secluded part of Cardington Street, in which her mistress resided. Its throat was cut, and there was a fracture of the right parietal bone. These injuries, in the opinion of a surgeon, had caused its death. There was some doubt, however, whether the child had had an existence independent of the mother. The jury found the prisoner Guilty of the minor offence of concealing the birth, recommending her to mercy on account of her youth, and she was sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment with hard labour.

Obituary.

Lord William Fitzgerald died on the 8th inst. at his residence, Harcourt Terrace, Dublin, in his 71st year. He was the youngest son of the second Duke of Leinster, by the only daughter and heir of the last Lord St. George. He was born in 1793, and was unmarried. He took a warm interest in Irish politics, and was the author of a pamphlet entitled "Suggestions for the Better Government of Ireland."

Major-General Nepean died at 18, Marine Parade, Dover, on the 8th inst., in his 69th year. He was the third son of Sir Evan Nepean, Bart., and was born in 1795. He entered the army early in life as Cornet in the 16th Light Dragoons. He went on unattached half-pay, in 1826, shortly after he obtained his rank as Major. He served in the Peninsula and at Waterloo, and was present with his regiment at the battle of the Nive. He had received the Peninsular war medal and the one for Waterloo. He attained the rank of Major-General in 1818.

General Sir George Turner, K.C.B., Colonel-Commandant of the 12th Brigade of the Royal Artillery, died on the 9th inst. at Menie House, Aberdeenshire, in his 85th year. He was born in 1780, and obtained his commission of Second-Lieutenant in the Royal Artillery in 1797. He was at the capture of the Cape of Good Hope in 1806, joined the army in the Peninsula in 1813, and served with it until the end of the war. He was present at the battles of Orthes and Toulouse, and at the affairs of Vic Bigorre and Tarbes. He received the gold medal and one clasp for Orthes and Toulouse. In 1831 he was made a Companion of the Bath, and in 1862 a Knight Commander of that order. In 1852, he was appointed Colonel-Commandant of the 12th Brigade Royal Artillery.

Professor Boole, F.R.S., Professor of Mathematics in Queen's College, Cork, died suddenly on the 9th inst. His earlier years were spent in the neighbourhood of Lincoln, and it was during his residence in that city that he first became known by his contributions to the "Cambridge and Dublin Mathematical Journal." The great abilities shown in those papers led to high expectations of his future career, and these expectations were further heightened by the publication of "The Mathematical Analysis of Logic." About 10 years since he was chosen to be the Professor of Mathematics at Cork. Soon after his appointment he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Dublin; and in 1851 he published "An Investigation of the Laws of Thought, on which are founded the Mathematical Theories of Logic and Probabilities." The subject of this volume was continued in a memoir in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, "On the Combination of Testimonies and of Judgment," and soon afterwards, when he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, he resumed the subject in a paper "On the Theory of Probabilities," read before the Society on the 19th of June, 1862, and since published in the Philosophical Transactions. In the meanwhile he wrote his work on "Differential Equations," which has become a class-book in the University of Cambridge. He was engaged in the preparation of a second edition of this work at the time of his death, and he spent part of his last summer vacation in London ransacking the treasures of the Royal Society and the British Museum, that his book might be as perfect as possible. An untimely death, caused by an effusion upon the lungs, has put a stop to his labours.

Mr. Justice Elgee, the American judge, died suddenly from disease of the heart, on the 7th October, at New Orleans. He was grandson of the late Archdeacon Elgee, of Wexford, and the only brother of Lady Wilde. Having settled many years ago in the Southern States he rapidly acquired a distinguished position at the American bar, and eventually rose to the bench. He had, however, retired from the practice of his profession, and at the commencement of the war was one of the wealthiest men in Louisiana. Only a year before he had invested 100,000*l.* in the purchase of an estate, the largest purchase ever made in Louisiana by a single individual. This plantation he called "Leinster," as a memorial of his fatherland. Judge Elgee leaves an only son, who, before the war, was secretary of the United States Legation at Mexico, and is now aide-de-camp to General Lee.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Dec. 12.

The number of Beasts is very moderate, this being "Great Market Day," and the trade for them is good. Some of the choicest descriptions make rather more than over top quotations. The supply of Sheep is short, and the demand active, consequently prices are better for all descriptions. Good Calves are rather dearer. From Germany and Holland there are 950 Beasts, 5530 Sheep, 190 Calves, and 110 Pigs; from Spain, 50 Beasts; from Scotland, 1100; from Norfolk and Suffolk, 550; from Ireland, 400; from the Western Counties, 550; and 2800 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Dec. 15.

The number of Beasts is by no means excessive for the season. Trade is not very brisk, yet Monday's quotations are well maintained for choice qualities. The supply of Sheep is shorter than was expected, but quite equal to the demand. Trade is slow at Monday's quotations. Choice Calves are in demand at rather higher rates. Our foreign supply consists of 650 Beasts, 2120 Sheep, 225 Calves, and 110 Pigs.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Dec. 12.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent was rather larger than of late, the condition was less satisfactory, and it met a very slow sale at 1s. per qr. below the rates of this day se'nnight. There was an improved attendance, and foreign Wheat attracted more attention, but prices are unaltered. Fine malting Barley was 1s. per qr. cheaper, but secondary qualities were difficult of disposal at a decline of 2s. per qr. Beans were unaltered in value. Peas were 1s. to 2s. per qr. Of foreign Oats there was a fair arrival fresh per qr. cheaper. Of foreign Oats there was a fair arrival fresh up, and they met a steady sale at last week's rates. In the value of Flour there is no change.

FRIDAY, Dec. 16.

The weather during the past week has been mostly cloudy, mild and damp until yesterday, when it become colder. We have noticed no increase in the activity of the Wheat trade, and prices remain unaltered except for new home-grown, which is quoted in some markets 1s. per qr. lower, owing to its poor condition. Prime malting Barley dull, other qualities are fully 1s. 6d. per qr. cheaper. Oats on the spot were much easier, and to ensure sales ex steamer a decline was submitted to, but landed parcels maintain the late improvement in most markets. Beans and Peas move off very slowly. Good sweet Flour is scarce, and barrels of known brands would sell readily at former prices. Since Friday last 30 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has continued quiet, and prices have not undergone any alteration, excepting of Barley, which is still declining. Paris, Dec. 15.—Flour has remained very dull, and only a limited business has been done at rather lower rates. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 31,650 cwt. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 30s. 9d. per 280 lb. The offers of Wheat are more numerous, but little only has been sold at about 9d. per 480 lb. lower prices. The arrivals of English and foreign grain and Flour since Monday have been moderate, with the exception of foreign Oats, which were large. There was a small attendance at this morning's market, and the business transacted was very limited, prices of all articles remaining nominally as on Monday, with the exception of undried foreign Oats, which were rather cheaper.

News of the Week.

BY the Bombay mail we learn that Sir JOHN LAWRENCE returned to Calcutta on the 1st November from his Viceregal progress to the capital of the Punjaub. The entrance of the British force into Bhootan will take place about the middle of this month. There was an awful gale at Calcutta on the 21st ult., but it was fortunately attended with slight damage. A more serious storm has occurred on the Madras coast, which has reduced Masulipatam to a complete wreck by an inundation, and thousands of lives are said to have been lost.

Accounts from Japan have been received through Holland, stating that the Prince of NEZAS having refused to pay the war indemnity stipulated in the treaty of peace, the Criminal Tribunal of Yeddo decided that his two palaces should be razed to the ground, and all his servants put to death. This sentence having been approved by the MIKADO and the TYCOON, the Prince's palaces were immediately destroyed, and all his servants, numbering 420 men and 300 women and children, put to death. The Prince on learning these facts, sent his first minister to Yeddo, to invoke the intercession of the Ministers of France, England, Holland, America, and Russia; and to announce that he had decided on executing all the provisions of the treaty and on the immediate payment of the indemnity.

A despatch from Melbourne of October 26 states that the first instalment of convicts whose time has expired has been re-shipped to England. There has been a Ministerial crisis in New Zealand, Mr. Fox's Ministry having tendered their resignation which the Governor declined to accept. Two hundred Maori prisoners had effected their escape and were fomenting rebellion; and a native rising was threatened in Tauranga.

The Court of Correctional Appeal in Paris delivered judgment on Wednesday on the appeal of the 13 deputies accused of holding illegal meetings, and confirmed the sentence pronounced by the Tribunal of First Instance. It is said that the case will now be taken to the Court of Cassation.

A despatch from Copenhagen announces that the King of DENMARK arrived at Kolding on Tuesday, and on the following day received a deputation of 5000 Schleswigers from the district of Hagersley, Abenraa, and Flensborg, who presented an Address to HIS MAJESTY, assuring him that if the wishes of the inhabitants prevailed in the final decision on the destiny of Schleswig, it would then be seen how deeply love for the ancient Fatherland was rooted in the hearts of the Schleswigers.

The Federal Diet at Frankfort on Monday, by a majority of 9 to 6, agreed to the evacuation of the Duchies by the Federal troops, as demanded by Prussia and Austria.

In the sitting of the Austrian Reichsrath on Friday, the Prime Minister, Count MENSDORFF-POUILLY said that the principal policy of Austria was to avoid a great and an apparently inevitable war. Austria was willing to preserve peace, but at the same time was determined to resist her enemies, and no one could demand that she should adopt the initiative in bringing about a better understanding with Italy, by whom the mere existence of Austria was regarded as an aggression. These declarations are supposed to have been caused by the recent statement of the Prime Minister of Italy that the possession of Venice was merely a matter of vanity on the part of Austria, and that Germany could not believe that the Queen of the Adriatic was necessary to her existence.

The debate on the Convention is still proceeding in the Italian Senate. In the sitting of Monday the Minister of the Interior said that the temporal power of the POPE was not necessary to the splendour and independence of the spiritual power, and that the solution of the question was to be found in the principle of a free Church in a free State. He added that intervention was about to cease, and though Italy had an interest in repelling all foreign aggression to uphold the temporal power, yet, in the event of a movement breaking out in the Papal territories, Italy was not under engagement to repress it. In the sitting of Tuesday General CIALDINI said that no compromise was possible between Austria and Italy, and that the passes of the Apennines were real Thermopylæ. General DELLA MARMORA, the Prime Minister, amidst great cheering, stated that he shared the views expressed by General CIALDINI.

From the United States we have at length some details of General SHERMAN'S movements. After burning Atlanta he divided his army into two columns, one of which is marching on Augusta direct, while the other is proceeding to the same city by way of Macon and Milledgeville, destroying everything by the way. The Confederate General HOWELL COBB, with 8000 militia, is contesting his advance, retiring upon Macon, which is believed to be strongly fortified. General BEAUREGARD has issued an address to the Georgians, calling upon them to destroy everything on the invaders' march, and stating that he is hastening to their defence. General HOOD is making rapid progress in Tennessee, and is advancing on Pulaski, from which the Federals are retreating towards Columbo, where an engagement is expected. Since the defeat of the Federals under GILLEM at Bull's Gap, General BRECKENRIDGE has obtained full possession of East Tennessee and South-Western Virginia. The Confederates are mining in the neighbourhood of Petersburg, and an immediate movement by General LEE is anticipated. An attempt has been made to destroy the public buildings of New York by fire. The plot, however, which is ascribed to Confederate emissaries, was discovered in time to be frustrated. A prohibition to export munitions of war has been issued by the Canadian authorities, in consequence of information that stores of such articles were collecting at various points.

The Queen remained some time, and afterwards inspected some of the monuments in the churchyard. Princess Helena went by the South-Western Railway to Kew, and visited the Duchess of Cambridge. Her Royal Highness afterwards visited the Count and Countess of Paris, at Twickenham, and returned by road to Windsor. On Wednesday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena and Princess Louisa, drove in the grounds. Princess Beatrice went out walking. Lady Napier left the Castle. The Earl and Countess Russell arrived at the Castle on a visit. On Thursday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, walked and drove in the grounds. Princess Louisa went out driving. It is expected that the Queen, with the various members of the Royal family, will leave Windsor on the 17th or 19th inst. for Osborne, where the Queen will spend Christmas. The Court will probably remain about six weeks at Osborne, and then return to Windsor.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.—On Friday the Duke of Cambridge left Sandringham for London. On Saturday the Prince went out wild fowl shooting on Wolverton Marshes. On Sunday morning the Prince and Princess attended Divine service at Sandringham church. The Rev. R. W. Pearse, incumbent of Gaywood, officiated and preached. On Monday the Prince went out with the West Norfolk hounds. The Princess drove to the meet at Houghton. In the afternoon Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, Earl Granville, the Earl of Sefton, the Marquis of Hartington, Colonel Hon. H. Percy, and Admiral Seymour, arrived at Sandringham on a visit. On Tuesday the Royal party had a successful day's shooting in the Commodore and Deringham Woods. On Wednesday the Prince, accompanied by Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, the Earl of Sefton, the Marquis of Hartington, Colonel Hon. H. Percy and Admiral Seymour, drove to Westacre, and had two runs with the West Norfolk hounds. Earl Granville returned to town.

ORDER OF THE GARTER.—It is rumoured that one of the vacant Garters will be conferred on Earl Spencer.

THE LAY ADDRESS TO THE ARCHBISHOPS.—On Thursday afternoon a large number of laymen, members of the Church of England and Ireland, attended at Lambeth Palace for the purpose of presenting to the Archbishops of Canterbury and York an address, numerously signed, thanking them for their recent pastoral letters on matters which have recently been productive of some agitation in the Church. Among those present were Sir Brook Bridges, Bart., M.P., Mr. Newdegate, M.P., the Hon. A. Kinnaird, M.P., the Rev. Canon Wordsworth, the Earl Romney, Mr. H. E. Pellew, Colonel Geddes Walker, Lord Calthorpe, Mr. H. Hoare, Mr. J. G. Talbot, Mr. Wilbraham Taylor, the Rev. W. Mayow, M.A., incumbent of West Brompton, the Rev. Dr. Jelf, principal of King's College, Archdeacon Utterton, Sir Walter James, and other clergymen and gentlemen. The Earl of Romney read the address, which had been signed by 137,000 persons. It acknowledged with deep gratitude the pastorals lately issued by their Graces to the two provinces of Canterbury and York, and prayed that they might be richly endowed with wisdom from on high, and be enabled, with the other primates and bishops of the United Church of England and Ireland, to take effectual counsel for upholding, amid the peculiar dangers of the present times, the Divine authority of Holy Scripture, and the integrity of the faith, so that the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour might be taught in all its purity, and handed on, without diminution or addition, to their children's children. The Archbishop of Canterbury read the following reply:—

"I accept with cordial satisfaction the expression of your gratitude for the pastoral letter which I recently addressed to the clergy and laity of my province under circumstances of no ordinary gravity. Articles of belief, which had ever been held by the Church catholic and by all its several branches, seemed to be impugned, and deep anxiety pervaded the minds of a large proportion of the members of our Church. I thus felt myself called upon to give my reasons for having dissented from the recent judgment of the Privy Council—the principle on which I proceeded—the very principle laid down and recognised by that judgment itself, namely, that such rule or teaching only is to be ascribed to the Church, as we find to be expressly stated in her Articles and formularies, or which are plainly involved in or to be collected from that which is written. The doctrines in question seem to me to be so 'plainly involved in or to be collected from' the Articles and formularies of our Church that I had no alternative but to dissent from a judgment which affirmed the contrary; and it is most gratifying to me to find that the course I then pursued is so consonant with the views and feelings of the large and important body of Churchmen whom you represent, and that there is so resolute a determination on their part to maintain and uphold the cardinal doctrines of our Church."

The Archbishop of York replied as follows:—

"I thank you most sincerely for the address that has just been read, so far as it relates to myself. I thank you for the support which it gives to me whose experience in the episcopal office has been short, and who would gladly have left the leading part in these discussions entirely to older and wiser prelates. Nothing but a strong sense of duty would have drawn from me the pastoral letter to which the address is a reply. I do not conceal from myself that these are times of severe trial. The person of our Lord himself, and the Divine doctrines that fell from His own lips, will hardly escape the criticism which has begun with the book that reveals them; but, on the other hand, past ages have seen the same sort of cloud storm the sky, and the storm has passed, and the Sun of Righteousness shines still unchanged in the heavens, Author of light and life to them that turn towards Him. I am persuaded that this will be the issue now, even if the storm be long, and many hearts fail because of it. The duty of Christian teachers at this time is not difficult to see. The Church of England is founded on the Word of God—that is her law and her doctrine. She has no other weapon against sin and evil in the world. Our duty is to be more and more active in preaching that Word—more earnest in the study of it, and of all that can throw light upon it—more sedulous in presenting its warnings and consolations convincingly to our people—more diligent in instructing our children—more careful that our preaching shall not be an echo of some past generation, but an application of eternal truths to the needs of men and women in this somewhat luxurious and self-indulgent but intellectual age. If this is the effect of our present troubles, the Church of Christ may emerge from them chastened and strengthened for her work of turning souls to Christ."

THE CASE OF BISHOP COLENSO.—The hearing of the petition of the Bishop of Natal by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which was fixed for Monday next, is deferred till Wednesday the 14th. The Bishop of Capetown intends to appear "under protest."

THE BISHOP OF EXETER.—The report that Bishop Phillpotts had tendered his resignation is contradicted. His Lordship, who is in his 87th year, finds his bodily strength unequal to the task of visitation, but his mental powers are unimpaired, and he continues to devote himself to the superintendence of the spiritual interests of his extensive diocess with his old energy and zeal.

THE COMMISSION ON CLERICAL SUBSCRIPTION.—It is announced that the commissioners have unanimously adopted a resolution moved by the Bishop of Oxford, seconded by the Earl of Harrowby, and that, while the declaration of "unfeigned assent and consent to all and everything contained in the Book of Common Prayer" is proposed to be abolished, a uniform subscription made up from an old form is substituted.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—The election for West Suffolk took place on Thursday, when Lord Augustus Hervey was returned without opposition. The election for North Warwickshire takes place on Tuesday, when it is expected that Mr. Davenport Bromley, the Conservative candidate, will be returned without opposition, Mr. Leigh having retired from the contest on account of the near approach of a dissolution. It is said that Viscount Amberley, eldest son of Earl Russell, will contest South Devon at the next election. Mr. D. A. Lang, of Regent Street, and Colonel Bourne, of Heathfield, Wavertree, are candidates for Evesham; the former in the Liberal and the latter in the Conservative interest. Mr. Arthur Bass is a candidate for Stafford in the Liberal interest. The reported death of Mr. Williams, the member for Lambeth, is contradicted.

OFFICIAL APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. W. Rathbone Greg, Commissioner of Customs, has been appointed Comptroller of the Stationery Office in the room of the late Mr. J. R. M'Culloch. Colonel Frederick Romilly has been appointed a Commissioner of Customs in the room of Mr. Greg.

CONSULAR APPOINTMENT.—The Queen has appointed Charles Livingstone, Esq., now Consul at Fernando Po, to be also Consul in the territories on the Western Coast of Africa, comprised within the Bight of Biafra, and lying between Cape Formosa and Cape St. John.

FRANCE.—The Court of Correctional Appeal on Wednesday delivered judgment in the case of the 13 deputies accused of holding illegal meetings, and confirmed the sentence pronounced by the Tribunal of First Instance. It will be remembered that when the last general election took place a number of deputies, including MM. Ollivier Pagès, Carnot, and others has led to the Imperial system of nominating candidates, and a meeting in Paris with a view of organising Opposition electoral committees throughout the Empire. The Government, aware of their proceedings, and [illegible] meeting was illegal on account of more than 20 persons being present, dispersed the meeting, and forcibly seized their papers. These proceedings led to a judicial investigation before the Police Correctional, by which the deputies were condemned, upon which they appealed to the Court Imperial. Lawyers of the highest class—MM. Jules Favre, Dufaure, Hébert, Crémieux, and Berryer, defended the accused, and showed that their proceedings were not contrary to the laws of the constitution, inasmuch as the number present was only 13, and therefore did not reach that [illegible] by law. The Procureur General on the other hand maintained that the objection raised to the number of persons included in the indictment was too trivial to require refutation; and that the Government might, if it chose, have prosecuted only one or two of the number present. He contended that the nature of the association was precisely such as to justify the Government in taking steps to dissolve it; and that it was the abuse of the right of association which had produced the downfall of the French monarchy. The Court having decided in favour of the Government by rejecting the appeal, the case will be carried, it is said to the Court of Cassation, whose judgment will be final. The Court of Rouen has given its decision in the case of MM. Chevon and Chaibois, prosecuted for illegally furnishing electoral correspondences to provincial newspapers. The Court confirms the judgment delivered in this case by the Tribunal of First Instance. The stay of the Court at Compiègne is now drawing to a close. The weather has been fine, and out of door sports have been pursued with great spirit. A shooting party assembled again in the Forest of Laigue, when about 1200 head of game were brought down by 11 guns. A hunt also took place, followed by the curée by torchlight. The Emperor, the Empress, and the Prince Imperial were present in chars-à-banc. Private theatricals have also been given by a portion of the guests, under the direction of the Princess de Metternich. An interlude of Ombres Chinoises is said to have been a remarkable success, the effects produced by the electric light having been marvellous. Among the scenes represented were "The Sleeping Beauty," in which the part of the Princess was filled by the Countess de Pourtalès, and that of Prince Charming by the Duke de Mouchy. It is said that the Emperor and his Ministers have come to the conclusion that the existing provisions for public works shall not be exceeded, and that no loan will be required for any purpose whatever. It is also said that the new budgets will not be made known until next month, as the Legislative Chambers will not meet before February. The French steamer Ardeche has arrived at Lisbon from Mexico with one regiment of the French expeditionary army. The sanitary condition of the troops is good. Mr. Dayton, the American Minister at the Court of the Tuileries, died on the 1st inst. The improvement which took place last week in the health of M. Mocquard does not continue. His condition causes great anxiety, and no hope is entertained of his recovery. The Emperor paid him a visit on Saturday, and remained with him nearly an hour.

SPAIN.—A long Conference took place on Tuesday between the French Ambassador and the Minister for Foreign Affairs. The Epoca asserts that the Madrid Cabinet has unanimously decided to support those candidates for the presidency of the Congress who have already held that office. The Noticias of Wednesday contradicts the report that the Minister of Finance was negotiating for a loan on the basis of an arrangement with the holders of the Passive Bonds.

PORTUGAL.—A disagreement of a certain gravity has just broken out between the Court of Rome and the Portuguese Government relative to a question which dates back to more than a century, and which relates to the nomination of Portuguese bishops in Hindostan and in Indo-China. The Pope is said to have signified to the King of Portugal that he had decided on adopting a serious measure. The nature of it has not been stated; but it appears to have led to the recall of Marshal Saldanha, the Portuguese Minister at Rome. A telegram from Lisbon, dated Dec. 8, announces that the French Sisters of Charity at Macao will be replaced by Portuguese Sisters.

SWITZERLAND.—The Federal Assembly have elected M. Schenck, of Berne, by a large majority, President of the Swiss Confederation for 1865, and M. Knusel, of Lucerne, Vice-President. There is no further doubt as to the fate of Dr. Demme and his partner in flight Madlle. Fanny Trumpy, a telegram having been received from the Swiss consul at Genoa announcing that they had committed suicide by poison at an hotel in Nervi, near that city. They arrived at the hotel on the 29th ult. and engaged an apartment, in which they were found dead next morning, the body of the doctor lying on the bed, and that of Madlle. Trumpy on the floor. On the arrival, in accordance with the local custom, their bodies were publicly exhibited in the public square for the purpose of identification. The following letter gives the details of their suicide:—

"On the 29th a foreign gentleman, accompanied by a young lady, alighted from a hired carriage at the Hotel Anglais, in the Palazzo Gropello, at Nervi. The lady was elegantly dressed in travelling costume, and the gentleman also. Without giving his name, the latter asked for a bedroom and supper. Nothing was noticeable in the appearance of the two travellers except their affectionate manner towards each other. They had their supper, after which the lady sat down to the piano and the gentleman read the newspapers. Some moments after they retired to rest, and being asked if it would be necessary to call them in the morning, they said it would be useless, seeing they had come on foot from Genoa, were wearied, and wished to rest. Late in the afternoon of the next day the innkeeper, not seeing his new guests appear in the dining room, sent a waiter to knock at their door, but no answer was returned. The magistrate was sent for immediately, and the door burst open in his presence. On the bed lay the gentleman, with his head turned towards the pillow; the lady was lying on the floor, with her arms twisted together like those of a person who had died from poison. The unfortunate couple had been dead at least six or seven hours, for their bodies were cold. Nothing was found in their trunks except some old clothes, and the doctor had a few coppers in his pockets. A few drops of a mixture found in a glass proved that they had taken strychnine. Upon a table were found a little phial of poison, two empty glasses, and two others still containing poison. Upon another table were some letters written in pencil. One of them, addressed to the landlord, assured him that their bill would be paid by their family. Another, written in German, was directed, "To my poor father, Demme," and requested pardon for the sorrow the writer had brought upon his family. A third, in the handwriting of the young lady, contained only a single line. "Hermann has killed himself, and I will follow" Other papers proved the identity of the parties. The bodies were exposed to public inspection in Nervi, guarded by two gendarmes. The Berne police were telegraphed to at once, and desired that photographs should be taken of the deceased. The juge d'instruction also set out for Nervi, to remove every doubt. The Swiss Government has claimed the bodies, which will be removed for interment to Berne."

DENMARK.—The King of Denmark arrived at Kolding on the 6th inst. On the following day the King received a deputation of 5000 Schleswigers, who, in spite of the prohibition of the Civil Commissioners, had travelled to that town from the districts of Hagerslev, Abenraa, and Flensborg, to pay their respects to his Majesty. The deputation presented an address to the King, the concluding paragraph of which says that if the wishes of the inhabitants should prevail in the final decision on the destiny of Schleswig, it would then be seen how deeply love for the ancient Fatherland was rooted in the hearts of the Schleswigers. Several thousand inhabitants of the town of Schleswig also wanted to proceed to Kolding to render homage to the King. This was forbidden by the authorities, and several arrests in consequence took place.

HESSE CASSEL.—The Chambers have drawn up and presented an address to the Elector of Hesse, protesting against the unconstitutional condition of the country, and showing how schools, agriculture, and trade have consequently deteriorated, and requesting reforms. The Elector, in reply, told the Chambers in very curt language that they had overstepped the limits of their position. If the promises of the June Patent had not been fulfilled, the fault did not lie with the Government, but with the Chambers. The dispute about the constitution and the progress of material interests would not cease until a fresh electoral law had been introduced and new Chambers had been elected. The Elector added that he had entire confidence in his Ministers, and expected that the Chambers would in future abstain from all steps incompatible with the authority of the Sovereign. An extraordinary sitting of the municipality of Cassel was held on Monday, at which a vote of thanks was passed to the Chambers for addressing the Elector on the subject.

PRUSSIA.—The Prussian troops from the late seat of war entered Berlin on Wednesday, with the King at their head. The streets through which they passed were lined by an enthusiastic crowd, and the houses were gaily decorated. A brilliant illumination of the city took place at night.

FRANKFORT.—In the sitting of the Federal Diet on Monday the Austro-Prussian proposition relative to the evacuation of Holstein and Lauenburg by the Federal troops was adopted by 9 against 6 votes. Saxony, Bavaria, Wurtemberg, Darmstadt, and the 12th and 13th Curiæ, voted against the proposal. Luxembourg abstained from voting. The representatives of Austria and Prussia then stated that the Civil Commissioners of those Powers in Schleswig would also undertake the administration of the Duchies of Holstein and Lauenberg.

AUSTRIA.—In the sitting of the Lower House of the Reichsrath on Friday, Count Mensdorff-Pouilly said that the principal policy of Austria was to avoid a great and an apparently inevitable war. It was her task to direct her efforts towards the solution of the German question in thorough earnestness, and in a manner which should be both compatible with her rights and also, if possible, with the preservation of her connection with Prussia, so necessary to the interest of Germany and peace. The programme of the Cabinet was tranquillity and conciliation, but firmness. No one could demand that Austria should adopt the initiative in bringing about a better understanding with Italy, by whom the mere existence of Austria was regarded as an aggression. Austria was willing to preserve peace, but at the same time was determined to resist her enemies, and she reckoned on the entire support both of the House and of the population. The Minister of War stated that Austria would willingly disarm, but the step must be initiated by other Powers. Dr. Brinz asked what course the Government intended to pursue in the settlement of the succession question in the Duchies. Herr Kuranda declared himself opposed to the Prussian alliance. Dr. Mühlfeld said that he considered it to be the mission of Austria to strengthen the German [illegible] whereas, on the contrary, that body had been [illegible] by her. Count Mensdorff said that the present [illegible] of the negotiations did not admit of more [illegible] information being given. Austria had not [illegible] in the Danish war from mere love of [illegible] The paragraph of the Address relating to [illegible] was then adopted as originally drawn up. In sitting of Saturday, Paragraph 13, stating that House expected from the Government [illegible] demanded by the constitution of the cases [illegible] of the state of siege in Galicia, was adopted Chamber, notwithstanding that the Minister of [illegible] had declared previously the motives and reasons [illegible] measure. The Minister said that the [illegible] could not at present be altered. Herren Von [illegible] Schmerling warmly opposed the idea that it was duty of the Government to make the statement the sitting of Monday the Czech members who had not yet appeared in the House sent in a document to the effect that they resigned the post to which their constituents had elected them. The debate on the Address was then continued. The Minister of [illegible] said the Government adhered to the principles expressed in the Address, and that the measures of the Government would prove that it recognised the necessity economy. Paragraphs from 14 to 18 of the Address were then adopted.

WURTEMBURG.—Passports have been abolished the Kingdom of Wurtemburg. Foreigners, however must be prepared to furnish proof of their [illegible] and nationality if called upon to do so.

ITALY.—In the sitting of the Senate on the General Della Marmora, in reply to some questions made by Signor Linati, declared that to Italian the best reception had been accorded him in France. All the senators who had been France could bear witness to the universal sympathy felt towards Italy in that country testified by the French press. The Minister Finance denied the rumour that the Bank of had ceased discounting bills. In the sitting of day General Della Marmora, in reply to Signor Galoagno, declined to give any explanation the existence of fresh documents relating to Convention. Signor San Martino opposed the tion, and said that the Venetian question precede that of Rome. If war were imposs Government should endeavour to restore the The Marquis d'Azeglio being unwell, sent favourable to the measure, which was read to the It expressed doubts whether the proclamation as the capital of Italy had served the interest nation. He desired Rome to be an Italian not the capital of Italy. Rome must not cease the seat of the Papacy. The moment of conflict had arrived. In the sitting of Monday the Minister the Interior said that so long as the temporal existed, the danger of foreign intervention removed. He said:—

"The temporal power is not necessary to the spiritual independence of the spiritual power. But this is a question; we have declared that it was necessary to the progress of civilisation, and to leave the Pope at his subjects, by which means the cessation of foreign tion would be obtained. This question can only be accord with France, the first of the Catholic Powers principle of a free Church in a free State the base exists. Under the Convention foreign intervention cease. Italy has an interest in repelling all foreign tending to support the temporal power. In the movement breaking out in Pontifical territory, Italy engage herself to repress it. The only engagement by her is not to attack or allow the Pontifical territory attacked. The Convention is, therefore, favourable policy. The transfer of the capital is not unattended convenience, but it will consolidate the dynasty and of Italy."

This speech was received with great applause. In sitting of Tuesday General Cialdini supported transfer of the capital from a strategic point of "No compromise," he said, "was possible between Austria and Italy; the passes of the Apennines real Thermopylæ." This speech was received applause. Signor Pallavicino opposed the Convention and was in favour of going to Rome and making Venetia. Signor Revel censured the Convention other motives, and considered the independence Poutifical temporal power necessary. General Marmora stated that he shared the views expressed General Cialdini. In the sitting of Wednesday Gallina said that the Convention ought to be notwithstanding its origin. The transfer of the was necessary; but it ought to be effected gradually AUSTRALIA.—The Melbourne Argus says that the first instalment of convicts, whose time has expired, have been reshipped to England.

UNITED STATES.—Accounts have at length been received from GenSherman. After evacuating Atlanta he set out on an expedition through Georgia to Augusta. His order of march, dated the 9th, directed his officers to forage liberally on the enemy's country, to enforce devastation, more or less relentless, according to the hostility they should meet, and to seize every negro who could be rendered serviceable. His army then branched off in two columns, one for Augusta direct, the other for Augusta by way of Macon and Milledgeville. The latter column, before proceeding to Augusta, was to destroy Macon and the Western Railroad, the National Armoury, and the Central Laboratory at Macon, and all property at Milledgeville, including the State Capitol, in which the Legislature of Georgia is now sitting. Leaving the Georgia Central Railway, it was then to join the other column at Augusta. This latter has already destroyed the Georgia State road from Atlanta to Carrington, 40 miles, and is continuing the war of devastation at Augusta. A general wreck is meditated, including the Confederate arsenal and the most extensive powder mills south. Their route after leaving Augusta is unknown, but Savannah, Beaufort, Charleston, and Lynchburg, are named. Such is the programme. It is stated that the Macon column had burnt Jonesborough, Griffin, Stone Mountain, Hillesborough, Monticello, Canton, and other Georgian towns, as well as everything in the line of march; and that General Cobb with 8000 militia met the Macon column at Jonesborough, 22 miles distant, and drove them back. The Washington papers also assert that Milledgeville, the capital of Georgia, together with a number of the State Legislature, have been captured by a detachment of cavalry, but this statement is discredited. The Richmond papers report Macon and Augusta as well fortified, and predict to Sherman a repetition of Burgoyne's defeat during the Revolution. Confederate journals of the 21st state that Sherman has crossed the Ocmulgee River, moving in the direction of Augusta. They also publish numerous exhortations from General Beauregard, the Richmond authorities, and leading citizens of Georgia, to the people of the State to remove or destroy on the line of Sherman's march all property which could in anywise benefit him, to burn bridges, obstruct roads, and to assail him in front, flank, and rear with any and all weapons at command. General Beauregard, who was at Corinth, Mississippi, on the 18th, concentrating a large force, had announced that he would speedily be with them and assist in their defence. The whole force of General Beauregard's department, including General Hood's army, is estimated at 65,000. Louisville despatches report that Hood has occupied Waynesborough, Tennessee, threatening both Pulaski and Nashville. They also state that Breckinridge, after driving Gillem into Knoxville, turned northwards, and on the 21st was at Powell's Bridge, on Rowell's River, within six miles of Cumberland Gap. General Burbridge, with a strong Federal force, has marched from Lexington, Kentucky, to oppose his advance. It is asserted from Washington that the greater part of Early's army has been drawn from the Shenandoah Valley to Richmond and Petersburg, to enable Lee to send an equal force from his army to oppose Sherman in Georgia. The Confederates are said to be mining extensively in front of Petersburg, and immense quantities of powder have been received there from the South. General Grant arrived in New York on the 17th ult., and left again for the field on the 21st. The object of his visit is unknown. An attempt was made on the 25th ult. to set fire to New York in nine places simultaneously—at Barnum's Museum and eight principal hotels. Little damage was done. Two persons, supposed to be Confederate emissaries, have been arrested. President Lincoln has proclaimed that the blockade at Norfolk in Virginia, and Fernandina and Pensacola in Florida, shall be raised, and these ports opened to domestic and foreign commerce on and after the 1st December, subject to the necessities of war. A careful correction of the enrolment lists has been ordered preparatory to a new draught throughout the Northern States. Some of the papers assert that Mr. Lincoln will not send peace commissioners to Richmond, and that he will announce the policy of his administration in his message to Congress. Vice-President Stephens has addressed a letter to Senator Semmes, of Louisiana, stating that he does not favour any convention of the States, as has been reported, unless the proposal for such a convention should come from the Federal Government. He adds that the old Union and constitution are dead for ever, except so far as the constitution has been preserved by the Confederacy. There is for the Union as it was no resurrection by any power short of that which brought Lazarus from the tomb. He concludes by stating that his views have not changed since 1861, that he then considered the issue before the South to be independence or subjugation, and that when Georgia seceded, he, in full consciousness of all prospective trials, sacrifices, and responsibilities, pledged himself to stand by her, and he should keep his pledge.

CANADA.—The Canadian authorities have forbidden the export of arms and ammunition, in consequence of having received information that the Southerners in the western cities of Canada were collecting shot, shell, and cannon at various points.

BRAZILS.—Hostile measures had been taken by the Brazilian authorities to enforce their claims on the Government of the Banda Oriental. The blockade of Montevideo by a Brazilian squadron has been declared, and a division of the Brazilian army has crossed the frontier, and advanced in the Oriental territory as far as Ceiro Largo. General Flores had appeared before Montevideo with 3000 men, but retired without attempting to take the city. The United States Minister at Rio, General Webb, has disavowed the proceedings of the Wachusetts in the port of Bahia, and has promised on the part of his Government that full satisfaction should be given to the Brazilian authorities. This promise was held worthy of little credit. Buenos Ayres continued to progress under the administration of General Mitre. Gold had been discovered in large quantities in San Juan, at the foot of the Cordillera Mountains. More than 500 ounces were obtained in nuggets in one day by two miners.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE PRINCE CONSORT MEMORIAL.—The Queen paid a visit to the site of this Memorial on Monday, and inspected the works preparing for the foundations. The sculpture for the Memorial will all be executed in Sicilian marble, of which the Marble Arch in Hyde Park is constructed, and which appears to stand externally in our climate better than any other description. Its colour is not pure white, but it is sufficiently so for external works. The larger works will be at the lower angles of the pyramid of steps, and the groups of figures will represent the four quarters of the world. Mr. M'Dowell has in hand the group of Europe, Mr. Foley has Asia; Africa has been confided to Mr. Theed, and America to Mr. John Bell. At each angle of the podium, and having a cluster of granite columns at the back, there is also a marble group, though somewhat smaller in dimensions. These groups are—Agriculture, which has been given to Mr. Calder Marshall; Manufactures, which Mr. Weeks has in hand; Commerce, which has been given to Mr. Thorneycroft; and Engineering, which is from the design of Mr. Lawlor. On the upper portion of the shrine will be figures of the Virtues, the Arts, and Sciences idealised, which are to be executed in Sicilian marble by Messrs. Philip and Armistead.

GENERAL POST OFFICE.—Preliminary notices have been issued to the several freeholders, householders, and occupiers of property and premises in Newgate Street, St. Martin's-le-Grand, Christopher Court, King's Head Court, Three Doves Passage, Angel Street, and Bath Street, Newgate Street, announcing the intention of the Post Office authorities to make an immediate application, in conformity with the standing orders of the House of Commons, for a Bill to extend the General Post Office to the west from St. Martin's-le-Grand to and inclusive of 75, Newgate Street and Bath Street. The extension has been rendered necessary by the pressing demands upon the controllers for more space, and the growing importance of the Savings Bank Department.

THE LATE MURDER OF MR. BRIGGS.—The Home Secretary has decided that the cabman Matthews is entitled to the whole of the reward of 300*l.* for giving information which led to the conviction of Müller for the murder of Mr. Briggs. The sum has been ordered to be paid to him in a few days. In the meanwhile he has been arrested for a debt of 30*l.* by one of his numerous small creditors, whose aggregate claims amount to 560*l.* Though the present claimant only demands 30*l.*, the others will, of course, lodge detainers against him, and a vesting order will be immediately obtained for the assignees to receive the money payable to him from the Government. He will thus not only enjoy no benefit whatever from the money, but before he can regain his liberty he will have to go through the Court of Bankruptcy for the remaining 260*l.* He is now confined in the debtors' side of Horsemonger Lane Gaol.

THE PROPOSED WIDENING OF PARK LANE.—A deputation of members of the Metropolitan Board of Works had an interview with Mr. Cowper on Monday to ask the assistance of the Government in carrying the proposed improvement of Park Lane into effect. Mr. Thwaites, the chairman, said that there were three ways in which the improvement might be carried out. One was that the carriages should pass out through the park gates into Piccadilly, and on the other side, that there should be an opening into Kensington, which could be done without inconvenience. It would be very desirable if such an arrangement could be made. Another plan was by the opening of Upper Hamilton Place, not for the purpose of allowing heavy traffic to pass that way, but for carriages and cabs. It would then become a question of widening Park Lane: but the property was of very great value, and there was no doubt one or two parties would be inconvenienced thereby—one of them being the Duke of Cambridge; but it would be a great relief and a public convenience. The Board of Works had, for the purpose of giving them a locus standi in the House of Commons, inserted advertisements in the papers, giving notice of their intention to carry out this improvement; but a portion of what would be required was Crown property. The First Commissioner said he was very glad to hear that the Board had taken up this subject earnestly, as there was a very great traffic down Park Lane, and he had heard of several serious accidents there. As regarded the remedy, he thought it would be useless to let cabs go one way and the heavy traffic continue to struggle up Park Lane. If a remedy was to be applied it should be a large and positive one, and not a partial one. There was a great objection to make Hyde Park Corner a centre for cab traffic; for on a summer's day people liked to stop about there and Rotten Row with their carriages, and it would greatly destroy the only open space if cabs were allowed to pass through the Park. He would certainly, in the execution of his duty, most strenuously oppose it. The Commissioners of Police would have their duties greatly increased if the traffic was allowed to pass through those arches. He thought that the expense of this improvement should be at once faced, and if the Metropolitan Board of Works was a very poor body, without any funds, they could then plead their poverty. He then came to the plan for widening Park Lane, which he thought would be too expensive. If they adopted the other alternative, that of opening Upper Hamilton Place, every facility would be given on the part of the Crown for that object.

ALTERATION OF STREET NAMES.—The Metropolitan Board of Works has abolished the names of King Street and Upper King Street, Bloomsbury, and ordered the whole line of thoroughfare from Russell Square to Holborn to be called Southampton Road. The name of Warwick Square, Kensington, is altered to Warwick Gardens. The names of St. Paul's Villas and Murray Villas, Camden Town, are abolished, and the whole line of thoroughfare called St. Paul's Road. The names of St. Stephen's Terrace and Hereford Terrace, Paddington, are abolished, and the whole line of thoroughfare called Hereford Road. The many subsidiary names in High Street and Newington Butts, extending from the Elephant and Castle to Penton Place, are abolished, and the line of thoroughfare is called Newington Butts. The whole line between Penton Place and Kennington Gate is to be called Kennington Park Road.

FINSBURY PARK.—At the meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works on Friday a sum of 45,652*l.* was ordered to be paid for the purchase of the land for the new park at Finsbury.

MEMORIAL TO MR. THACKERAY.—A bust of Mr. Thackeray, by Baron Marochetti, is to be placed in Westminster Abbey, close to the monument of Addison.

GREAT BURGLARY IN LOMBARD STREET.—On Monday a discovery was made of a robbery of bullion, bills of exchange, foreign notes, and other valuable securities, to a large amount, which is supposed to have been effected some time during Saturday or Sunday night, on the premises of Messrs. Baum & Co., long established in Lombard Street as bullion dealers and moneychangers. The manner in which the burglary appears to have been effected, and many of the attendant circumstances are mysterious, and at present baffle the most experienced of the city police. The premises are situated at the corner of Birchin Lane and Lombard Street. They are upon the ground floor, with cellars below, and the rest of the house, which is very large and lofty, is let out as offices to merchants and others. At night the whole house is in the charge of a respectable elderly woman, the widow of a sergeant of police, as housekeeper, and with her a niece and her husband reside, the three occupying the topmost story. A watch-dog has the run of the whole of the passages and staircases at nights, and is accustomed to bark on the slightest unusual noise. He was found on Monday morning with a strap, which had been used in tying up some of the securities that had been stolen, hanging loosely round his neck, but he was still going at large about the house, and the circumstance of the strap, inexplicable itself, unless used in restraining the animal, which would only have made him the more noisy, is one of the mysterious incidents connected with the robbery. Messrs. Baum closed their premises for the night on Saturday evening about 9 o'clock. They had then in their iron safe, securely locked to all appearance, and enclosed in a strong-room equally well secured, a large amount of foreign coin, English, foreign, and colonial notes, certificates for shares, foreign bonds, bills of exchange, 57 gold and 37 silver watches. On Monday morning, at 9 o'clock, one of the partners in the firm opened the premises, and shortly afterwards went to the strong-room, accompanied by a boy with a lighted candle. The room is guarded by double doors with formidable locks. On applying his key to the lock of the outer door he found that the scutcheon had been torn off and the lock itself had been tampered with. Looking round a corner of the room he discovered that a hole about 18 inches square, and large enough to admit a boy of ordinary size, had been cut through the wall where there had formerly been a door, and an entrance thus made into the room. The iron safe was open, three of the locks of the inner door of the room had been wrenched off, empty cashboxes were strewn about, and the place was in disorder in other respects. The way in which the iron safe appeared to have been opened was inexplicable. The door had been removed from its hinges, but although four formidable crowbars were lying about, there was no mark visible about the iron to show that any of them had been used in prizing it open, nor were there any indications of recent use on the crowbars themselves. Not only had the door of the safe been removed by the hinges, but a most formidable lock inside of it had been broken in pieces, and its wards scattered about. The safe was completely empty, and a couple of morticing chisels, such as are used by joiners, and the points of which had been broken off, on the floor. How the thieves got into the premises remains to be explained. The street door, which is common to the whole house, opens into a passage, on the right-hand of which is a door communicating with the counting-house of Messrs. Baum. The street door cannot be unlocked from the outside. It is in two halves, opening inwards, and at night is secured by bolts and crossbars on the inside, there being no lock either on the outside or inside. A person leaving the house after it had been closed for the night might remove the crossbars and bolts from the street door, but he could not fasten the door after him, and a passing policeman would probably soon find that it was open as he went his round. To prevent such a discovery the thieves had recourse to an extraordinary expedient. Before leaving they actually screwed a spring latch inside the door, and on closing the door behind them as they passed out it fastened itself on the inner side, and so presented afterwards the appearance from the outside of being secure. The robbery and the mystery which hangs about it have excited a good deal of interest in the city. The Messrs. Baum have been in business in Lombard Street for 30 or 40 years, and their loss is estimated at about 3000*l.* They have offered a reward of 700*l.*, of which 200*l.* will be given to any person who shall, within three months, furnish such information as shall lead to the apprehension of the thieves, and 500*l.* for such information as shall, within the same period, lead to the recovery of the stolen property, or a proportionate part of that sum, according to the amount recovered. The housekeeper and her nephew and niece, who are reported to be respectable people, are unable to give any explanation of the affair. They live at the top of the house, five or six stories from the basement, and had not been disturbed either on Saturday or Sunday night. The dog had barked a good deal at one part of the night, but that was not at all an unusual circumstance.

CHARGE OF FRAUD AGAINST AN OFFICER IN THE GUARDS.—A few days since Mr. Arthur Boyle Wilbraham, formerly an officer in the Coldstream Guards, was charged at the Marlborough Street Police Court with obtaining on false pretences large quantities of valuable jewellery from two of the leading West End firms, Mr. Emanuel and Mr. Hancock. After hearing the evidence, the magistrate said that if the accused had not recently become a bankrupt these proceedings would never have been heard of; but it was a case of such importance that he must send it to a jury. The evidence respecting the property of Mr. Hancock was postponed for a week, the defendant being committed on the charge preferred by Mr. Emanuel, moderate bail being accepted for his reappearance. On Wednesday Mr. Wilbraham was again brought before the Court on the charge preferred by Mr. Hancock, when it was stated by the lawyers on both sides that in the interval both firms had been privately settled with, and that Mr. Hancock declined to go on with the charge, while Mr. Emanuel wished to withdraw from his. The magistrate, however, decided that as Mr. Emanuel had already entered into recognizances to prosecute, he had no power to interfere, and that the case must now be determined at the quarter sessions.

GENERAL TOM THUMB.—After having visited nearly all the sights of London, General Tom Thumb and his wife and family have left town for Paris, where they will remain for a short time.

MR. SPURGEON.—It is stated that Mr. Spurgeon has deliberately renounced the title of "Reverend," and that he no longer desires to be so addressed.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—The Lord Chancellor has issued another order in Bankruptcy, appointing Mr. W. S. Ayrton, of Leeds, and Mr. R. P. Harding, of London, to investigate and examine the books and accounts of the official assignees and messengers of the London Court, and to report to his lordship, at the close of their investigations, both as to the facts, and as to what system, in their opinion, will best conduce to accuracy.

BALLOON ASCENT.—Mr. Coxwell, accompanied by Mr. Glaisher, F.R.S., ascended on Friday, under the sanction of the War Department, from Woolwich Arsenal in the military balloon "Mars" for the purpose of commencing a series of winter observations. The ascent was necessarily confined to a moderate elevation. The inflation consumed about 30,000 cubic feet of gas, and was completed at half-past 2, when, Mr. Glaisher having adjusted his instruments at the head of the car, the balloon was liberated, and proceeded towards the south-east, where it was visible for a considerable time in the direction of Gravesend. The weather was highly favourable.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended on Saturday, December 3, were 1624. The average number in the corresponding week of the previous years, corrected for increase of population, was 1558. The present return is therefore 86 above the average. Bronchitis was fatal in 234 cases. The corrected average was 210. During the week the births of 1016 boys and 947 girls, in all 1963 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854—63 the average number was 1939.

BIRMINGHAM.— A public meeting was held in the Town Hall, on Tuesday evening, Lord Leigh, Lord Lieutenant of Warwickshire, in the chair, when the prizes offered for competition by the members of the 1st Administrative battalion of Warwickshire Volunteers during the past season were distributed to the winners. The formal presentation of the prizes was, at the request of Colonel Mason, undertaken by Sir John Pakington, who spoke as follows on the occasion :—

"He considered it due to the volunteers of Birmingham that he should appear among them in the uniform of that which he considered appropriately term a sister service—the Yeomanry Cavalry of England. That force, the Yeomanry Cavalry, was the only one in which the volunteer system was applied to cavalry, becoming like a permanent auxiliary force in aid of the regular army for the defence of the country. Towards the close of the last century our Yeomanry Cavalry regiments were established, and they had been carried on steadily from that time to the present. He felt sure his noble friend the Lord Lieutenant would not suppose that he intended to traverse debatable ground if he made to him the appeal which he was about to make. He appealed to the noble lord, then, in two capacities—as an honourable and consistent supporter of the present Administration, but still more as an active and highly-esteemed lord lieutenant of an English county. He ventured to appeal to him in order to induce his lordship to use his influence with his friends in high places to cause them to cease their constant attacks upon the yeomanry of England. The force had nothing whatever to do with politics there. He did not think that the question had anything to do with politics. For his own part, he dealt not with politics, but with facts. He was now a public man of some years' standing; he had been in Parliament for a great many years, and in the course of the last thirty years, time after time had the friends of Lord Palmerston first hit out one fist and then the other fist to try if they could not knock down the yeomanry of England. The last of these attempts was made no further back than the month of August last; but the vitality of the yeomanry was most extraordinary. They had survived all these attacks, and he did not think his noble friend could take a course more worthy his high position or more befitting his high character than if instead of coming in Downing Street he would just whisper into the ears of his friends, "You had better leave the yeomanry of England alone." He looked upon the yeomanry as the right arm force of the great volunteer service of this country. At the same time he saw that lamented statesman, the late Lord Herbert of Lea, whose loss was deplored equally by men of all parties, Lord Herbert said there was one point upon which he had long made up his mind—that the volunteer principle could not be carried out with cavalry. The volunteer principle, according to his lordship, was very good for infantry, but for cavalry it would be too costly. They were aware there had been one or two instances of volunteer troops of cavalry; but those were exceptional cases, and no doubt Lord Herbert was quite right in the opinion that the volunteer principle could not be applied to cavalry on account of the costly nature of the force. But although the volunteer principle could not be applied in its entirety to cavalry, the yeomanry was never-theless the cavalry of the volunteer force; and, speaking for himself, he considered any Government that undervalued the services of the yeomanry of England made a great mistake. By way of illustration, he instanced the late strike of colliers in the South Staffordshire district, and observed that while that strike lasted there was great dissatisfaction, and very just dissatisfaction, in various districts which were stripped of the police force—the police being brought together in the districts to preserve order. He thought that the Government were perfectly right in appealing to the police in the first instance to interfere in case of any disturbance of the public peace, but when that disturbance of the public peace was continued for any lengthened period, it was injudicious and highly improper to take away from various parts of the country the force intended for the detection of crime and the preservation of the public peace, and to concentrate it for a long period in the one district which happened to be disturbed. He admitted that from the advance of education and the advance of more civilised habits on the part of the industrial classes, there was reason to hope that these disturbances of the public peace would be more rare than they had been in former times; but he held that if the yeomanry had been called out, instead of the police, during the late unfortunate strike in the colliery districts, the strike would have been much sooner than it did. He then proceeded to remark upon the political and social value of the volunteer force, and more especially, its utility in bringing public men of various parties into union for a common object."

CARNARVON.—The movement for the erection of a Welsh university is progressing favourably, and a large sum has already been subscribed towards the national fund of 50,000*l.* proposed to be raised prior to an appeal to the Government. Public meetings have been held in the principal towns of Wales and the adjoining counties, as well as in Manchester, Liverpool, London, &c., and the promoters expect that by next summer the whole of the 50,000*l.* will be fully subscribed.

DEAL.—Lord Clarence Paget addressed his constituents in this town on Friday evening, and made the following remarks on the state of the navy, and especially on the recent criticisms on the proceedings of the Admiralty in reference to the Royal Sovereign and the Victoria :—

"With regard to naval expenditure it had been his earnest endeavour to watch over, control, and limit it; and if any gentleman should ask him why he was not oftener amongst them paying them his personal respects, his answer must be that he was watching over their naval expenditure. That expenditure had been reduced very considerably within the last two or three years. Yet the naval estimates had amounted to no less a sum than 12,750,000*l.* The estimates for the present year were something like 10,750,000*l.*, showing a reduction of 2,000,000*l.* He spoke not out of disrespect to any previous government, but if he were asked why this enormous expenditure had been necessary he must frankly reply that in the year when the present government came into office the navy of this country was not in a satisfactory state. We had neither the quantity of ships, nor had we the number of men, which it was absolutely necessary we should maintain if we at the same time desired that England should maintain her position as a great naval power. The consequence had undoubtedly been an enormous expenditure, but the result of that expenditure was that we had now, either built or in various degrees of construction, no less than thirty armour-plated ships. Now, when he talked of thirty ships it was perhaps not easy to realise what that represented in money, but when he reminded them that each of our armour-plated ships cost nearer half a million than a quarter of a million, some idea would be formed of the expenditure which had been necessary in constructing our armour-plated fleet. They would remember perfectly well that in those days, some four years ago, we used to suffer from a sort of chronic panic. We used to hear that the country was utterly unfit to repel invasion, that we had neither ships nor troops, and that we were in fact at the mercy of any nation who chose to invade us or to insult our flag. We did not hear of these things now. Englishmen did not now express their apprehension of danger from invasion or insult, and he therefore asked whether he might not fairly claim continued confidence on this score in her Majesty's government." The noble lord then spoke of Mr. Cobden's views as expressed in his recent speech at Rochdale, and continued—"It was his fortune during the past session of parliament to be called on by the House of Commons to state, as chairman of a very important committee—that committee being appointed to inquire into the dock accommodation existing in our dockyards, in the country generally, and in the colonies—that our dock accommodation was wholly insufficient for the wants of the navy. It was true that it was his duty as chairman to frame the report of that committee, yet he nevertheless could not subscribe to every paragraph it contained, for he thought they were apt, when they went into inquiries upon these important matters, to forget that we had vast private establishments in this country which might always be counted upon, in the event of an emergency, both for repairing and docking our ships. Nevertheless he was bound to say that the evidence the committee received, and the conclusion to which they came, showed that the dock and basin accommodation for her Majesty's navy was insufficient for its wants. He alluded to this fact because he wished to put frankly before his audience what had been done and what had been left undone. He quite admitted that it required very great exertions on the part of the public to put our great naval establishments into the position which was befitting and necessary for the navy, and therefore in stating that which he now did he was sure they would believe that the estimates to be submitted to parliament for the maintenance of her Majesty's navy would be framed with the utmost regard to economy, although the views of Mr. Cobden with regard to sweeping reductions would not be entertained. Indeed, they must expect, and he was sure when they came to be acquainted with the details they would justify the government in proposing, a considerable increase in the votes for dock and basin accommodation. He had adverted generally to the policy of the government, both with regard to foreign affairs and with regard to the navy, and he now wished to allude to some points which would be interesting, more especially to the naval officers and friends he saw around him. A great many criticisms had been given out to the public with regard to the action of the Admiralty upon several matters to which he would briefly allude. He had told them the government was maintaining a very large force, indeed something like 75,000 men, yet they had doubtless read that in spite of this the admiralty had had difficulty in manning our ships. There was possibly not a corner of the country that had not been alarmed within the last few weeks by a report that there had been great difficulty in manning our line of battle ship Victoria. It was stated by one of the leading newspapers a few weeks ago, and the statement had occasioned considerable alarm, that great difficulty had been found in manning the Victoria three-decker, now fitting as a flag ship in the Mediterranean, and that the Admiralty, in order to make up her complement, had unmanned other ships, so averse were the seamen of this country to serve in her Majesty's navy. Now he would tell them what was really the fact. The Victoria was commissioned on the 2nd of November last. As soon as her officers had joined, orders were given to complete her complement, which was done in forty-eight hours, the only vacancies remaining in the ship being for five shipwrights. He was told the other day that the crew of the Victoria had been got together from the scum of society, and that they were not a real man-of-war's crew. He had, however, taken great pains to examine the report of the commander in chief at Portsmouth, who inspected the ship, and his report of the ship's company was this—'A good ship's company, and above the average in appearance and quality; clean and well clothed.' He desired to allude to one more point concerning naval administration. The recent experiments which had been made in gunnery, and likewise with regard to armour-plating had been watched with considerable interest. Among other systems, one had engaged public attention to a great extent—he meant the turret system. A very intelligent officer of the navy had brought this system to considerable perfection on board the Royal Sovereign, and many interesting trials had taken place during the past summer. Now he found it was generally supposed that there was a prejudice at the Admiralty against the turret system, and that consequently the Royal Sovereign was destined to be laid upon the shelf and kept out of the view of the public, Nothing could be more fallacious than this idea. It gave him sincere pleasure to state that as far as experience had gone in the working of the turret system, that system was a great success. It had been found that various difficulties which were anticipated by many vanished in practice. He was one of those who had always been very sanguine that this system of naval defence would take a high place in this country, and he had every reason to be equally sanguine now. But with respect to the Royal Sovereign, her own captain, one of the most distinguished officers of the navy, reported that although the turret system in his opinion, and in the opinion of all on board, worked most satisfactorily, the Royal Sovereign, as she was not sufficiently a cruising ship for sea-going purposes, the utmost that could be expected of her was that she should be used for the protection of our coast, or, in an emergency, sent to the Mediterranean. Under these circumstances the Admiralty thought it would be unwise to keep this ship in commission, as it was evident she could not fulfil all the conditions of a sea-going ship, but with the view and the earnest desire of carrying out fully experiments in this system they were making modifications in various matters of detail. Some accidents undoubtedly occurred to the ship. Her hawse holes were damaged, and in various other respects she required repair, but he could only say that the moment she was ready she would be put to sea. He would add one more word on the subject. So impressed were the Admiralty with the success of the turrets so far as they had worked, that they had now under consideration the conversion of one of our large armour plated ships which were now in course of construction into a ship upon the turret system."

DEVONPORT.—Another fire broke out on Saturday in the pitch-house in the Dockyard by the ignition of the boiling pitch. An engine was speedily on the spot, and the fire was extinguished in a very short time. The roof of the house, which is a small stone detached building, was, however, destroyed, and the house gutted.

DEWSBURY.—On Saturday Miss Martha Jane Gledhill, milliner, of Mirfield, near this town, the daughter of a widow who owns some landed property in that village, was brought before a magistrate, on remand, charged with having set fire to a stack of Wheat, the property of Mr. R. Hurst, maltster. The hearing lasted nearly eight hours. The evidence was to the effect that Mr. Hurst, who is the owner of some maltkilns built on land adjoining Mrs. Gledhill's property, claims a right of way over an occupation road which passes through one of her fields, and on the 10th ult., acting under legal advice, he set some men to work to dig up some chained posts which opposed the free passage of his carts, and with a horse dragged them away. Mrs. Gledhill, with the prisoner and another of her daughters, were present while this was done, and it was alleged that the prisoner made use of threats to the effect that she would stab Mr. Hurst, would be revenged upon him, and if she had a pistol she would shoot him. She returned home and made her appearance again, dressed in black, with a broad-brimmed hat of the same colour. She went towards a lane leading to Mr. Hurst's house and stackyard; a woman resembling her was seen in the lane itself immediately afterwards, and subsequently she was met on a path not far from the stacks—a foot-path, however, which did not lead to them. In a very short time a wheat stack standing close to the side of the lane into which the path runs was observed to be on fire at the part most easily accessible to a passenger that way, and was utterly destroyed, though the other produce in the yard was saved. A number of witnesses were examined for the defence, but their evidence failed to convince the Bench of the prisoner's innocence, and she was committed for trial at the assizes. Bail, however, was accepted.

DURHAM.—The fine old church of Sherburn Hospital, near this city, was entirely destroyed by fire on Sunday morning. The fire was discovered by the daughter of the Rev. J. Carr, the master, about three o'clock, when she was disturbed by hearing a crackling noise, and on looking through the window of her chamber in the master's residence she saw flames bursting through the roof of the church, which was close adjoining, and the whole edifice seemed to be in flames. Messengers were at once sent to Durham for the fire-engines, and the brigade was on the spot within an hour; but, from the mastery the flames had attained, it was found impossible to save the church, which is now little better than a blackened ruin. The fire seems to have originated through the overheating of the flue attached to the warming apparatus, the brickwork of which appears to have become red hot, and the fire had communicated with the wooden panelling of the wall in the north aisle immediately above. The church was beautifully fitted up; the sittings were open and of oak. The edifice was of pure Norman architecture, and was supposed to be coeval with the hospital, which was founded between the years 1181 and 1184. Five years ago the church was much damaged by fire, and was restored during the mastership of Archdeacon Prest. Most of the monuments of the old masters of the hospital are destroyed by this fire, and one of great beauty, to the memory of the late master, Dr. Faber, is burnt into small fragments. The tower, as well as the body of the church, is completely gutted. A new building for the inmates of the hospital has recently been erected at a cost of 14,000*l.* Fortunately the wind blew the flames away from this building and the master's residence, and both are uninjured.

FALMOUTH.—On Wednesday, the 30th ult., Albert Julius Wilhelm Rudolff, a native of Stettin, in Prussia, and a sailor on board the Bremen brig Germania, now lying in this harbour, was committed for trial on the verdict of a coroner's jury for the wilful murder of a young man named William Gibbins, aged 19, a fishmonger of Penryn. From the evidence it appeared that at about 11 o'clock on the previous Saturday night the prisoner and several shipmates, who had been drinking in company with the deceased, were turned out of the inn, it being closing time. A quarrel had previously taken place between the prisoner and deceased, and soon after getting into the street deceased was stabbed in the left breast, and almost immediately expired. On medical examination it was found that he had received a wound from a sharp instrument which penetrated the heart, and was 3¼ inches to 4 inches deep. The prisoner was traced on board the Germania by a constable, who found him sitting on a chest in the deckhouse; his coat and trousers were very wet. He admitted that he had been in town, but denied that he had been fighting or had a knife with him. On being asked where the knife was, he replied that he had let it fall overboard two days ago. He accounted for his clothes being wet by saying he had fallen into the water when coming on board. The constable then saw the prisoner put his foot on the chest on which he had been sitting, and pass something from under the leg of his trousers, which proved to be a knife and sheath. The blade of the knife was 5 inches long, and was smeared with blood. Several witnesses gave evidence as to the affray, one of whom swore that he saw the prisoner run away directly after deceased had been stabbed. On Saturday the mayor and magistrate fully committed the prisoner to take his trial at the next assizes for Wilful Murder.

FOLKESTONE.—Two girls were killed on Sunday afternoon on the line of rails between Dover and this town, on the South-Eastern Railway. They had been visiting their parents at the Pelter coast-guard station, and on their return were walking along the line, when the mail train came up, and before it could be stopped, ran over both, killing them on the spot. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

HARTLEPOOL.—On Wednesday week, as a large number of workmen were about to cross to their work in a ferry boat, a brig towed by a steamboat crushed the boat against the pier. Upwards of 30 persons were thrown into the water, and five of them are believed to have been drowned.

HERTFORD.—On Saturday a young man, called George Savage, was charged before the magistrates at the Town Hall, with robbing and attempting to murder Mr. Joseph Barker, farmer, on the highway, near Hertford, on the evening of the 29th October. The prisoner is a mere stripling in appearance, but his features show great resolution. Mr. Barker, who had not been out of doors since the night of the assault, was brought in a cab to the Town Hall. His head was still bandaged, and he was so extremely weak that he had to pause in giving his evidence, and to take wine before he could proceed. He gave a very clear account of the whole occurrence, and positively identified the prisoner as the man who attacked him. He had known and employed him, but had lost sight of him for about four years; but he, nevertheless, recognised him as his former servant by his voice and his step, though it was not light enough to distinguish his features. Mr. Barker said he was going home along the secluded avenue known as Morgan's Walk, about half a mile from Hertford, a little after 6 o'clock in the evening, when he overtook the prisoner, and spoke to him. After that the prisoner fell back, and then suddenly struck him from behind with something very heavy, like lead. He fell down upon the grass on the side of the road, but got up again on one knee, when the prisoner instantly knocked him down again. He got up on his knees twice again, but was knocked down each time, and then became insensible. When he recovered consciousness no one was near him, and he got up and crawled home as well as he was able. He was at this time bleeding so profusely that the impression on his mind was that some one had been throwing water over him. The coat worn by Mr. Barker at the time was produced; it was completely soaked with blood. The prosecutor described the dress worn by the prisoner, a low-crowned round hat, and a longish brown coat, on the left sleeve of which there appeared to be a dab of paint. The prisoner's hat and coat were produced, and found to answer the description. There was a hole in the left sleeve of the coat, through which the white lining showed. In answer to a question from the prisoner, who cross-examined him very sharply, the prosecutor said he could identify him more certainly now than when he was brought to his bedside, because at that time he was very weak. Mr. Odell, surgeon, of Hertford, described the nature of the injuries. He said he counted nine distinct wounds, caused by as many different blows. There was a blow on the side of each eye, and other blows at the back of the neck, and below the right ear. The most serious wound was on the top of the head, at the left side, and appeared to have been caused by a succession of blows, perhaps 20, which had fallen precisely on the same spot. The instrument used must have been a heavy blunt instrument—he believed a loaded stick, because wherever a blow had been struck there was a mark about the size of a nut. Mr. Barker's life was for a long time in the greatest danger. Much corroborative evidence was given, and the prisoner, who declined to say anything in defence, was committed for trial at the assizes on the charges of highway robbery and attempt to murder.

LIVERPOOL.—The Corporation of this town have taken counsel's opinion as to whether they were legally empowered to buy recreation grounds, or give their estates to the borough for that purpose. Mr. Rolt, Q.C., and another eminent barrister have given the opinion that the corporation have "no legal power, either to purchase property out of the borough fund, or to appropriate portions of their real estate" for the formation of public parks.

MAIDENHEAD. — Frederick Croft, alias William Smith, was again brought before the magistrates on Monday, on the charge of having murdered the old woman who kept the lodge at Sunning Hill Park near Old Windsor. The principal witness on this occasion was a Scripture Reader named Margaret Mayrick, who said that on Sunday morning after the murder she saw a man and woman quarrelling, and heard the woman charge the man with being a murderer. She did not hear what the man said in reply. She could not swear that the prisoner was the man, but to the best of her belief he was. The prisoner was again remanded to Wednesday, but as there was no further evidence forthcoming, and as the magistrates did not consider that the evidence already given was sufficient to warrant his commitment, they ordered him to be discharged from custody.

MANCHESTER.—Mr. Maclure, hon. secretary to the Central Executive Committee, issued the monthly report on Wednesday. It says that there was a partial revival of employment in the mills in the month of November, which has been still further increased during the past week. During the recent crisis in the trade of the district, viz., in the months of September, October, and November, no less than 120 manufacturers and spinners, chiefly the former, have suspended payment, their liabilities being estimated at about 750,000*l.*, and nearly 24,000 operatives have in consequence for a time lost their ordinary employment. Mr. Justice Blackburn, in his charge to the grand jury at the Manchester Assizes on Thursday, mentioned, as a highly gratifying fact, that there was not a single charge in the calendar connected with any of the distressed factory operatives.

PLYMOUTH.—A court-martial has been sitting for some days for the trial of Commander George Dogherty Broad, inspecting commander of coast-guard at Queenstown, on a charge made by Lieut. Marsden, in charge of the Roche Point station, that the prisoner had by written orders caused false entries to be made in the journals of Roche Point station, by directing that night visits should be recorded in the said journals as having been made by him on various occasions, whereas no such visits had been made, such conduct being in breach of the 20th and 24th articles of war. The Court was occupied the whole of Monday and Tuesday in hearing the evidence for the prosecution, and then adjourned to Wednesday to give the prisoner time to prepare his defence. The defence began on the latter day, and the prisoner, after noticing the amount of personal ill-feeling entertained by the prosecutor as the cause of the charge, endeavoured to show that he had in every way carried on the regulations of the service as an officer and a gentleman. The Court on Thursday decided that the charges were partly proved, and sentenced the prisoner to be admonished.

STRATFORD-ON-AVON.—The local papers state that in the offices of a firm of Birmingham solicitors, whose names at present they are not at liberty to publish, some dozen important deeds, including conveyances, grants, leases, &c., have been discovered relating to property adjoining Shakespeare's House in Henley Street, on the east side. These deeds bear dates from 1573 to about 1660. John Shakespeare, the father of the poet, was present at the signature of several, and the name of William Shakespeare himself is repeated a few times in some of them. The deeds are in excellent preservation; and the seals are in an unusually perfect condition. It is said that the seal attached to some of these deeds is likely to lead to some very interesting discoveries, and to throw considerable light on our known Shakespearean relics.

SOUTHAMPTON.—A cold-blooded murder was committed on Saturday night at the village of Shirley, about two miles from this town, followed immediately by the attempted suicide of the assassin. The murderer's name is Broomfield, formerly a butler in a gentleman's family in London, and his victim was Mrs. Coburn, now resident at Shirley. It appears that they formerly lived together in a family at Alresford, as butler and lady's-maid, and that Broomfield had paid her attention which she did not return, though she was not aware that he was a married man. She subsequently married from that situation, and Broomfield left and went to London, where he has since resided. On Saturday afternoon he came down from London by the 3 o'clock train, and went over at once to deceased's house at Shirley, where he was invited to take tea. After tea Mr. Coburn said to his wife that they had better go out and do their marketing, as it was Saturday evening, on which Broomfield said, "Well, don't go out and leave me here alone, but if you go your wife had better stop here with me." This was objected to, and they went out together, leaving Broomfield alone. After they had been back a little, while Mrs. Coburn was about to get supper, her husband left the room for a few moments, when Broomfield pulled out a revolver and fired at her. The wound was mortal, and as she ran to the back door she fell dead. He then fired two of the barrels at himself, and ran after her, falling on her at the back door. He was subsequently removed to the Infirmary, in this town, where it was found that one of the shots passed under his lungs, and the first apparently passed off from the chest without doing any serious injury. He is not expected to recover. Broomfield himself says that he came down from London to get Mrs. Coburn to go away to America with him, which she refused to do. He says that he did it all for love, and nothing else. The murder must have been deliberately planned in case of Mrs. Coburn's refusal to accede to his request, as he took the revolver down with him from London, having, it is said, purchased it at a shop in Oxford Street. Two shots were found in two of the barrels of the revolver after the affair. At the inquest on Monday the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against Broomfield.

SWANSEA.—About two years ago a young woman, named Jane Lewis, was brutally murdered on her way to chapel on a Sunday evening, near the village of Cwm Ystrad, in the Rhondda valley. Suspicion fell at the time on a young man named Thomas Williams, who was known to be paying his addresses to the deceased, and was jealous of a collier, for whom the girl had shown a preference. He was therefore apprehended and committed for trial on the charge of murder. He was tried at the Glamorganshire assizes, but the evidence being incomplete, the jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty. Williams has just died, and a few hours before his death he made a full confession that he was the murderer of Jane Lewis, his former sweetheart.

WALSALL.—On Monday afternoon a lock-maker in this town, named Thomas Dobson, attempted to murder his wife, and afterwards cut his own throat. It appears that he had gone home in a state of intoxication, and requested his wife to give him money to sell in order to purchase drink, and on her refusing to comply with his request, he slipped behind her, stabbed her in the throat with a pocket-knife, ran into a neighbour's house and gave the alarm, and on her returning, she found her husband cutting his throat with a razor. There were two wounds in the throat, but neither of them were serious. The wound on the wife's throat was about three-quarters of an inch long, and rather deep, but no serious results are apprehended.

WEYMOUTH.—On Tuesday a telegram arrived stating that several hundred convicts had broken loose from Portland Island, caused great excitement at Weymouth, and a large body of military was despatched to quell them. On their arrival it was found that their services were not required, for in fact, no mutiny had occurred, the alarm having been caused by wrong signals having been given. It appears that a convict had attempted to escape, but was captured before the military arrived. When a convict is missing it is usual to make signals informing the warders of what has occurred, but instead of this, wrong ones were made. Hence the alarm, which was not only felt in Weymouth, but for miles around.

WINDSOR.—During the Queen's inspection of the barracks of the Coldstream Guards on Saturday her Majesty paid a visit to Mrs. Creagh, the regimental sergeant-major's wife, who has recently been confined. On Tuesday a letter was received by the colonel commanding the battalion, stating that the Queen, having heard that the child was yet unbaptised, desired that it might be named Victoria Alberta, in commemoration of her Majesty's visit to the barrack. With the letter a cheque for 5*l.* was forwarded, as a present from her Majesty to Mrs. Creagh.

THE BELFAST COMMISSION closed on Wednesday. It has sat for 22 days, during which time 33 witnesses have been examined. In announcing the close of the inquiry, Mr. Barry said that when the report appeared it would be found that the Commissioners had acted throughout "without fear, favour, or affection."

OUTRAGE IN THE COUNTY OF WICKLOW.—On Monday week an outrage of a very serious character took place in the hitherto peaceable county of Wicklow. An armed party, consisting of five men, with their faces blackened, entered through a window the house of the Rev. Henry Marshall, rector of Carnew, the rev. gentleman being absent at the time. The party at once proceeded to the kitchen, where they presented pistols at four of the servants, ordering them to turn their faces to the wall. Two of the men were then placed guard over them, while the remainder searched the house. After this they returned to the kitchen, and forced the servants into a small room which they locked, but before doing so they gave each of the servants a book, and swore them not to divulge what passed. Two men, named Dunn and Connor, were subsequently arrested and identified by the servants as having been of the party. The motive of this outrage is not known, but it is difficult to believe it was robbery, as they took nothing from the house excepting a small piece of bacon and a few bottles of porter.

OUTRAGE IN KING'S COUNTY.—On Wednesday a party of four men, two of whom were armed, knocked at the door of John Molloy, a bailiff, who lives about two miles from Tullamore, and having obtained admittance one of them presented a pistol at Molloy's wife, at the same time demanding firearms. The woman entreated them not to shoot her, and her cries having aroused her husband, who was lying in a bed in an adjoining room, he armed himself with a double-barrelled gun and went to the door, which the party were trying to force, and fired on them. One of the gang cried out that he was shot, upon which they all fled from the house, and there is no doubt that some of them were wounded, as drops of blood were seen on the ground where they were standing when fired at by Molloy. Robbery of arms would appear to be the motive of this outrage.

MURDER IN TYRONE.—A few days since Mr. White, a farmer, was returning from Castlederg, accompanied by Samuel Johnstone, another farmer, when they were attacked by five men, who severely beat them, breaking Johnstone's nose and jawbone, and fracturing White's skull behind the ear, from the effects of which he has since died. The brother of the latter identified two of the party, named Neil and Patrick Maguire, brothers, who have absconded. Where they taken some legal proceedings against the Maguires, and this is supposed to have been the motive for the murder.

MURDER AND SUICIDE AT SEA.—The captain of the Alciope, arrived at Queenstown, reports that on the night of the 2d November, the mate and cook were attacked and murdered by two of the Frenchmen. One of them afterwards attacked the captain while asleep in the cabin, and struck him with a hammer on the forehead. He, however, managed to escape. One of the murderers committed suicide, and the other died.

Material organs are merely the special forms …fashioned by the vital forces—whatever these …—for the discharge of special functions. And it is well …to remark that some of the most clear and striking …ations of this truth are to be found in some of the lowest …of life revealed to us only by the microscope. Professor …and Dr. Carpenter both refer to the Foraminifera, in …the most beautiful and complicated forms of shell are …by the vital force working in creatures composed of …ay, without parts, without structure, without organs …ad. Thus, the deeper we go in science, the more …becomes that all the realities of nature are in the …of the invisible; so that the saying is literally true that …things which are seen are temporal, and it is only the …which are not seen that are eternal. Surely if this is …, it is materialism spiritualised. These doctrines …be rather to bring into the strict domain of science …ion, in the earlier stages of human knowledge, lay …within the region of faith or of belief. For example, …writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews specially declares that …by faith that we understand that 'the things which …were not made of the things which do appear.' Yet …now one of the most assured doctrines of science, that …forces are above and behind all visible phenomena, …them in forms of infinite variety, of all which forms …real knowledge which we possess lies in our percep… …of beauty and fitness—in short, of their being all the …to co-operant to an end." Creation by law means …their creative force directed by creative knowledge …all under the control of creative power, and in fulfilment …creative purpose."

The Yelverton Marriage Case.—This case was …on Saturday at the First Division of the Court of …for the purpose of hearing parties on the motion …Major Yelverton to apply the judgment of the …House of Lords, and on the counter motion of Mrs. Long… …worth Yelverton to supersede consideration of the …defender's motion, and allow a condescendence of res …noviter (a statement of new matter) to be added to the …record and remitted to proof. It may be necessary to …explain that the House of Lords in giving judgment on …appeals remits it to the Court below to apply …to carry out the judgment, and to grant the extract …brings it into operation. On the meeting of the …Court for the Winter Session the defender petitioned …the application of the judgment, and the pursuer for …leaving new evidence. By the pursuer's motion …the question is now raised whether the duty …of the Court below is purely ministerial or …to some extent discretionary. The pursuer prae… …asks the inferior Court to suspend the …judgment of the Court above, and reopen the whole …case. Mr. J. Campbell Smith, for Mrs. Yelverton, …opposed the application of the judgment, and asked …that the consideration of the motion should be delayed …until the question regarding the res noviter is dis… …posed of. Mr. Gordon, for Major Yelverton, contended …that the judgment of the House of Lords could not be …set aside by the new matter put forward, which, …besides, the petitioner might have procured before …judgment was given. The Lord Advocate replied that …the allegations if proved were sufficient to reduce the …judgment, and they were therefore sufficient to entitle …the pursuer to interpose before judgment was applied. …After a long argument the Lord President stated that …judgment would be given next week.

The Scottish Sabbath.—On Tuesday, the 29th ult., a public meeting was held in Queen Street Hall, Edinburgh, for the purpose of adopting measures in opposition to the recent running of railway trains for ordinary traffic on the Sunday. Sir James Gardiner Baird occupied the chair, and addresses were delivered by the chairman, the Rev. Sir Henry Moncrieff, Rev. Mr. Manson, of Perth; Rev. Mr. Graham, of Newhaven; and the Rev. Dr. Macfarlane, of Dalkeith, all of whom denounced the system of running both passenger and goods trains on the Sunday, which had been increased of late on the North British Railway. Resolutions were unanimously adopted to the effect that the Divine law of the Sabbath being one of the essential supports to vital and practical Christianity, it was incumbent to make every exertion for the maintenance of that law as it has hitherto been understood by the Scottish people, and that the running of railway trains was defended by reasons which, if allowed to prevail, would speedily lead to a most widespread and dangerous interference with the rest and sanctity of the Christian Sabbath, and tend especially to the injury of the working classes. It was also resolved to memorialise the directors of the railway company, and a committee was appointed for the purpose of giving effect to these resolutions.—On the following day, the Free Church Presbytery met in the vestry of the Free Church of Kirkcaldy, Mr. Jameson, of Pathhead, moderator. Mr. Ballingall, of Kinghorn, read the report of the Committee on Sabbath Observance. The report called attention specially to the running of luggage-trains by the directors of the North-British Railway on Sundays. Mr. Ballinghall stated that all the officials employed on the railway on Sundays, without exception, considered it a grievous hardship. Mr. Cooper, of Burntisland, corroborated this statement. Mr. Douglass, of Kirkcaldy, said there was a section of the community opposed to the proper observance of the Lord's Day, and if they could gather together those of whom that section was composed, the mass would be found to consist of infidels, of latitudinarians, and the blackguardism of the country—that class of men who take for their rule of life the opinions of Paris and other Continental cities, instead of the doctrines of the Bible. He was against strikes generally, but he would hail with joy the intelligence that all the officials of the North British Railway had combined not to do a stroke of work during the 24 hours of the Sabbath-day. Mr. Walker, of Dysart, said the railway companies were now becoming a great power, and that power seemed to be put forth for the purpose of leavening the community with the belief that there was no harm in running trains on the Sabbath-day. The Presbytery agreed unanimously that the committee should draw up a representation to the directors of the railway company against the running of luggage-trains on the Lord's-day; and further enjoin all the ministers within the bounds to direct the attention of their congregations to the subject on one or other of the Sabbath-days in December.

Murder in Aberdeenshire.—On Saturday afternoon the body of a woman, not quite dead, was found in a plantation at Thainston, near Kintore, and on investigation being made, it appeared she had been murdered, the back of the head being shattered by some instrument. A person resident in the locality had seen a man and woman enter the plantation, the man carrying an axe; and the police within an hour had in custody George Stephen, a wood merchant, residing in Port Elphinstone, in the vicinity. The deceased, the wife of a shoemaker in Aberdeen called Forbes, had been in the habit of meeting Stephen, and had been pressing him for money, which is believed to have been the motive for the crime. Stephen was taken to Aberdeen on Sunday, and committed by the Sheriff to prison on the charge of murder. He is unmarried, and about 55 years of age. The woman, who was about 50, had been twice married, and her present husband has for some time been bedridden.

Court of Queen's Bench: The Rappahannock Case.—The Queen v. Rumble.—This was an indictment removed into this court by certiorari for an alleged breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act by the defendant. The defendant pleaded Not Guilty. It will be remembered that Mr. Rumble, inspector of naval machinery at Sheerness, was charged with inciting persons to join the Confederate steamer Rappahannock while she was fitting out in the harbour, in breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act. Several witnesses were examined, and on one of them, named Newman giving evidence of which the defendant had not been apprised, the Lord Chief Justice adjourned the trial on the ground that the defendant had been taken by surprise, and ought to have time to procure rebutting evidence. The case will, therefore, not come on again during the present sittings.

Oxford Circuit: Stafford.—The Sedgley Murder.—Richard Hale, 30, puddler, and Cecilia Baker, 30, were charged with the wilful murder of Eliza Silletoe, on the 20th July, in the parish of Sedgley. The deceased was six years of age, the daughter of the male prisoner by his deceased wife before their marriage. The female prisoner is a woman with whom Hale cohabited after his return from gaol on being acquitted of the charge of manslaughter of his wife by starvation. In the afternoon of the 20th July the child was missed, and Hale was inquiring for the child on that night and for several days afterwards. Previously he had been heard to say that he would "as soon be hung for her as for anybody else," and it was also shown that he had expressed a wish to get rid of her. On the 2d August the child was found dead in a [illegible] Coseley. The body was nearly disarranged in the process of decomposition, the arms and legs alone being entire. The [illegible] were outstretched, with the fingers clenched; her bonnet had been placed by her shoulder, and her shoes, with the stockings tucked in them, by her side. After [illegible] stiff with blood, in a shape as the arm had been [illegible] in the hand, was found in another part of the [illegible]. This handkerchief was pinned round the deceased's [illegible] when she was last seen alive. On the 20th July both prisoners were seen together in the cornfield near the spot where the body was found. Mr. Smith, surgeon, of Coseley, deposed that in his opinion the child died in great agony, and that [illegible] portion of the child's clothes was saturated with [illegible], and also the ground on which the child was lying. Dr. Wi[illegible], analytical chemist, of Birmingham, found that the [illegible] human blood had been on the handkerchief. On [illegible] of it there was a cut, as from a sharp instrument, and [illegible] the cut a portion of a single hair of the same colour as that on the scalp of the deceased. He also found human blood on the strings of the bonnet, on the front of the frock, particularly on the breast, and also on the soil that had been beneath the body. Evidence to this extent was given before the coroner's jury, who found a verdict of Wilful Murder against Hale, but dismissed Baker. But she was subsequently re-arrested and committed by the magistrates on the authority of a barber, of Coseley, named John Jones, who deposed that about 2 o'clock on the 20th July he saw both prisoners sitting in the corn, Baker with a child in her lap. The child was tossed by Baker to Hale. The child escaped and ran off, but, followed by her father, was brought back and placed on the ground. The child screamed. Hale pulled a handkerchief from his pocket, and apparently tied it round or did something with it to the child's head, after which the cries died out. Counsel for the defence suggested that death had resulted accidentally, from the bursting of a blood vessel. The judge showed that the circumstances surrounding the child's death were incompatible with other than murder; and, relative to motive, reminded the jury that Hale had said that if the child were dead he could leave the country. Supposing that both the prisoners were guilty, the most that could be said in favour of Baker was that she was second principal. The trial lasted all day, and the jury, after an hour's absence, found both prisoners Guilty. Mr. Justice Byles sentenced both of them to Death; but the female being pregnant, her execution was respited until the delivery of her child or her Majesty's pleasure be known.—The Audley Murder.—Charles Brough was charged with the wilful murder of George Walker, at Audley, on the 28th July last. It appeared that the deceased was 74 years of age, and had property in Newcastle, but had built on a bit of waste land near Audley a hut of 6 feet square and 4 feet in height, in which he lived alone. He had no employment. A neighbour called upon him on the 27th July, and when he left promised to come at the same time on the following night. When he came on the 28th he found the door of the hut open, and the old man lying outside the door, and about a yard from it, dressed only in his shirt, and quite dead. The inside of the hut and the bed on which the old man slept was covered with blood. He had a scalp wound in front of the head. The skull was cracked at the side of the head behind the ear, and on the ground was found a piece of wood, the spoke of a thick cart-wheel, and a piece of iron, both covered with blood. A German silver watch, seal, and chain belonging to him were missed. On the Sunday before the old man's death a man named Obery was with him at his hut, when he observed the old man chalking something on the beam forming the top of the door. Obery asked him what he was doing, and he said putting down the number of his watch. Obery checked the number with that in the watch, and when it was found that the watch had been stolen Obery communicated the number to the police, who on the 29th gave information to, among others, Mr. Hulme, a pawnbroker at Tunstall. On the same afternoon the prisoner presented the watch with the number in it at Mr. Hulme's shop, asking for 12s., whereupon the assistant at the shop gave information to the police, who took the prisoner into custody. He stated that he had had the watch for three weeks, and had bought it of a man named Smith at Crackley. The prisoner's coat, waistcoat, and trousers had blood on them, but whether human or not was not ascertained. On the same evening the prisoner made a statement in his cell to a policeman to the effect that he took the watch, that he did not go with the intention to kill deceased, and that he and his father had had some words about his having no work, and that he could not work, for he was suffering from diabetes, and that he went to the old man's hut to try to get to sleep, and that the old man heard him and came to the door, that he took up a piece of wood and struck the old man on the head, and then he went in, struck a match, took the watch, and walked off. Subsequently, on the same night, the prisoner made a similar statement to an inspector of police. It appeared that when he made these statements the prisoner was suffering badly from diabetes, and was lying on a bench in a very weak state. His condition on his trial was much the same. A surgeon stated the wounds on the old man's head were probably caused by the piece of wood found in the hut. He also stated that diabetes was a regular drain on the system, that it would lead to much physical debility, conducing to mental weakness, which would cause a person to succumb to excitement. For the defence it was urged that the confessions were the result produced by excitement acting on a brain weakened by the loss of physical power, caused by diabetes, and were not, therefore, to be relied on, and that the watch found on the prisoner might have been received by him from the man Smith, as he mentioned, and did not, therefore, make him out the murderer; and that there appeared no adequate motive to account for the murder. It was also urged that if the prisoner went to the hut to get a lodging, and when the old man came to the door a sudden quarrel arose between them, and the old man was then killed, and the taking of the watch an afterthought, it would only amount to manslaughter. His lordship, however, in summing up, said that the latter suggestion, if true, did not reduce the offence to manslaughter, and that the crime, if committed by the prisoner, could be nothing less than murder. The jury in about half an hour returned a verdict of Guilty. Mr. Justice Byles assumed the black cap, and solemnly but briefly sentenced the prisoner to Death in the usual form.

Norfolk Circuit: Leicester.—The Syston Murder.—Timothy Baum was charged on the coroner's inquisition, and [illegible] on an indictment, with the murder of his wife and daughter, an infant 11 months old, at Syston, on the 25th November. The facts of the case were so recently noticed in our Provincial news that it is unnecessary to repeat them, especially as there was no doubt about the double murder, the only question at issue being the state of the prisoner's mind. Mr. Robinson, a surgeon at Syston, who had known the prisoner for some years, and had attended him professionally for 12 months prior to the murder, said that he saw him on the morning of that event, when he seemed composed and better, although a week before he was suffering from an attack of inflammation of the covering of the brain, with an appearance of slight suffusion and that on the evening in question he was much exhausted, his eyes being bright and glassy, and his pulse very high. In cross-examination, the witness said delirium would be very probable in the disease the prisoner was labouring under, and likely to be brought on by an exciting cause. This he was aware of from the brightness of the eyes and other symptoms; and for this reason he had ordered him to bed, and given him a sedative solution of opium. In answer to the Judge, Mr. Robinson said the prisoner would not know that he was doing an act contrary to law, or the difference between right and wrong, but would be solely influenced by any impulse he might have upon him. Mr. Benfield, surgeon of Leicester County Gaol, who had had the prisoner under his charge since his committal, deposed to his great prostration, his vacant look, excitable pulse, and several symptoms at the time of his admission—symptoms attendant upon delirium. In answer to his lordship, Mr. Benfield said that he had heard Mr. Robinson's evidence, and from it he had no doubt that the prisoner was in a state of delirium, in which state a man would not know the difference between right and wrong, or that he was doing an unlawful act. His lordship told the jury that the facts were beyond doubt, and the real question upon the medical evidence for their consideration would be, what was the state and condition of the prisoner's mind at the time of the offence? Was he labouring under disease of the brain to such an extent as to be unable to know what he was doing, and that he was committing an act that was contrary to law? If that was their opinion, they would return a verdict accordingly. After a short deliberation the jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty on the ground of insanity.

WESTERN CIRCUIT, WINCHESTER.—Murder on the High Seas.—Adolph Egerssen, a German sailor, was indicted for the wilful murder of Henrich Scherck. It appeared that the prisoner was second mate and the deceased master of a ship called the Gustave Adolphe, registered in the name of Mr. Rehder, who is a denizen, but not a native of this country. While on the voyage from London to Hong Kong, on the night of the 21st June the prisoner attacked the captain in his cabin, and was found in the act of presenting a pistol to his head by the first mate, at whom he at once fired. The prisoner then went on deck, and shortly afterwards the captain came up, when he was instantly shot through the head by the prisoner. On his body being examined, it was found that there were two bullet wounds in the head, that the right arm was nearly cut off, and that there were several other wounds inflicted with such a weapon as a hatchet. The prisoner fortified himself in the cabin, and loaded several firearms. Early in the morning he went on deck with a double-barrelled gun in one hand, a double-barrelled pistol in the other, and a revolver in his belt. He ordered the crew to put his things in the lifeboat, which being done, he lowered it, got in, and hoisting a mast and sail, went off, the first mate giving him a parting shot, which he replied to by firing several times at the ship. At daylight the lifeboat was still in sight, and the ship went in pursuit, fired at the boat, and sunk it, the prisoner being captured and put in irons. A naval court at Pernambuco sent the case to England for trial. It was the opinion of the first mate that the prisoner was mad at the time. For the defence it was urged that the act was done either in self-defence or in the heat of blood, during a dispute with the captain. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty of Manslaughter, and Baron Channell reserved his sentence, subject to a reference to the Court of Crown Cases Reserved, on some points of law raised as to the precise ownership of the ship.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT, WARWICK.—Child Murder.—Lucy Thompson was indicted for the wilful murder of her illegitimate child. The circumstances of the case were of a very painful character. The prisoner was in great want, and had no settled abode. The father of the child refused to give her any money, and she was obliged to sleep several nights in a churchyard at Birmingham. On the 4th August the child died, and its body presented all the appearances of death by strychnine. A post-mortem examination was made, and strychnine was discovered in large quantities in its body. The prisoner was apprehended and admitted that she had killed the child. She was at that time, however, in a very wild and excited state. At another time she said that she had given the stuff to cure a bowel complaint. It was admitted in cross-examination by the witnesses for the prosecution that the prisoner had always been of weak intellect, and had once attempted to destroy herself. For the defence it was contended that the strychnine was given by mistake and in ignorance of its deadly nature, and that at the most the circumstances of the case only amounted to manslaughter. The jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty on the ground of insanity. Baron Bramwell ordered the prisoner to be detained during her Majesty's pleasure.

NEW RAILWAY PROJECTS.—About 400 notices of intended applications to Parliament in the ensuing Session have been given for railway, canal, and dock Bills, all connected with railways. Plans and sections have been deposited at the Board of Trade for 354 projected new railways and works, being 46 more than those deposited last year, and it is believed the largest number since the year 1846. In the last Session of Parliament it was found difficult to get through the work, and it appeared that several Bills had been delayed very late in the Session for want of chairmen of committees to consider and report on their merits. The railway business for next Session promises to be much heavier than last Session; at least, the Bills are more numerous, and probably cannot be so easily shelved as the 30 schemes for the metropolitan railways were last Session. Notices for 27 Bills have been given for lines and junction lines for the metropolis and the suburbs, but none of them equal in magnitude to any of those of last Session. The Metropolitan District Company (part of the inner circle) merely propose to divide their authorised double junction line with the West London Railway, from Kensington to Fulham, and to purchase land, houses, and property for the purpose. The East London (Thames Tunnel line) have come forward with a modified scheme for constructing a railway from the Great Eastern at West Place, Bethnal Green, passing through the Thames Tunnel to the London and Brighton Railway at Deptford, with a branch to the South-Eastern Railway, and also to the Great Eastern at Liverpool-street, to Whitechapel, and to the London and Blackwall Railway at Mile-end Old-town. The Eastern Metropolitan propose to construct a railway from Aldgate to Mile-end; the Metropolitan and St. John's-wood Railway Company ask for power to extend their line to Willow-road, Hampstead; the Waterloo and Whitehall Company propose to make a railway from Great Scotland-yard, passing under the Thames to the Waterloo station of the London and South-Western Railway Company. The London, Chatham, and Dover are very moderate this time; they propose to make a junction line from Lambeth to the London and Brighton Railway at the west end of Denmark-hill tunnel, a junction railway from their Peckham line at Camberwell to the London and Brighton Railway at Hanover-park-road, to oblige the Crystal Palace and South London Company to abandon the construction of the portion of their line from Camberwell to Denmark-hill, to make a junction line at Beckenham, and to abandon the whole of their Bickley and other authorized junctions. They also propose to enable the London and South-Western Company to work over and use with their engines and carriages the railways, sidings, and stations of the London, Chatham, and Dover Company in Surrey, Middlesex, and London, on such terms as may be agreed upon. The Tottenham and Hampstead Junction Company propose to make railways from Gordon-house-lane to the Metropolitan Extension of the Great Eastern Company at Tottenham; from Tatter-down-lane to the Alexandra-park, near the southern end of the main building. The North London Company propose to make a railway from Islington to near the toll-gate of the Highgate-archway and thence to the Alexandra-park Extension lines of the Edgware, Highgate, and London Railway at Hornsey. A company propose a line from the Edgware, Highgate, and London Railway at Hornsey to the North London Railway at Islington. The Edgware, Highgate, and London Company propose to make junctions with the Tottenham and Hampstead Railway from Crouch-hill to the Holloway-road, and also at Hornsey. A company propose to make a railway from Wood-green to Winchmore-hill and Enfield; and so do the Great Northern Railway Company, extending it from Enfield to Hertford. A company have given notice of a line from the London and North-Western, near Willesden, to Harrow and Rickmansworth New companies propose to make railways from Acton to Brentford, from Acton to Twickenham, from Balham to Brixton and Clapham, from King's-cross to Islington and Limehouse, and from Chalk-farm station to Finchley, Hendon, Totteridge, and Barnet. The London and Blackwall Company intend to extend their line to Millwall. The London and Brighton Company propose junction lines at Rotherhithe. The Metropolitan and South London Company propose a line from Little Moorfields, passing through the Thames Tunnel to Rotherhithe, and branches to the Great Eastern Railway at Bethnal-green and Tap-street; and branches at Rotherhithe to the North Kent, South-Eastern, and London and Brighton Railways. Two high-level branch railways to the Crystal Palace are proposed from the existing Crystal Palace line. A company propose to make railways from the Great Western and Brentford Railway at Isleworth to the Wimbledon and Croydon at Merton and Wimbledon, on the mixed gauge. These projects appear to be sufficiently numerous at least for one Session, within a circle of about ten miles of the General Post-office. The most important projects in the list of notices for new railways are the Lancashire and Yorkshire and Great Eastern Junction; the Leeds, North Yorkshire, and Durham; the London, Bucks, and East Gloucestershire; and the South Wales and Great Western Direct. The Lancashire and Yorkshire and Great Eastern Junction is promoted by those two companies jointly for the construction of a railway from the Great Eastern Railway at Long Stanton to the Askerne branch of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway at Askerne, with branches to Somersham, Ramsey, Standground, Bourn, Sleaford, Blyton, Kirksandall, Thorpe, and Burgwallis. This is nearly identical with the Great Eastern Northern Junction scheme of last Session, which was rejected by committees of both Houses as being a competing line to the loop line and branches of the Great Northern Railway; but at the same time they inserted facility clauses in the Great Northern Bill for the conveyance of coals and other traffic to and from the Great Eastern Railway. Those facilities not being considered sufficient by the Great Eastern Company for the development of the northern traffic between Lancashire and the Eastern Counties district, the project has been revived, and will, no doubt, be again opposed by the Great Northern Company. The Leeds, North Yorkshire, and Durham, is promoted by an "independent company" for constructing a railway from Leeds to Hartlepool, with branches to Scarborough, Farndale, Wortley, Armley, and other places, and junctions with the North-Eastern, Stockton and Darlington, and other railways in the north-eastern district. This scheme will be strenuously opposed by the North-Eastern Company; but it is supposed that running powers over the existing railways similar to those granted for 50 years to the Great Northern Company over the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway would obviate the necessity of making those two competing railways, at a cost of 3,000,000*l.* or 4,000,000*l.* The London, Bucks, and East Glocestershire is promoted by an "independent company" to make railways from the East Gloucestershire Railway at Yarnton to Risborough, Ellesborough, Rickmansworth, Watford, Stanmore, and Willesden to the Midland Railway at Hendon, with branches to Wolvercot, Great Kimble, Watford, and other places. This project appears to be intended as a competing line from the Midland Railway to Oxford, Gloucester, and Bristol. The South Wales and Great Western direct is promoted by an "independent company" to make a railway from the South Wales Railway near Chepstow across the Severn by means of a bridge to the Great Western Railway at Wootton Bassett. The Birkenhead and Liverpool is a project for making a railway from the Birkenhead line at Birkenhead, passing by means of a tunnel under the river Mersey into Toxteth-park, Liverpool, and thence to the Liverpool central station. The South Wales Junction is a project for constructing a railway from the Great and South Wales Union Railway, by means of a tunnel through rock under the river Severn, to the South Wales Railway near Portskewet. A similar tunnel project for next Session is for a railway from the Blackwall and North London Railways at Limehouse, passing under the Thames to Blackwall Point and the Greenwich-marshes to the North Kent Railway at Charlton. The other important engineering works to be submitted next Session are the high-level railway bridges over the Firth of Forth and the Firth of Tay. The North British and Edinburgh and Glasgow Company propose to construct a railway from the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway at a point fifteen miles from Edinburgh, thence across the Firth of Forth by means of a high-level bridge about two miles in length, to the North British line at Charleston. The Tay Bridge and Dundee Union project is for making a railway from the North British Railway at Ferry-port-on-Craig, passing over the Firth of Tay on a high-level bridge, to the town of Dundee, with branches to the Scottish Central Railway and to the harbour of Dundee. The construction of those railway bridges would greatly facilitate the traffic from the north to the south of Scotland, and by which these two great ferries would be avoided. Those schemes are looked upon with great favour in Scotland, and are therefore likely to be sanctioned. The proposed leases, purchases, and amalgamations are rather numerous. The Great Eastern propose to lease the London and Blackwall Railway, to amalgamate the Bishop's Stortford, Dunmow, and Braintree and the Ramsay Railways with their undertaking. The Great Northern propose to amalgamate with the West Yorkshire and the Leeds, Bradford, and Halifax Junction; and, in conjunction with the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Company, to vest the Stockport and Woodley Junction, the Stockport, Timperley, and Altrincham Junction, the Cheshire Midland, and the West Cheshire Railways in their undertakings. The London and North-Western propose to give the Midland a joint interest in the lease, use, and working of the Lancaster and Carlisle, the Kendal and Windermere, and the Lancaster and Preston railways, and to amalgamate with the Bedford and Cambridge and South Staffordshire. The Caledonian propose to amalgamate with the Scottish Central, the General Terminus and Glasgow Harbour, the Dumfries and Lockerby, the Dumfries, Lochmaben, and Lockerby. The Scottish Central propose to amalgamate the Crieff Junction and the Dumblane, Doune, and Callander Railways with their undertaking. The Edinburgh and Glasgow propose to amalgamate the Monkland Railway with their undertaking. The North British intend to apply for power to amalgamate with the Edinburgh and Glasgow, and also to amalgamate with the St. Andrew's, the Devon Valley, and the Esk Valley Railway Companies. The Glasgow and South-Western intend to amalgamate the Maybole and Girvan, the Air and Maybole, the Castle Douglas and Bridge of Weir, and the Kircudbright Railways with their undertaking. The Scottish North-Eastern propose to amalgamate the Carmyllie line with their railways. It is intended to amalgamate the West Hartlepool and Clarence Railways with the North-Eastern. The North-Eastern propose to amalgamate the Clevelard Railway with their undertaking. The Inverness and Perth Junction have agreed to amalgamate with the Aberdeen and Inverness Junction Railway Company. The Bristol and Exeter intend to lease the Devon and Somerset Railway. The Vale of Neath intend to ask for power to amalgamate with the Great Western Railway. The Taff Vale Valley propose to lease their undertaking to the South Devon Company. The Maryport and Carlisle propose to amalgamate the Whitehaven Junction, the Cockermouth and Workington, the Whitehaven and Furness Junction, the Whitehaven, Cleator, and Egremont, and the Solway Junction Railways with their undertaking. The Whitehaven Junction and the Cockermouth and Workington, have agreed to amalgamate. The Metropolitan intend, in conjunction with the Great Western, to lease the Hammersmith and City Railway. The Great Western and London and North-Western intend jointly to purchase the Shrewsbury and Welshpool Railway. The Great Western propose to amalgamate the Bridport, the Great Western and Brentford, and the Wycombe Railways with their undertaking. The Manchester intend to amalgamate with the Aberystwith and Welsh Coast. The Brecon and Merthyr Tydvil Junction intend to amalgamate with the Hereford, Hay, and Brecon Railway. The Monmouthshire intend to purchase the Brecon and Abergavenny Canal, and the Newport and Brecon Railway Company have given notice to purchase the Swansea Canal. The Dublin and Belfast Junction and the Dublin and Drogheda Railway Company are proposed to be amalgamated. The London and North-Western, the Great Western, the Midland

Obituary.

THE EARL OF CARLISLE died at Castle Howard on Monday, after a long illness, which recently compelled him to resign the Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland. George William Frederic Howard, K.G., seventh Earl of Carlisle, Viscount Howard of Morpeth, and Baron Dacre of Gillesland, a coheir to a moiety of the Barony of Greystock, was born in Hill Street, Berkeley Square, in 1802. He was the eldest son of the sixth Earl of Carlisle by the eldest daughter of the fifth Duke of Devonshire. His sister married the present Duke of Devonshire; another sister is the Duchess-Dowager of Sutherland; a third sister married a son of Earl Grey; a fourth married Lord Granville; the present Earl Granville is his first cousin; the Duke of Argyll married one of his nieces; Lord Carlisle married another. In this great federation of Howards, Cavendishes, Greys, Gowers, Grosvenors, and others, the late Lord Carlisle held a high place. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, and earned high distinction as a graceful scholar. He was especially distinguished for his skill in versification, and in 1821 obtained two University prizes for his poems—the Chancellor's prize for Latin and the Newdigate for English verse. He took his degree in 1823, and was first-class in classics. Born to the service of the State, he was early apprenticed to the work. He accompanied his uncle, the late Duke of Devonshire, on his visit to Russia at the coronation of the Emperor Nicholas; and in 1830, at the general election, he was elected member for Morpeth. Afterwards he stood for the West Riding, but he did not appear much as a politician until, in 1835, Lord Melbourne, when he came into power, appointed him Chief Secretary of Ireland. As in this capacity he was the principal representative of the Irish Government in the House of Commons, and as, in those days when O'Connell was in his glory, the office was one of the most important in the Administration, it may be supposed that Lord Carlisle, then known as Lord Morpeth, had the confidence of his party. He made himself popular among the Irish, and Mr. Disraeli has publicly declared that he held his own in the stormy Parliamentary debates of those times. It is no light achievement to have carried through the House of Commons in those troublous times the Irish Tithes Bill, the Irish Municipal Reform Bill, and the Irish Poor Law Bill. At the general election which placed Sir Robert Peel in power, Lord Morpeth lost his seat for the West Riding, but took leave of his late constituents in a speech so kindly as to produce a strong revulsion in his favour. Being released from his Parliamentary duties, he took the opportunity of spending a year in America, and did not return to Parliament until 1846. Two years afterwards he succeeded to the peerage, when he at once re-entered office. The offices which he held at this period did not entail upon him much labour, but they were always accompanied with a seat in the Cabinet. From 1846 to 1850, he was Chief Commissioner of Woods and Forests. In 1850, he was appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and retained that office till the accession of Lord Derby's Ministry to office in 1852. The great event of his political life was his appointment to the Lord-Lieutenancy of Ireland by Lord Palmerston, in 1855. He remained in this post to a very recent period, with the exception of the few months of Lord Derby's second Government. Few Viceroys have been more popular or more successful. Happily for him he had not many great political problems to solve, and he satisfied the ideal of Irishmen by keeping splendid state, entertaining magnificently, and displaying the qualities that are most appreciated in brilliant society. But to a man in failing health the duties of society became more burdensome than even the routine of office, and Lord Carlisle, after eight years of Viceregal state, felt the necessity of resigning his post, and since his return to England his strength has been gradually failing. He was appointed Lord Lieutenant of the East Riding in 1847, and was elected Lord Rector of the University of Aberdeen in 1853. His lordship was never married, and is succeeded in his title and estates by his brother, the Hon. and Rev. William George Howard, of Christ Church, Oxford, who was born in 1808, and has been rector of Londesborough, Yorkshire, since 1832. Like his deceased brother he is not married, and the heir presumptive is the Hon. Charles Wentworth George Howard, M.P., for East Cumberland, who married a daughter of Lord Wensleydale, and has issue.

THE COUNTESS OF BECTIVE died on the 4th inst. at the family residence in Grafton Street, Berkeley Square, after a long illness. She was the only child and heiress of Alderman Thompson, M.P. for Westmoreland. She married in 1842 the Earl of Bective, eldest son of the Marquis of Headfort, by whom she leaves an only son, Lord Kenlis, born in 1844, and four daughters.

THE RIGHT HON. LOUIS PERRIN, late one of the Judges of the Queen's Bench in Ireland, died on Wednesday morning, at his residence, Knockdromain, near Rush, at the venerable age of 87 years. During the latter period of his life he had been afflicted with a want of vitality in the heart, and a few years ago—at the urgent desire of his medical adviser—he resigned his judicial position. Since that time he had been in a very delicate state of health. He was the eldest son of the late Mr. Louis Perrin, of Clonmel, and was called to the Irish Bar in 1795. In 1835 he became a member of the Privy Council and Attorney-General for Ireland. He represented the county of Monaghan in Parliament from 1832 until 1835, and the borough of Cashel in 1836, in which year he was raised to the bench by Lord Melbourne's Government.

THE HON. MRS. HENRY FITZROY, widow of the Right Hon. Henry Fitzroy, only brother of Lord Southampton, died on the 2d inst. at 42, Upper Grosvenor Street, in her 48th year. She was a daughter of the late Baron Nathan Rothschild, and was consequently sister of Baron Lionel Rothschild, M.P., Sir Anthony Rothschild, and Baron Meyer Rothschild. She married in 1839 the Hon. Henry Fitzroy, who died in 1859, and left issue an only daughter.

SIR JAMES MATTHEW STRONGE, BART. died at his seat, Tynan Abbey, County Armagh, on the 1st inst. He was born in 1786, and succeeded his father in the title and estates in 1804. In 1810 he married the eldest daughter of Mr. Calvert, M.P. for Hertfordshire, by whom he leaves five sons and three daughters. He was chairman of various local boards, and took an active part in the affairs of the counties of Tyrone and Armagh, of which he was a Deputy Lieutenant. He was also a gentleman of the Privy Chamber. He is succeeded by his eldest son, Mr. James Matthew Stronge, M.P. for the county of Armagh.

THE HON. WILLIAM DAYTON, United States Minister at Paris, died in that city on the 1st inst. of apoplexy. He was born in New Jersey in 1807; graduated at Princeton College; was a lawyer by profession; a member of the State Senate of New Jersey in 1837; was appointed one of the Justices of the Superior Court of the State in 1838, and was a senator in Congress from 1842 to 1851. In 1857 he was appointed Attorney-General of New Jersey. He was the Republican candidate for the Vice Presidency on the ticket with General Fremont in 1856, and was appointed Minister to France in 1861. He leaves a widow and several children.

LIEUT.-COLONEL SOWERBY died a few days since. He entered the army as ensign in the Coldstream Guards in 1805, and served through nearly the whole of the Peninsular war; was at the passage of the Douro, the taking of Oporto, and the affair at Salamonde; the battles of Talavera, Salamanca, Vittoria, the Nive, and the Nivelle. He was with the covering army during the siege of Badajoz, and at the siege of Burgos and the sortie of Bayonne. He returned to England with the regiment in 1814, and in the following year went to Brussels, and was present at the battle of Waterloo. He received the war medal and five clasps for the Nive, the Nivelle, Vittoria, Salamanca, and Talavera, and the medal for Waterloo.

MR. CHARLES MANNERS LUSHINGTON, formerly M.P. for Canterbury, died on the 27th ult., at Boulogne, from an attack of paralysis. He was the eldest son of the Right Hon. Stephen Rumbold Lushington, D.C.L., of Norton Court, Kent, M.P. for Rye and Canterbury, Governor of Madras, joint Secretary of the Treasury, chairman of committees, &c., by the daughter of the first Lord Harris. He was born in 1819, and was educated at Eton and Oriel College, Oxford, and was elected fellow of All Souls'. He was married in 1846 the sister of Sir Stafford Northcote, Bart., M.P. for Stamford. He was a conspicuous opponent 10 years ago of the Church-rate Abolition Bills. He was returned as a Conservative, at the head of the poll, in 1854, but he did not offer himself as a candidate in 1857.

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, the celebrated American chemist, died at his residence at New Haven, on the 24th ult. He was the son of General Gold Sellack Silliman, who rendered his country important service during the revolutionary war. He graduated at Yale in 1798, afterwards studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1802. He afterwards accepted the chair of chemistry in Yale College, and visited Europe to prosecute his studies in a science which was at that time almost unknown in America. He returned after an absence of fourteen months, and published an account of his travels. In 1807 he made a chemical analysis of a meteorite of great size and brilliancy which had burst in the town of Western, Connecticut. He afterwards assisted Dr. Ware in his experiments with the oxyhydrogen blowpipe, to which he gave the name of "compound blowpipe," by which it is commonly known. In 1818 he founded the "American Journal of Science and Arts," better known both in Europe and America as "Silliman's Journal," of which he remained senior editor till 1846. He was one of the earliest Americans to give popular lectures on scientific subjects. In 1830 he visited Europe a second time. He resigned his professorship in 1853, but continued to give lectures for two years longer. He was a man of simple tastes and active habits, and his old age was remarkably free from mental or bodily infirmity.

MR. SERJEANT STEPHEN, for some years one of her Majesty's Commissioners in Bankruptcy, died on the 28th ult. at Clifton, in his 78th year. He was well known for his "Commentaries" and other legal works.

THE REV. DR. ARCHER, Minister of Oxendon Street Chapel, who has long been known as one of the most eloquent of London preachers, died on the 30th ult. at 18, Hans Place. He belonged to the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, which is a separate body from both the Established Church and the Free Church, but with scarcely appreciable differences in doctrine or discipline. Thirty-three years ago Dr. Archer was elected minister of Oxendon Street Chapel, Haymarket, and during the whole of that long period he has continued to hold that appointment.

MISS BYRNE, of Cabinteely, county Dublin, died on the 29th ult. at her town house, 15, St. George's Place, Hyde Park. The estate of Cabinteely and the representation of this ancient branch of the O'Byrnes pass to Miss Byrne's cousin and heir, Mr. Wm. Richard O'Byrne, the well-known author of "The Naval Biography."

Miscellaneous.

THE TOMB OF AN ANCIENT BRITON.—A barrow was recently opened near Seale House, Rylstone, under the direction of the Rev. Mr. Greenwell, in the presence of a great number of persons. It was 31 feet in diameter and about 7 feet high, and situate in a meadow. It was opened from the south-east, and immediately under the sod was found to consist of yellow clay to a considerable depth; there were then layers of blue clay, which had evidently been puddled, or worked to a finer consistency, doubtless to keep out the water. Exactly in the centre of the tumulus, at a depth of 7 feet, and on a level with the plane of the field, was found an oak coffin formed out of a tree which had been split and hollowed out, and placed due north and south, the head being placed to the south, as that was the larger part of the tree. When completely divested of the surrounding earth it was considered desirable to lift it out, so that it might be examined with greater care, but after being exposed to the air for about 10 minutes it parted at the sides, and it was found impossible to move it except by detached pieces. The body had been wrapped in a cloth or shroud of a texture resembling wool coarsely woven, of which there was a considerable quantity remaining, but the body itself was dissolved by the action of the water which had gained access to the interior of the coffin. Mr. Greenwell considered the interment to have been that of an ancient Briton, decidedly pre-Roman, and to have taken place 2,000 years ago. He said it was the only instance (with one exception, found at Gristhorp, near Scarborough) where an interment in an Oak tree hollowed out had a tumulus placed over it. The coffin was more than 6 feet in length inside, and about 7 feet 6 inches outside. The remains were carefully collected and replaced, and the mound restored to its former shape, a small leaden tablet being placed within stating that it had been opened A.D. 1864.

BRITISH WOOLS.—LONDON, Dec. 8.

According to expectation the lull in our trade spoken of last week continues, and to press sales would involve a reduction in price. This, however, is not submitted to in fleece descriptions, but skin wool is easier to buy, and at a small decline in price.

HOPS.—BOROUGH MARKET, FRIDAY, Dec. 9.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report continued activity in the demand for both new and old Hops of all descriptions. Fine samples of the former are very scarce indeed, and command, if anything, rather higher prices.

POTATOS.—SOUTHWARK, Monday, Dec. 5.

During the past week the arrivals coastwise have been small, but rather large by railway; the trade still continues steady. The following are this day's quotations:—Yorkshire Flukes, per ton, 70s. to 110s.; do. Regents, 80s. to 100s.; Dunbar Regents, 90s. to 100s.; Kent and Essex Regents, 80s. to 90s.; do. do. METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Dec. 5.

We have a larger supply of Beasts than on Monday last. Trade is active for them, and there is scarcely a quotable reduction of price for the best qualities. There are also a few more Sheep. Trade is not so brisk, and generally lower prices are taken. Good Calves are scarce and dear. From Germany and Holland there are 1650 Beasts, 2530 Sheep, 110 Calves, and 70 Pigs; from Scotland, 140 Beasts; from Ireland, 650; and 1620 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Dec. 8.

Our supply of Beasts is rather larger, but we are not overdone with choice qualities. In best descriptions, consequently, there is not much reduction in price. Trade generally is rather worse. The number of Sheep is small, but quite equal to the demand. Monday's quotations are not maintained throughout, and we have a very slow trade. Good Calves meet with a fair sale. Our foreign supply consists of 1270 Beasts, 2020 Sheep, 310 Calves, and 100 Pigs.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Dec. 5.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and met a slow sale at the prices of this day se'nnight. The attendance was limited, and transactions in foreign Wheat were restricted. We do not alter our quotations. Barley of all descriptions meets a slow sale at about late rates. Beans and Peas are unaltered in value. The Oat trade is slow, and there is no alteration in prices, excepting for Russians, which bring an advance of 6d. per qr. Flour is steady at late quotations.

FRIDAY Dec. 9.

The weather from the 3d to the 6th was fine and mild, but has since been damp, with heavy storms of rain during the night of the 7th and yesterday, to-day and after white frost. The Wheat trade during the past week has not revived from its late inactive state. Barley in some markets is quoted easier to purchase, but the previous value of Beans, Peas, and Oats has been generally well supported. Our quotations for Flour have been maintained with a moderate demand. Since Friday last 10 vessels have been reported off the coast. With small arrivals and a very limited inquiry for all descriptions of grain, the floating trade has been quiet, and late rates must be quoted unaltered with the exception of Barley, which has declined a little. Paris, Dec. 8.—Flour is very difficult to sell at late rates. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. per 280 lb. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 31,600 cwt. Yesterday a fair business was done in Wheat at somewhat lower prices; to-day the trade is exceedingly quiet. The arrivals of English and Irish Wheat and foreign Oats have been to a moderate extent, of English Oats small, and of English and foreign Wheat very limited and also the Barley large. The attendance was very limited and also the business, which was interfered with until nearly the close of the market by a dense fog. Prices of both English and foreign Wheat and Spring Corn are unaltered from Monday.

LIVERPOOL: Dec. 6.—Our corn exchange has been well attended this morning, but owing to the extreme prices asked for fine useful qualities of Wheat, the actual business done is in narrow compass. Flour slow of sale, but not quotably cheaper. Indian Corn dull, and Danubian may be bought ex ship a trifle easier than on Friday. Oats and Oatmeal steady. No change in Beans or Peas. Grinding Barley is offering freely, and must be quoted lower. Market inactive throughout.

News of the Week.

THE United States Congress met at Washington on the 5th inst., and President LINCOLN's Message was delivered on the following day. The Message says that any attempt to negotiate with the insurgent leader would not result in any good, as he will only accept disunion, which the North are resolved not to grant. The Southern people can have peace by laying down their arms and submitting to the national authority. The North will make no overtures for peace embracing the recognition of the independence of the Confederacy, but will cease the war when it shall have been discontinued by those who began it. Mr. LINCOLN retracts nothing he has heretofore said on slavery, and will not modify the Emancipation Proclamation. He recommends the passing of a constitutional amendment abolishing slavery throughout the United States, and believes that the next Congress will pass it if the present does not. With regard to foreign affairs, he says that the condition of the foreign relations of the country is "reasonably satisfactory;" that the relations with Mexico, which continues to be a theatre of "civil war," have undergone no change; and that his Government at the same time has maintained neutrality between the belligerents. He states that unforeseen political difficulties have arisen in Brazilian and British ports, and on the Canadian frontier, which have required a just and conciliatory spirit on the part of the United States and the nations interested. He says that, after the expiration of the stipulated six months' notice to Great Britain, it will be necessary for the United States to increase their naval force upon the great lakes; and he expresses his opinion that maritime Powers would not now, with the light before them, concede belligerent rights to the insurgents. In regard to the military situation, he says that all lines and positions held at the date of his last Message have been maintained, and that the armies have steadily advanced.

From the seat of war we have accounts which are far from justifying the confident tone of Mr. LINCOLN's Message. General SHERMAN, with great difficulty and after a good deal of fighting, during which he received more than one defeat, has passed Millen, as he passed Macon and Augusta, without venturing to attack it, and is now making his way towards the sea coast in the direction of Savannah, his track "marked by the bodies of men, dead animals, and abandoned matériel," and his troops, according to the statement of prisoners, being almost destitute of provisions. His cavalry, under General KILPATRICK, has been defeated with heavy loss by the Confederate cavalry under General WHEELER; and a force which had been despatched to his assistance from Port Royal, under General FOSTER, has been defeated at a point on the Savannah and Charleston Railroad, and driven back towards the coast. In Tennessee, General HOOD has succeeded in shutting up the Federals under General THOMAS within the lines of Nashville, and is now besieging them in that city with such confidence of success, that he has detached a strong force under General FORREST to invade Kentucky. The Confederates are said to have re-occupied Atlanta in great force, and the Federals have been compelled to evacuate Decatur, in Alabama, after destroying their ammunition and stores. In the Shenandoah Valley a portion of General EARLY'S cavalry, under General ROSSER, has captured two Federal forts and destroyed a large amount of stores, besides capturing many prisoners. General GRANT has been reinforced, and is massing his troops, preparatory, it is said, to a grand attack on General LEE's lines. Mr. SEWARD has peremptorily refused Lord WHARNCLIFFE's request to be permitted to give relief to the Confederate prisoners in the North from the funds raised at the Liverpool bazaar. Mr. CHASE has been appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

The Ministerial crisis in Spain has been brought to a close by the recall of General NARVAEZ and his entire Cabinet, the attempts of the Marquis of PAVIA, Señor LERSUNDI, Señor ISTURITZ, and the Marquis of MIRAFLORES to form a new administration having proved abortive. The Cortes were opened on Thursday by the QUEEN in person. The Speech from the Throne expressed a hope that the Peruvian question would soon be adjusted, and denied that Spain had any ambitious projects on the South American republics. It said that HER MAJESTY felt bound to state that the general condition of the Monarchy, considered in all its extent, was not very satisfactory, and that to remedy this a Bill of great importance would be laid before the Cortes. This paragraph is supposed to refer to the San Domingo question, but the Speech made no mention of that subject, and took no notice of the Ministerial crisis or of the causes which produced it.

By the Cape mail we learn that Governor WODEHOUSE has decided his arbitration in favour of all the Free State claims, and that the Basutos are so irritated by the decision that war between MOSHESH and the Free State was considered imminent. This award had also caused great excitement at the Cape, but it was hoped that the colony would not be involved in the qurrrel.

Home News.

DEPARTURE OF THE COURT FOR OSBORNE.—The Queen and Royal family left Windsor Castle on Saturday morning at a quarter before 11 for Osborne. The Royal party travelled to Basingstoke by a special train on the Great Western Railway, and proceeded thence by the South-Western to Gosport, where they embarked in the Royal Yacht Alberta for Osborne. Although the snow was falling heavily during the greater part of the day, the various stations were crowded with spectators, by whom her Majesty was received with every mark of respect. The Royal party arrived at Osborne shortly after 2 P.M. On Sunday morning her Majesty, Princess Helena, and Prince Leopold, attended Divine service at Osborne. The Rev. J. Protheroe officiated. On Monday morning the Queen and Princess Helena drove out. The Princess Louisa also drove out. Prince Leopold and Princess Beatrice walked in the groupds. In the afternoon the Queen and Princess Beatrice walked and drove on the grounds. On Tuesday morning the Queen walked in the grounds. Princess Louisa drove out. In the afternoon the Queen drove out with Princess Helena. Princess Louisa took an airing. On Wednesday the Queen and Princess Helena walked and drove. Princess Louisa, Prince Leopold, and Princess Beatrice went out in the grounds.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.—On Friday the Prince hunted with the West Norfolk hounds. The Princess drove to the meet at Cane Hill, and saw the hounds throw off. On Saturday the Prince went out shooting on the Frankfort part of the estate. On Sunday the Prince and Princess attended Divine service at Sandringham Church. The Rev. C. Tarver preached the sermon. On Tuesday the Prince attended a private meet of the West Norfolk foxhounds at Sandringham, but no run could be obtained, and his Royal Highness met with his first blank this season. On Wednesday the Prince went to Markham, on a visit to Mr. H. Villebois, the master of the West Norfolk Hunt. On Thursday the Princess joined his Royal Highness at Markham, and remained till yesterday, when they returned to Sandringham.

ORDER OF THE BATH.—The Queen has given orders for the appointment of Lieutenant-Colonel Charles George Gordon, of the Royal Engineers, lately in the service of the Emperor of China; Colonel Henry Harpur Greer, of the 68th Regiment; Charles Burslem Saunders, Esq., and Sir Theophilus John Metcalfe, Bart., of the Bengal Civil Service, to be Companions of the Bath.

MIDDLE CLASS SCHOOLS COMMISSION.—The Queen has directed Letters Patent to be passed under the Great Seal, appointing Lord Taunton, Lord Stanley, Lord Lyttelton, Sir Stafford Northcote, Bart.; Dr.

Hook, Dean of Chichester; the Rev. Dr. Temple, Head Master of Rugby School; the Rev. Anthony Wilson Thorold; Thomas Dyke Acland, Esq.; Edward Baines, Esq.; [illegible] Edward Forster, Esq.; Peter Erle, Esq., Q.C.; and Dr. Storrar, M.D., to be her Majesty's Commissioners to inquire into the education given in schools not comprised within the two former Commissions, bearing date respectively June 30, in the 22d year, and 18th July, in the 25th year of her Majesty's reign, and also to consider and report what measures, if any, are required for the improvement of such education, having especial regard to all endowments applicable or which can rightly be made applicable thereto.

THE CASE OF BISHOP COLENSO.—The pleadings before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Bishop Colenso were concluded on Monday, when Sir Hugh Cairns finished his argument on behalf of the Bishop of Cape Town. He contended that there were three questions to be decided:—1. Had the Bishop of Cape Town jurisdiction to try the Bishop of Natal for heresy and deprive him? 2. Had the Crown jurisdiction in the matter, at this stage, by way of appeal from the sentence? 3. Had the Crown original jurisdiction in this matter, visitatorial or otherwise? In reference to the first question, he contended that the jurisdiction arose from the nature of the case, and was both inherent and consensual. As to the second, he maintained that Court had no jurisdiction, because the letters patent give the appeal to the Archbishop of Canterbury; and if there was an appeal to the Crown at all, it could only arise after a judgment had been given by the Archbishop. And as to the third, he urged that the Crown had foregone any visitatorial power which it might ever have possessed by making the Bishop of Cape Town visitor. Mr. W. M. James then replied on the whole case, and on the conclusion of his address the Lord Chancellor stated that the Court would take time to consider their decision, and that notice would be given to all parties when they were prepared to pronounce judgment.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur announces that the Emperor and Empress will receive the corps diplomatique and great public bodies as usual on New Year's Day, but will not hold their customary levee on the 2d of January. The causes of this omission, not assigned by the Moniteur, but generally credited in society, are the Empress's health, which has been indifferent for some time past, the recent death of M. Mocquard, and the serious illness of Count Bacciochi, who shared to an equal degree with M. Mocquard the Emperor's confidence in matters personal as well as political, and held a high position at Court on account of his near relationship to the Bonaparte family. M. Conti has been appointed the Emperor's chef du cabinet. The confidential post of private secretary, which the late M. Mocquard combined with this appointment, has been conferred on M. Pietri, a relative of the late M. Pietri, famous for his co-operation in the coup d'état, and the success with which he managed the "plebiscite" which sanctioned the transfer of Nice to France. Both gentlemen are natives of Corsica. The message of President Lincoln has been received with great dissatisfaction in Paris, and the allusion to Mexico is considered to be especially insulting to the French Government. The Patrie describes the message as "the card announcing the death of the Union." M. Drouyn de Lhuys, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, has addressed a letter to the Mayor of Sunderland, in which he says:—

"The Emperor's Government is particularly sensible of the cordial reception given in October last by the authorities and population of Sunderland to the commander and crew of the Danae. Such manifestations cannot but strengthen the bonds of friendship which so happily unite France and England, and contribute to the development of friendly relations."

In anticipation of the meeting of the Chambers, various rumours have been current in Paris in reference to the policy of the Government in the ensuing session. Among these may be mentioned a report that it has been proposed to the Emperor, by some of the Ministers, to deprive the Senate and the Corps Legislatif of the right of voting an address in answer to the speech from the throne, and that the Emperor has declared the proposal to be impracticable. Another scheme, emanating it is said from Baron Haussmann, the Prefect of the Seine, proposes to disenfranchise Paris by suppressing the ten representatives of the capital in the Corps Legislatif. The Moniteur has not, as yet, contradicted this rumour, but the unanimity with which the proposal has been condemned by all parties has created a belief that the Emperor will not entertain it. Baron Haussmann has also, it is said, laid a memorial before his Majesty, by which he proposes the creation of a fresh municipal commission for Paris, to consist of 100 members, 30 of whom are to be functionaries having a seat ex-officio, and the others are to be nominated by the Crown. The Archbishop of Paris a few days since issued an interdict against M. de Ségur, a canon of St. Denis, a Roman priests and violent ultramontanist, forbidding him to preach or to act as confessor in any part of his diocese, on the ground that he had expressed an opinion in one of his writings that "a state independent of the church was an enormity, anti-Christian, and opposed to God's word, and that the Inquisition was of Divine right." It is now said that M. de Ségur has withdrawn or explained away this doctrine, and that the interdict has been withdrawn. The Archbishop of Paris and the Bishop of Nancy are now at the head of an active propagandism of Gallican principles among the French clergy. The Sport states that the Prince Imperial was permitted last week for the first time to go out shooting in the preserves at Compiègne, and that for his coup d'essai he killed three pheasants and four rabbits. The heart of Voltaire, which was long deposited at the Chateau de Villette, near Pont Saint-Maxence (Oise), was on the death of the late marquis presented by the heirs to the Minister of Public Instruction for the nation. The Emperor, to whom M. Duruy had referred the subject, decided that the relic should be placed in the Imperial Library, and the transfer of it took place a few days since in the presence of the Ministers of the Interior and of Public Instruction. The Emperor of China has decorated with the Order of the Dragon several French officers who took part in the capture of Nankin. This decoration, which is suspended to a yellow riband, represents the five-clawed imperial dragon, with the following inscription in Chinese characters:—"Before it the lion turns pale, and the tiger is silent!"

SPAIN.—The Queen, after accepting the resignation of the Narvaez Cabinet last week, intrusted the Marquis of Pavia with the formation of a new Ministry. The Marquis submitted to her Majesty a list of names, but the Queen would not accept them. Her Majesty then summoned Señor Lersundi to the Palace, and subsequently Señor Isturitz and the Marquis of Miraflores, with whom long conferences were held. The Ministerial crisis however continued, and Señor Isturitz was ultimately commissioned to form a Cabinet. His endeavours having proved futile, General Narvaez was recalled, and will retain office without any change taking place in the Cabinet. The Cortes were opened on Thursday by the Queen in person. The following is a summary of the Speech from the Throne:—

"The relations of Spain with foreign Powers remain satisfactory, except with Peru, the Government of which State will finally be convinced that justice is on our side. I hope that a perfect understanding will be arrived at without any stain upon the national honour. The official communication of the Archduke Maximilian's accession to the Mexican throne is the commencement of a new era in the political relations between Spain and Mexico, hitherto unfortunately interrupted. The South American republics will see that the sympathy of Spain has no admixture of ambitious projects. The Italian question is still pending, and the revolutionary movement which has been going on in that country has given rise to fresh diplomatic combinations. As soon as affairs are finally settled my Government will take this question into consideration in the manner dictated by prudence, without, however, failing in the respect and filial love which Spain as a Catholic nation professes for the common Father of the Faithful. I am bound to state to you that the general condition of the Monarchy, considered in all its extent, is not very satisfactory, and to remedy this I shall lay before you a bill of great importance. Bills will be introduced relative to financial questions and modifications in the present legislation affecting credit societies. A Bill on the press law, in harmony with the constitution, will also be brought forward."

It will be observed that the Speech made no mention of San Domingo, although it was understood that the Ministers submitted to the Queen a draught of the speech, proposing the abandonment of San Domingo. Marshal Concha has been nominated President of the Senate, and Señor Alexandre Castro has been selected as the Government candidate for the Presidency of the Chamber of Deputies. Queen Christina has arrived in Madrid. The Official Gazette publishes a decree offering interest at the rate of 8 per cent. on all sums deposited in the Government Bank of Deposit for fixed terms of from four to eight months, and 9 per cent. for periods of eight to 12 months.

PORTUGAL.—On the 13th inst., at about 9 A.M., a hurricane burst with great fury over Lisbon, causing great damage to the shipping. Several ships and lighters were sunk in the Tagus, and their cargoes lost. In the Alcantara Gardens, and other exposed places, large trees were blown down, and in Lisbon generally and the suburbs much damage was done to the houses and other property.

HESSE CASSEL.—On Thursday, after a long and animated debate, the Diet resolved by a majority of 25 to 17 that a committee should report on the question whether the Ministry should be accused by the Diet of having violated the Constitution of the country.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.—The semi-official Provinzial Correspondenz of Wednesday says that in order to obtain a well-founded judgment upon all the hereditary claims to the Duchies, the Prussian Government will lay the succession question before the Crown lawyers for their opinion on the subject.

PRUSSIA.—The Guards who were engaged in the Danish war entered Berlin on Saturday. A large concourse of people assembled to witness their arrival, and received them with loud cheers. The King made a speech, in which he said that the Guards had added a new leaf to their glorious history. He announced that medals of commemoration would be granted to them, and special medals to those regiments who had borne a part in the assaults on Düppel and Alsen. It is rumoured that the King also intends to erect a monument in honour of the Prussian soldiers who fell during the war, and in memory of the sieges of Duppel and Alsen.

AUSTRIA.—Baron Halthuber, formerly Austrian Commissioner for Jutland, has been appointed Civil Commissioner for the Duchies. Herr von Lederer has returned to his post in Hamburg, as representative of Austria at the Hanse Towns.

ITALY.—In the sitting of the Italian Parliament on Saturday, General Della Marmora, in answer to Signor Bixio, demonstrated the necessity for the strictest economy, to guarantee the future resources for the maintenance of the army, without impairing the organisation either of the land or sea forces, or the patriotic zeal of the country in anticipating the payment of the taxes imposed upon them the duty of exhausting those resources which the country must always be ready to supply. Considerable reductions in the public expenses would have to be introduced, which, however, endangering the defences of the country. In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Saturday the provisional Budget for the first three months of 1865 was agreed to. The Chamber then adjourned to the 5th of January. General Angioletti has been appointed Minister of Marine. A Royal decree was published on Wednesday, sanctioning the formation of a company for the sale of the Crown lands. The directors of the company are Signori Baldinino, Incisa, Lacosta, and Rossi. Another Royal decree was published yesterday, ordering as a measure of public safety the occupation of the convents, seminaries, and religious establishments in Florence necessary for the purposes of the State. The committee of the Chamber concur in the views of Signor Lanza, the Minister of the Interior, on the question of the administrative organisation of Italy. Among the high society of Turin a decision has been come to that every person whose name stands in the official Gazette as having given 500 francs to the Mendicity Asylum shall be considered to have fulfilled all the duties of politeness relative to visits on the first of the year. The Court of Cassation at Naples has rejected the appeal of the Marquis La Gala and his accomplices. The Pope has published an Encyclical Letter, condemning the principal modern errors concerning revealed religion, philosophy, and civil society. These errors are enumerated in 80 propositions, and are pointed out to the faithful to be refuted. In another Encyclical Letter the Pope grants a jubilee of one month, to be celebrated in 1865. The alleged plot against the life of the Pope and of Cardinal Antonelli, turns out to be a false alarm. The three pretended brothers who were arrested have been recognised by some French gendarmes as brigands, well-known on the Neapolitan frontier. Baron Meyendorff, the Russian Ambassador, has left Rome suddenly for Florence to avoid the Christmas receptions at the Vatican. The rumour that he received his passport was unfounded. It is stated that the Pope will only adopt that measure in the case of the Czar interdicting relations between Rome and the Catholic Church in Poland.

IONIAN ISLANDS.—The Paris papers publish a despatch from Messina announcing that disturbances have broken out in Zante from political causes, and that several persons have been wounded.

GREECE.—The Minister for Foreign Affairs has given in his resignation, which has been accepted by the King. He has been replaced by M. Demetrius Boudouris, formerly member of the Chamber of Representatives.

THE PRINCIPALITIES.—Prince Couza opened the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies on the 15th in person, in the presence of the Diplomatic Corps and the great bodies of the State. The Message delivered by the Prince was greatly applauded.

TUNIS.—Agitation has recommenced in the south. The Arabs who had submitted have thrown off their allegiance to the Bey, and surrounded the camp of General Rutten. Prince Aly set out on the 15th inst. with a body of troops for his relief.

MOROCCO.—The Emperor of Morocco has returned to Fez from Rabat, where he gave an audience to the French Minister. That visit has already produced a good effect, and the Emperor has decided that for the future all applications made to his Government by the representatives of European Powers are to be submitted to him, with the letters in support of them, in order that he may decide on the matter with full knowledge of the facts. Hitherto the Pasha of Tangier has decided these questions without referring to the Emperor. This first step is expected to lead to the more decisive measure so long called for, of allowing the foreign representatives to reside in one of the imperial cities in order to be in direct relations with the Emperor.

EGYPT.—The Egyptian Government has condemned the rumours current on the London and Paris Exchanges that it was about to issue treasury bonds to the amount of 2,500,000*l*.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—Accounts from the Cape to the 20th ult. state that Governor Wodehouse had decided his arbitration virtually in favour of all the Free State claims. This had occasioned great excitement. The disputed lands are very valuable, and admirably adapted both for agricultural and pastoral purposes, and had been held by the Basutos for many years. Portions of the lands were under cultivation by them, but on the governor's decision being known the Free State authorities issued an immediate order to the Basutos to clear out within one month, and summoned the whole of the burghers to eject them, should it be necessary. Moshesh had sent a civil reply to the governor's award, merely saying that he would call a meeting of his councillors, and lay the document before them, but the governor's messenger was treated

Marcus, a convict, had been ... a further term of imprisonment for nine ... forging promissory notes to the amount of ... JAPAN.—The report that Sir Rutherford Alcock had ... recalled has caused great regret among the ... community. It appears however that he has ... been recalled, but has been ordered to come home ... leave of absence, in order to confer with her ... Government on the state of affairs in Japan.

UNITED STATES.—Congress assembled at Washington on the 5th inst. The following is a summary of President Lincoln's Message:—

"An attempt to negotiate with Mr. Davis, the insurgent ... would not result in any good. He would only accept ..., which the North will not grant. The Southern ... can have peace by laying down their arms and ... the national authority. He retracts nothing ... said on slavery, and will not modify the Emancipation Proclamation. The North will cease the war whenever it shall have ceased on the part of those who began it. He recommends the passing of a constitutional amendment abolishing slavery throughout the United States. Referring to the recognition of the Confederates as belligerents, Mr. Lincoln says:—"It is possible that if it were a new and ..., the maritime Powers, with the light they ..., would not concede the privileges of naval ... to the insurgents in the United States, ... as they are and always have been equally ... ports, and harbours. Disloyal emissaries have ... been neither less assiduous nor more successful during ... last year than they were before that time in their efforts, ... under that privilege, to embroil our country in foreign wars. ... desire and determination of the maritime States to ... that design are believed to be as sincere as and cannot ... more earnest than our own." Referring to the war, ... says:—"Since our last annual meeting all the ... positions then occupied by our forces have ... been maintained, and our armies have steadily advanced, ... the regions left in their rear, so that Missouri, ..., Tennessee, and parts of other States have produced ... reasonably fair crops. The most remarkable feature in the military operations of the year is Sherman's attempted march ... directly through the insurgent region. The result ... being known, conjecture in regard to it shall not be ..." Alluding to the State organisation, he says:—"Maryland presents an example of complete success. ... is secure to liberty and the Union for all future. ... genius of the rebellion will no more claim ... Like another foul spirit it has been driven ... It may seek to tear her, but it will do no more" ... the growth of the country during the war, he says:—"... is melancholy to reflect that the war has filled so many graves and carried sorrow to so many hearths, it is some relief to know that, compared with the surviving, the ... have been so few. While corps, and divisions, and ..., and regiments have formed and fought, and dwindled ... out of existence, a great majority of the men who ... formed them are still living, and the material resources of ... country are now more complete and abundant than ever. ... material resources are unexhausted and are believed to be ... inexhaustible. The public purpose is to re-establish and maintain ... The nation's authority is unchanged and believed to be ... unchangeable. Between the Southerners and ourselves the issue ... is distinct, simple, and inflexible. It is an issue which can ... be tried by war and decided by victory. If we yield we ... are beaten. If the Southern people fail their President, he is ... Either way it would be victory and defeat following ... What is true of him who heads the insurgent cause is ... necessarily true of those who follow him. Although ... cannot re-accept the Union they can. Some we ... already desire peace and reunion. They can at any ... moment have peace simply by laying down their arms and ... submitting to the national authority under the Constitution. ... After so much the Government could not, if it would, maintain war against them. The loyal people would not sustain or ... allow it. If questions should remain, we would adjust them ... by peaceful measures of legislation, conference courts and ... votes. The executive power itself would be greatly diminished ... by the cessation of the war. The actual way of pardon, and ... remission of forfeiture however would still be within the ... executive control. A year ago a general pardon and an ... amnesty were offered upon specified terms to all except ... certain designated classes. It was at the same time made ... clear that the excepted classes were within the contemplation ... of special clemency. During the year many ... have availed themselves of the general provisions, and many ... more would do so, only that signs of bad faith ... lead to such precautionary measures as ... a practical process less easy and less certain. ... During the same time also special pardons have ... been granted to the individuals of the excepted classes, and no ... application has been denied. Thus practically the door ... is open to all. It is still so open; but a time may come, ... probably will come, when the public duty shall demand ... it be closed, and that in lieu thereof more rigorous ... terms heretofore be adopted." The condition of ... affairs is reasonably satisfactory. In consequence of the ... injuries committed on the Canadian frontier, notice has ... been given to Great Britain that after the expiration of six ... months the United States must hold themselves at liberty to ... increase their naval armament upon the lakes if necessary. ... Serious political difficulties have arisen in British and ... Mexican affairs, and the northern boundary of the United ... States, which will continue to require the practice of constant ... vigilance and a just conciliatory spirit on the part of the ... United States and the nations concerned. Mexico continues to be the theatre of civil war, while the political relations with that country have undergone no change. The United States at the same time have maintained neutrality between the belligerents. The finances have been successfully administered. The treasury balance is nearly 19,000,000*l*., but the taxes should be further increased. The public debt on July 1 was 1,740,690,030. Another year's war will increase it 500,000,000. The debt is a national private property, and should be distributed among all the people. To secure this a limited amount of some future issue of public securities might be held by bonâ fide purchasers free from taxation and seizure for debt."

The report of Secretary Fessenden states the probable increase of the public debt during the present fiscal year at 482,374,188 dollars, and that the total public debt will amount to 2,223,064,677 dols. by the 1st of July, 1865. He disapproves foreign loans, advocates increased taxation, and says that since the people have pronounced for the continuation of the war until its object shall have been achieved, it is for them to decide whether they will provide the necessary means for prosecuting it by loans, or compel him to resort to a further issue of paper money. He expresses the opinion that if the duration and expense of the war had been foreseen, it would never have been undertaken. The Postmaster General's report shows an increased correspondence with Europe during the year. The receipts of the department were more than 200,000 dollars below the expenses. The Secretary of the Navy says that during the past four years he has made an official record of a series of naval enterprises and achievements wholly without precedent or parallel. The navy now comprises 670 vessels, carrying 4610 guns. The men employed are 50,000. The prizes captured during the year were 324, and the gross proceeds of prize money were over 14,000,000.—The accounts of General Sherman are still contradictory, and Mr. Lincoln himself in a speech at Washington has said that "all knew where Sherman went in at, but no one could tell where he would come out at." The latest news states that his principal force remained several days near Millen, gathering supplies. He resumed his march on the 2d from the north of Millen, and on the 3d was some distance south of that place. On the 4th a battle took place between his cavalry and General Wheeler's Confederate cavalry, in which the former were defeated with heavy loss, and the Federal General Kilpatrick was wounded. On the 7th Sherman was moving for the coast, in the direction of Savannah. The prisoners report that he was almost destitute of provisions. All supplies in his immediate front have been removed or destroyed; the country through which he is marching is generally marshy and unhealthy, and his track was marked by slain soldiers, dead animals, and abandoned matériel. Richmond papers state that there are troops in his front who will resolutely dispute his advance towards Savannah or Darien, after he passes a certain point. His advance is rumoured to be skirmishing with the outposts round Savannah. Confederate accounts report that, previous to setting out upon his march through Georgia, he ordered the burning of every house in East Tennessee, and the general devastation of the country. A Federal expedition under General Foster, which moved inland from Port Royal on the 30th November to meet Sherman, has been defeated and driven back at Grahamsville, on the Charleston and Savannah Railway, leaving 1300 dead and wounded on the field. Foster retired to his gunboats on Broad River, where he has received reinforcements, but up to the 3d he had not resumed the offensive. General Hood has closely besieged Thomas in Nashville. He has cut off communication by land and water, and broken the line connecting Nashville with the North. He has also established a battery on a bluff 14 miles down the Tennessee, which has effectually blockaded that river, and has repulsed seven gunboats which were sent to dislodge him. One brigade of his army has moved in the direction of Murfreesboro, and it is rumoured that his advance under Forrest has crossed the Cumberland River, and is moving towards Kentucky. General Grant is reported to have been reinforced by 4000 men of Sheridan's army. He has advanced the Second and Fifth Corps towards Stony Creek, preparatory, it is believed, to a general movement upon Richmond and Petersburg. Richmond papers of the 7th inst. state that the movement was expected by General Lee, and fully provided against. General Butler has sent three coloured regiments to oppose the Confederates who interfere with the completion of his canal. The Confederates are said to have reoccupied Atlanta in strong force. It is rumoured that General Early is about to advance against Sheridan, and that he has been reinforced by Breckinridge. The Confederate cavalry, under General Rosser, surprised and captured Fort Kelly at New Creek, on the 28th ult., taking eight pieces of artillery, eight stand of colours, and 800 prisoners, and destroying over 200 waggons. General Rosser afterwards captured Piedmont, and destroyed a large amount of Federal stores and all the Government buildings. The prisoners and artillery were all brought off, besides 1500 horses and 1000 head of cattle. Rosser's entire loss was only five men. General Beauregard reports that the Federals evacuated Decatur, Alabama, on the 26th November, after destroying their stores and ammunition. Mr. Chase has been appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. Mr. Seward, in a letter to Mr. Adams, has indignantly refused the request of Lord Wharncliffe to distribute the 17,000*l*. raised at the Liverpool Bazaar among the Confederate prisoners in the North. He says:—

"The American people will be likely to reflect that the sum is insidiously tendered in the name of humanity, and constitutes no large portion of the profits which its contributors may be justly supposed to have derived from the insurgents by exchanging them arms and munitions of war for the coveted productions of imperial and enervating slave labour. Nor will any portion of the American people be disposed to regard the sum so ostentatiously offered for the relief of captured insurgents as a too generous equivalent for the devastation and dissolution which a civil war promoted and protracted by the British subjects has spread throughout the States which before were eminently prosperous and happy. The Southern people have not yet become debased, although they have sadly wandered from the paths of loyalty and patriotism; and therefore they will rejoice, in common with their Northern fellow-countrymen, in being saved by their considerate and loyal Government from the grave insult which Lord Wharncliffe and his associates, in their zeal for the overthrow of the United States, have prepared for the victims of this unnatural and hopeless rebellion."

The New York Times says that British impertinence is fitly rebuked in this letter. The Tribune says that it puts the possibility of a rejoinder beyond even British impudence; while the News denounces the letter as inhuman. The Provost Marshal has urged upon all officers to exercise extraordinary vigilance against the anticipated invasion by the Confederates from Canada. Lord Lyons took leave of the President and Secretary of State on the 6th on his return to England. The Federal House has adopted a joint resolution denationalising all persons who leave the country to avoid draft. 12,000 dollars from the cruiser Florida have been sent to the Navy Department. Captain Winslow has been made a commander, and Lieutenant Cushing a lieutenant commander. The Confederate Congress has passed a resolution denouncing the seizure of the Florida, and declaring that Brazil is bound to enforce the restoration of the vessel. Commissioners have been appointed to confer with Brazil. Resolutions have been introduced into the Confederate Senate vigorously opposing the arming of the slaves, on the ground that as yet no necessity existed for that measure. A Bill however has been introduced into Congress authorising the enrolment of 40,000 negroes for work on the fortifications and camp duties. Another Bill has been introduced sequestrating the property of persons liable to military service who depart from the Confederacy without permission. The Southern press ridicules the idea of Southerners attempting to fire the city of New York. The blockade runners Vixen, Mail, and General Armstrong have been captured.

CANADA.—Accounts from Toronto of Dec. 6 state that the excitement in regard to the Fenian Brotherhood is revived, and becoming more and more intensified. On the previous night an Orange Lodge was broken open, and all its property destroyed by the Fenians. Some fine portraits of the Queen were disgracefully mutilated. The excitement continued on the 6th, and fears of violence were entertained.

MEXICO.—The Emperor Maximilian returned to his capital on October 30, after having spent three months in visiting several important departments of the country. His Majesty has since issued a proclamation declaring the war ended and the empire established.

Address to President Lincoln.—A deputation from the Emancipation Society waited upon the American Minister a few days since, at his residence in Portland Place, to present to his Excellency, for transmission to the United States, an address congratulating President Lincoln on his re-election, and praying that his exertions may shorten the duration of the war, and thoroughly purify his country from the crime and curse of slavery. After complimentary speeches from several members of the deputation, Mr. Adams replied as follows:—

"Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen,—I receive the address which you are pleased to commit to my care with great satisfaction. Coming as it does from an association of such respectability in this kingdom, it cannot fail to be regarded in America as a strong proof of the friendly interest taken by a considerable portion of the English people in the welfare of the United States while passing through their great perils. This will do great good, for I cannot disguise from myself or from you the painful fact that an opposite disposition has been manifested here in very influential circles, and that the knowledge of this has given rise to a general impression among my countrymen that the whole British nation really desires the disruption, and consequent downfall of the power of the United States. Hence has sprung up a corresponding degree of ill-will, which bids fair, if not counteracted, only to increase with time. If such passions be permitted a full indulgence between two nations, it needs little sagacity to foretell that, in the long run, the end is war. Very fortunately for us all in the present case, the demonstrations already made by yourselves, and many other associations whose friendly communications from various portions of the kingdom I am now continually receiving for transmission to America, will enable those who value the blessings of peace and international amity to prove that, whatever may be the hostility of some, it is by no means shared by the greater number of the British people, and ought not to be presumed to be a national impression. Permit me further to observe that the election to which you refer in your address has drawn out as full and general an expression of the opinion of the whole people of the region in which it has taken place as has ever been the case in the most peaceful times. Never was a canvass more perfectly free, nor more latitude taken in the discussion of public questions and of the characters of public men. Under those circumstances it is needless to point out to you how mistaken have been the notions of some that any essential variation has taken place in the general operation of free institutions in all that portion of the United States, constituting much the greatest part, but immediately the theatre of the war. I would further beg leave to call your attention to two points which the history of the late election appears clearly to establish. The first is the practical impossibility of making any effective separation of the personal and political interests of the two sections of America now involved in this deplorable struggle. This is indubitably shown by the fact that at no time in our history has so direct and persistent an effort at interference to control the event of the election of President been made by the people of the insurgent States as upon this last occasion, while they profess—and doubtless honestly—their desire to separate themselves wholly from it. The notorious projects devised by some of their agents at Niagara Falls in the autumn, followed as they were by the nomination at Chicago of a candidate for the Presidency committed to a policy dictated by that portion of the people well known to be most in sympathy, if not in absolute communication, with them, furnish evidence enough of this truth, if the same were not confirmed by the regrets unequivocally expressed since by certain prominent leaders in the Southern States at the failure of their expectations from that nomination. This shows that, whatever might be the sincerity with which either portion of the country might act in the supposition that it should consent to pledge itself to a complete separation, the fact that the political interest of the two are inextricably intertwined will, under every possible circumstance, render all such promises in practice futile and void. The second point to which I would advert is naturally suggested by the first. It is this—that the only real question of difference between the two parties in the election was that which directly involved the interests of the slaveholding insurgents, much more than those of the loyal States. The nomination at Chicago rested on an implied, if not an express engagement, to protect domestic slavery so far as not to make it a question in any plan of pacification or restoration of the Union. The policy of the Government, on the other hand, was well understood to be a restoration of the Union as a primary object, but the settlement of the slave question as a necessary preliminary to a durable re-establishment of peace. If this be a correct statement of the issue, it can be no cause of surprise to find the insurgents straining every nerve to bring about a result favourable to their interests. It was then the fate of slavery that made the turning point in the great decision to be made by the people of the United States on this occasion. If this be so, the result is one in which we may be permitted all to rejoice in common. It has continued a Government which had already done much towards emancipation in the progress of the war, and which might be depended upon to go on doing more, in proportion as matters should approach more nearly the great end of its perfect work. I will conclude, then, with the expression of a hope that, without regard to national distinction, all good men may have cause to rejoice in the termination of this melancholy struggle, if that end be at once the confirmation of a free Government in America, and the eradication of the most formidable evil with which its progress has been heretofore cursed."

The Ranelagh Sewer.—At the last meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works, it was resolved to take immediate steps for covering in the Ranelagh open sewer at Paddington.

New Orphan Asylum.—A meeting was held at the Mansion House a few days since, the Lord Mayor in the chair, in support of a project for the establishment of a new asylum, to be called the Albert Orphan Asylum, to be erected on Bagshot Heath. It is proposed that the asylum, when complete, shall contain 1000 orphans, and that the subscribers shall elect the children without being subject to the annoyance of a canvass.

New Names of Streets.—The Metropolitan Board of Works on the recommendation of the Building Act Committee, has resolved that the thoroughfare extending from Rose Street on the north-eastern side, and from King Street on the south-western side to Long Acre, in the parishes of St. Paul, Covent Garden, and St. Martin-in-the-Fields, be renumbered; that the names King Street and New King Street be abolished; and that the line of thoroughfare be named Garrick Street; and also that the line of thoroughfare between Newington Causeway and Harper Street, now known as Union Road and Horsemonger Lane in the Borough, be all called Union Road.

General Tom Thumb at the Crystal Palace.—General Tom Thumb, Mrs. Stratton, and their infant daughter, with Miss Minnie Warren and Commodore Nutt, made their first appearance at the Crystal Palace on Monday, and were very well received by an immense concourse of visitors. Several children occupying places in the reserved seats were placed beside them by way of contrast. The levee lasted about half an hour. On Tuesday they held a levee in the Board Room of the Palace, when they appeared in the dresses worn at Tom Thumb's wedding; after which they showed themselves to the general visitors as they did on Monday. On Wednesday Commodore Nutt appeared in uniform, and also in the character of an Irishman, with a comic song. The whole party waltzed and promenaded the stage. The receptions have since continued daily, and will be concluded this afternoon.

Anti-Tobacco Society.—The Secretary of the British Anti-Tobacco Society was brought before the magistrate at Westminster Police Court on Monday on the charge of having attempted to extort money by menaces from a gentleman who had been smoking on the Barnes platform of the South-Western Railway. The special menace charged was said to consist in a letter sent to the gentleman, who was a clerk in the War Office, intimating that legal proceedings would not be taken against him if he confessed his fault, and paid 40*s.* to the informer. The magistrate held that the offence was not legally proved, as the law required that money should be positively demanded, while here the payment was only suggested. The summons was therefore dismissed. At the same time he suggested that it would be an improvement if the name of the Society were changed to the Anti British-Tobacco Society.

The late Explosion at Erith.—The good effects of the alarm arising from the late powder explosion are already manifest. Two men were brought before the magistrates at Stratford on Monday, charged with putting powder on board a ship while she was being towed down the river by a steam tug, and were fined, as this was the first time the law was enforced, in the mitigated penalty of 10*s.* and costs, with an intimation that in future the penalty would be more severe.

Charge of Scuttling a Ship.—Two men, named White and Sutton, who have been for some time in custody on the charge of scuttling the ship [illegible] of Newcastle, of which they were master and mate, were brought up on remand before the Lord Mayor on Friday for final examination. It was proved that the ship ran upon a reef of rocks in the Baltic. A carpenter deposed that she made no water until, by the direction of the prisoners, bored several holes in her bottom. The Lord Mayor committed them for trial, and refused bail.

The Late Murder of Mr. Briggs.—The case of Matthews, the cabman, was before the Bankruptcy Court a few days since. He was opposed by some of his creditors, but the Registrar ordered his release from custody, remarking, with regard to the murder expected in the affair of Mr. Briggs's murder, that application were made to Scotland Yard, Matthews's share in the reward would no doubt be assigned for the benefit of his creditors.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended Saturday December 17, were 1449. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 years, 1854—63, corrected for increase of population was 1434. The present return is therefore 15 above the average, a great improvement over the last the preceding five weeks. During the week there were of 951 boys and 1001 girls, in all 1952 children registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854—63 the average number was 1967.

Chelmsford.—The High Sheriff of Essex has appointed Wednesday, the 28th inst., for the execution of Francis Wane, who was convicted last week of the murder of Emily Blunt, at Chadwell Heath. The culprit has confessed his crime, and made various statements confirmatory of the evidence adduced at the trial. He exhibits a lamentable state of ignorance and is unable to write or read.

Gateshead.—On Sunday morning a shocking murder was committed at the Spen, six miles from this town. On the previous day a pitman, named Matthew Atkinson, working at Garesfield Colliery, had been to a pigeon shooting match; and returned home, a little after midnight, drunk. His wife, who was very unwell, was then in bed, it is supposed drunk. They quarrelled shortly after he entered the house, and screams were heard from the cottage, but as they were always quarrelling on pay nights, the neighbours did not pay attention to them at first. At length, however, the screams became so agonising that several persons went to the door and could hear Atkinson beating his wife with the fire-irons. They attempted to force an entrance, but Atkinson threatened to shoot the first who entered his house. He came out shortly afterwards and walked about for a quarter of an hour talking to the neighbours. At the end of that time, with an oath, he said he would go back and finish his wife. No one stopped him, and he resumed his attack upon her, and continued to beat her until he found that she was dying. This appeared to have satisfied him. He then called in the neighbours, who found his wife upon the bed; but she expired in a few seconds. Atkinson was at once apprehended and removed to the lock-up at Blaydon-on-Tyne. The body of the murdered woman was shockingly bruised.

Manchester.—At a meeting of the Central Executive Relief Committee on Monday, Mr. Commissioner Farnall reported a decrease of 5503 in the number of persons receiving relief between the 19th November and the 10th inst. Ashton, Haslingden, Stockport and Burnley exhibited the largest decrease. Grants were made to the amount of 9500*l.* The Honorary Secretary reported that 273*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* had been received during the last three weeks, and that the balance in the bank was 78,611*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* He also reported on the defalcation of 2044*l.* in the moneys intrusted to Mr. Paine, the treasurer of the Hulme Relief Fund, and read a letter from the local secretary stating that the committee, acting under legal advice, have resolved to prosecute Mr. Paine, and have pledged themselves to use every effort to raise the amount deficient. The Central Committee then adjourned for a month.—On Saturday evening Mr. Samuel Crowther, pilot engraver, and his son, were killed by an explosion while the former was manufacturing gas from manganese and chlorate of potass. At the inquest on Tuesday it appeared that he was making the gas for Mr. Morgan, optician, the manganese he was using having been obtained from Mr. Hughes, chemist. Professor Hodges deposed that he had examined this manganese, and that it contained 25 per cent. of pulverised coal or soot, which would render the mixture of the manganese with chlorate of potass as dangerous as gunpowder. The jury found a verdict of Manslaughter against Mr. Hughes, and the coroner committed him for trial, but admitted him to bail.

They had educated to a large degree the people of India; and what, he would ask, did they mean by that? They had taught them enough to shake their belief in their own ancient systems of unbelief. They had given them works of English Deists and deniers of Christianity in abundance, and taught them how to read and understand them. There had grown up in the masses of the population of Hindostan, through England's instrumentality in a great degree, a people of unbelievers, instead of a people of misbelievers. Well, then, what was to be done? What could a meeting like that do? It could do much. If every man and woman present was persuaded of this great truth, that they had a charge from God as for India, and would not rest until they knew they had done something towards its Christianisation, and allowed it to settle down in their hearts as an abiding principle, but let it come out in their prayers and in their actions, and spoke to one another as men did upon things that they cared much about, and felt that ruin must come from a neglect of their duty, they would begin to generate about them an interest in this question which would go far in leading to a redress of the wrong."

SHREWSBURY.—A serious accident occurred to Captain Dod, of "Dod's Peerage," on the 15th inst. He was for the day a guest of Mr. Barnes, M.P., at the Quinta, situated within two miles of Captain Dod's residence at Nant Issa. A shooting party having been organised by young Mr. Barnes, Captain Dod joined it, and while walking along with the muzzle of his gun downwards it is supposed that the trigger caught his watchguard, for in altering its position the gun was discharged, and the contents were lodged in one of his legs. He was promptly attended by two surgeons, who found it necessary to amputate the leg on the following morning.

TIPTON.—One of the enginemen engaged at Gospel Oak Colliery was sent to prison on Friday, for placing in jeopardy the lives of about 60 men. He had neglected to examine the boiler as he ought to have done, and on Friday morning, when about 60 miners were waiting to go down the pit, the boiler plates were seen to be red hot, and it is considered almost a miracle that no explosion took place.

YORK.—Alice Wilson, who was sentenced to death at the assizes on the 12th inst. for the wilful murder of her child at Howden, by suffocating it in a pig-stye, but recommended to mercy by the jury, has been respited during her Majesty's pleasure, and her sentence will be commuted to penal servitude for life.

GREAT TRIAL FOR LIBEL.—The Irish Court of Common Pleas was occupied during the whole of last week with an action for libel which created extraordinary interest in Dublin, and was argued with great eloquence by the advocates engaged. It was an action for libel, brought by Miss Travers, the daughter of Dr. Travers, Librarian of Marsh's Library, against Lady Wilde and her husband, Sir William Wilde. Both the ladies were distinguished for their literary attainments, and the position of the parties in Irish society naturally added to the interest of the cause. Lady Wilde was the sister of Judge Elgee, of Louisiana, whose death we noticed last week, and under the nom de plume of "Speranza," wrote for the Young Ireland party in '48, their patriotic poems and songs, one of which was so decided in its tone that part of the indictment on which the leaders of that movement were tried, was founded upon it. The case as presented to the jury was briefly as follows:—In 1854 Miss Travers, being then 19 years of age, had occasion to consult Sir William, then Dr., Wilde, an eminent oculist and aurist practising in Dublin. Being the daughter of a medical man, she was considered as a gratuitous patient, and an intimacy of a very singular character, considering that Sir W. Wilde was a married man, sprang up between them. They saw each other often, and letters constantly passed between them. Miss Travers's means were limited, and in 1859 Sir W. Wilde lent her small sums of money, took her watch out of pawn, and made her occasional presents. In the early part of 1862, Miss Travers alleges that while she was in Sir W. Wilde's study he caught her in his arms and refused to release her until she called him by his Christian name. She took offence at this, and returned to him unopened a letter he sent her on the following day; but shortly afterwards the intimacy was resumed on its former footing, and in the May of that year Miss Travers was present at an entertainment given by Lady Wilde. In the interim Miss Travers went to Liverpool with the intention of going to Australia, having borrowed 40*l.* from Sir W. Wilde for that purpose. She changed her mind, however, and returned to Dublin. A day or two after having been Lady Wilde's guest she paid that lady a visit, and, without invitation, went up to her bed-room. Lady Wilde was annoyed at what she considered an intrusion, and, having expressed herself to that effect, Miss Travers left the house in no amicable mood. Shortly afterwards she made an arrangement to take Lady Wilde's children to church, but, being behind time in her appointment, found that the children had gone to church with some one else. These two events, though trivial in themselves, are material so far as they show the only grounds of pique between Miss Travers and Lady Wilde. In October of the same year the event took place which gave to the trial its distinctive colouring. In that month Miss Travers swears that she was violated by Sir W. Wilde under the influence of chloroform in the room in which he was accustomed to receive his patients, and in the house in which his wife was living. She said that she told no one of the outrage to which she had been subjected, but nevertheless, on recovering from her unconscious state, she from that hour vowed vengeance against him. The intimacy, however, between her and Sir W. Wilde did not terminate. Letters continued to pass, loans of money were made by Sir. W. Wilde, and Miss Travers continued to visit him in his study. The character of the intimacy, however, speedily changed; angry altercations took place; and on one occasion Miss Travers swallowed, in Sir W. Wilde's presence, a dose of laudanum which would in all probability have killed her if an emetic had not been administered. Then began the realisation of her schemes of vengeance. She published a pamphlet in which, under assumed names, she told the story of her wrongs, but at the same time made no secret that the hero was Sir W. Wilde, and that the heroine was herself, and she publicly defied Sir W. Wilde to bring an action against her for libel. Lady Wilde, who was never pretended by Miss Travers to have injured her, was lampooned equally with her husband; and the nom de plume of "Speranza," under which she had been accustomed to write, was attached to broadsheets and tracts conveying the most scandalous imputations on her husband. Irritated by the constant receipt of these libels, Lady Wilde on the 6th of May, immediately after a most offensive placard had been thrust into the hands of one of her children in her own hall, wrote an indignant letter to Miss Travers's father complaining of his daughter's conduct. In this letter she professed to inform Dr. Travers of the "disreputable conduct" of his daughter, alleging that Miss Travers "consorted with all the low newspaper boys in the place," and employed them to disseminate offensive placards, and "tracts in which she made it appear that he had had an intrigue with Sir William Wilde." The letter went on to state that the object of Miss Travers in these proceedings was to extort money, but that "the wages of disgrace she had so basely treated for and demanded should never be given to her." In this note it was charged that the libel lay, and damages were laid at 2000*l.* The defence was that Lady Wilde had ample warrant for the remonstrance she had addressed to Miss Travers's father. The evidence and addresses of counsel on both sides were protracted through the whole week, and on Saturday afternoon Chief Justice Monahan summed up. He censured the correspondence which Sir William Wilde, a married man, appeared to have entered into with Miss Travers, but reminded the jury that the case they had to try was only whether the letter written by Lady Wilde to the plaintiff's father was a libel or whether it was a privileged communication. He gave his opinion that the letter amounted to libel, but if the jury agreed with him they would say how far the provocation received by Lady Wilde went in reducing damages. After a deliberation of two hours the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff—damages, one farthing and costs.

THE DUBLIN SEWAGE.—The utilisation of the city sewage was brought before the Corporation on the 8th inst. by Mr. M'Clean. Nearly all the sewers of the city on the north and south sides are now emptied into the Liffey. When the tide is out it becomes a canal of black mud, the smell of which is most offensive, especially in summer. The miasma arising from it produces typhus, a disease which the officer of health states to be prevalent at the present time along the banks of the river. When the tide is full the filth is sent back through the sewers, and this is a source of disease as well as inconvenience to the inhabitants of the streets near the quays. The evil has now become quite intolerable, and it has been accordingly determined to construct intercepting sewers, so as to make the Liffey as pure as the Seine, which will be the more easily done, as there is a line of quays on each side of the river. The next thing was to utilise the sewage. The case of Edinburgh was referred to in order to show the immense value it gave to land, producing on an average eight crops of hay in the year, and raising land from 5*s.* to 30*l.* an acre. Dr. Cameron estimates the sewage of Dublin at 100,000*l.* a year. Messrs. Barrington and Jaffers have proposed to construct the intercepting sewers by means of a company, without any risk to the Corporation, which would have a portion of the profits under certain contingencies. The committee received the proposal with satisfaction. Mr. John Norwood, barrister, a new member of the council, moved an amendment, laying down the conditions on which the concession should be made to Messrs. Barrington and Jaffers, the object being to protect the Corporation from liability in connection with the works, and to prevent injury to the health of the community from the deposits of sewage in depôts, &c., by the proposed company; the conditions to be arranged by a committee of the whole house. This amendment was unanimously adopted.

THE YELVERTON MARRIAGE CASE.—The Court of Session on the 10th inst. gave judgment on the petition of Major Yelverton to have the recent judgment of the House of Lords in his favour put into force, and on the application of Mrs. Longworth Yelverton to have the judgment suspended and the whole case reopened by the reception of new evidence. All the four judges—the Lord President and Lords Curriehill, Deas, and Ardmillan—were unanimous in rejecting the application of the pursuer, chiefly on the ground that the new evidence proposed to be offered was not of such a character as was likely to induce the judges in the House of Lords to alter the decision they had already given in the case; and it was also urged by Lord Ardmillan, on the authority of Lord Brougham, that the judgment of the House of Lords could only be altered by Act of Parliament. There was therefore no alternative but to apply the judgment of the House in accordance with the petition of Major Yelverton. The Lord Advocate, who appeared for the pursuer, then said that, before the judgment of the House of Lords was applied, he should move that a minute of reference be made to the oath of Major Yelverton with a view to still having the judgment suspended and the whole case reopened. The Solicitor-General, on behalf of Major Yelverton, objected to this, as no notice of such a motion had been given, and he was not prepared to oppose it. He submitted that the only matters before the Court were the petition of Major Yelverton and the application of the pursuer, and he therefore asked their lordships to pronounce judgment in accordance with the opinions they had already delivered. After some discussion on the point, it was ultimately decided that effect should at once be given to the judgment of the superior court, and the Lord Advocate, on the suggestion of the Lord President, agreed to give in a note asking leave to make the motion he had proposed. On the 13th the Lord Advocate lodged the minute of reference to oath of Major Yelverton, and a note was also lodged by counsel for the defender applying to allow the minute to be seen. The minute and note were referred without discussion to the summer roll.

MURDER AT DORNOCH.—The county of Sutherland was last week, for the first time for many years, disgraced by a murder rivalling in atrocity most of those that of late have been committed. Between 2 and 3 o'clock on Saturday morning a young married man, named Alexander Ross, a native of Dornoch, while in a state of intoxication, went to the house in Dornoch occupied by Mrs. Sutherland and others, and alarmed the inmates by drawing up the lower sash of a window in the house. In the room there were two persons sleeping, Mrs. Sutherland and a young girl. The latter escaped by a back window in her night dress on hearing the noise, and running to the next house, alarmed the inmates, who had recently gone to bed. While raising the alarm, the girl observed a light in another house, and running there, obtained entrance, and apprised the inmates that a man had entered the house of Mrs. Sutherland, and was then in it. For some unexplained reason no one went to Mrs. Sutherland's assistance, nor was the girl allowed to go to the house till nearly 6 in the morning, the hour of the north mail's arrival, when the master of the house to which the girl ran went and informed a relative of Mrs. Sutherland's of the girl's statement. Both then went to the house, and, forcing open the door, found Mrs. Sutherland lying on the floor in her night-dress, dead, and Ross lying by her side asleep. Ross was immediately taken in charge, and has since been committed to prison. He gives no intelligible account of himself, but it is believed that while under the influence of drink, and ignorant of the hour, he had gone to the house to visit the girl, with whom he had some previous acquaintance. The body underwent a post-mortem examination by two medical men, who have reported that Mrs. Sutherland, who is 75 years of age, died from violence.

FATAL ACCIDENT IN THE BLACKHEATH TUNNEL.—On Friday afternoon a frightful accident took place on the North Kent line, by which five persons were killed on the spot and several others severely injured. A ballast train was passing through the Blackheath tunnel on the up line, when six trucks at the end became detached, and remained in the tunnel while the rest of the train proceeded on its journey. Shortly afterwards the express train which left Maidstone at 2.20, entered the tunnel at a speed of nearly 30 miles an hour, and dashed into the trucks of the ballast train which had been left behind. The trucks, upon which there were six or seven platelayers, were crushed up one on the other. The engine and tender of the express were thrown over on their sides, and the brake van following the engine, with the first two carriages, were capsized and nearly shivered to atoms. Five of the platelayers on the trucks were killed on the spot, the driver and fireman of the express were found under the engine so frightfully scalded and burnt, that the fireman has since died. The following passengers were seriously hurt:—Mrs. Gembling, of 32, Hereford Street, Portsea, was greatly shaken, and as she is near her confinement, danger is feared in consequence. Mrs. Ely, of Walthamstow, received a compound fracture of the right leg and frightful contusions of left leg and head. Mrs. Caroline Browning, of 7, London Wall, had concussion of brain. Miss Louisa Price, of Effra Road, Brixton, had fractured scapula and ribs and severe internal injuries. Miss Jane Price, aged 25, of Union Square, Trinity Square, had her leg fractured. Mr. Eric Windus, of 23, Terrace, Greenhithe, received severe contusions of left leg and arm, and Mrs. Windus, his wife, fracture of the right leg and severe injury to the left knee, and was also much bruised about the body and face. She also is far advanced in pregnancy. Miss Gillingham, of Forest Hill, sustained a fracture of the leg. John Cullin, of Charles Street, Peckham, had both legs broken, and it is expected that he will have to submit to amputation of both limbs. Mr. Joseph James Albert, of 14, Upper Porchester Street, Hyde Park, had his legs and ribs injured. Dr. Browne of the War Office was severely injured internally and is now lying at the Golden Cross, Strand, in a precarious state. Mr. E. G. Mayers and Mr. J. Hockley, also of the War Office, were crushed with others among the débris. Mr. Mayers' sustained a fracture of the left leg, severe laceration of the right leg, and contusions on the back and body. Mr. Hockley suffered severe contusions on the knee, besides other injuries of a more or less serious nature. The head guard had a narrow escape, as his brake was all but smashed, and though much injured, he is not dangerously so. The under guard was severely shaken and contused. Up to midnight on Friday the engine had not been removed from across the lines, so that the traffic was not resumed until late on Saturday. The coroner's inquest on the platelayers who were killed was opened on Monday at Blackheath, and that on the fireman who died subsequently was opened on Tuesday at Woolwich. After some formal evidence had been taken, both inquests were adjourned for a fortnight.

COLLISION ON THE GREENWICH.—On Monday morning a collision occurred on this line, and, like that of Friday in Blackheath Tunnel, through a failure in the signalling. The scene of this accident was the junction where the Greenwich line diverges between London Bridge and New Cross, at which spot, shortly before 8 o'clock, an engine was on the up-line preparing to run on the metals of the North Kent, when the passenger train from Greenwich came up and ran into it. The driver and stoker of the passenger train and some of the passengers were much injured, and it was rumoured that one of the men on the other engine was killed. The driver and stoker were conveyed to Guy's Hospital, where they still remain. The accident is said to have been caused by the signal "All clear" having been given at the last point which the passenger train passed, and the driver was proceeding in perfect security through a dense fog until the moment when the collision took place. A large body of men was employed till dark in repairing the damage done to the line, but the traffic was resumed soon after the accident.

COLLISIONS ON THE GREAT WESTERN.—On Thursday morning an alarming collision occurred at the Slough Station of the Great Western. Between one and two o'clock in the morning a goods train was shunted from the main line to a narrow-gauge line in the centre of the station, but the points which had been closed to admit its passing were left in that position. A parcels train which had to pass the station without stopping came up shortly afterwards at the rate of 30 miles an hour, passed upon the mid line, and dashed into the stationary train. Several waggons of the goods train were crushed or broken up, and their contents scattered over the line. A second-class and composite carriage of the parcels train had their sides nearly smashed in, the glass and windows being entirely destroyed, while the large break van was crushed like an egg-shell, and ultimately got off the rails into the six-foot, when it stopped. The works on the side of its engine, where it had dragged against the goods train, were nearly swept away, and the locomotive itself disabled, while several of the carriages, trucks, and vans of both trains were turned over, and the ruins piled up in a confused mass on the middle of the line, thus completely blocking it up. The driver and stoker of the parcels train escaped without injury, while the guard of the goods train also had a very narrow escape.—On Thursday night the 15th inst. the express train from Birmingham, due in Paddington at 10.25, ran into a narrow-gauge salt train which had been shunted on the up line at the Pangbourne station. The signal, when first seen by the driver of the express train, indicated that all was right, but was almost immediately reversed, showing that there was something on the line. He did all in his power to stop the train, but it was proceeding at express rate, and the space was too short to admit of the speed being much checked. The result was that the engine ran into the goods train, forcing the guard's van over the top of the salt vans, the first van being dashed into pieces, and the second extensively damaged, while the engine of the express left the rails and buried itself 2 or 3 inches in the gravel. The [illegible] injured in the ribs, but the passengers [illegible] severe shaking. The express, together with [illegible] in London at 11 P.M., did not arrive [illegible] until half-past 4 o'clock on Friday morning, in consequence of the company being able to run [illegible] one line, upwards of a dozen trains were waiting [illegible] Pangbourne Station.

COLLISION ON THE LANCASHIRE AND [illegible]. On Tuesday evening, a collision occurred [illegible] side of the Westhoughton Station. The train from Manchester to Liverpool ran into a coal train [illegible] out of a siding, scattering the trucks in all [illegible] The engine was fortunately free from the [illegible] was able to run forward to Wigan for assistance. Several of the passengers were much shaken, and [illegible] or two sustained severe injuries.

THE LUDGATE HILL STATION.—On Wednesday the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company [illegible] running trains across their bridge at Blackfriars to the new station of the Metropolitan Extension at Ludgate Hill. The first train crossed [illegible] Bridge and ran into the station a little before [illegible] and after that there was a regular stream [illegible] going both ways across the bridge. There are [illegible] lines of rails laid down, but for the present only [illegible] are used. The station opened is a temporary one, 300 feet long, built entirely of timber, and is entered from Bridge Street by way of Union Street and [illegible] Lane. The exit is in Earl Street. It is said that the permanent station, which is nearer [illegible] Hill, will be completed before March or April.

HOME CIRCUIT: MAIDSTONE.—The Orpington Murder. Edward William Staples, 23, and James Turner, [illegible] charged with the wilful murder of a man named [illegible] Orpington, near Bromley, on the 19th November. It was remembered that all three were labourers, and were drinking together at a public house in Orpington when a quarrel arose between them. Deceased was driven home, but the two prisoners went after him, and a policeman came up a few minutes afterwards and found him lying on the ground bleeding from what proved to be a fractured skull, and the prisoners were endeavouring to make up. The jury found them both Guilty of Manslaughter, with a recommendation to mercy; and Baron Channell sentenced them to penal servitude for five years.

OXFORD CIRCUIT: WORCESTER.—The Ombersley Murder. John Butler was indicted for the wilful murder of [illegible] Gulliver, at Ombersley, on the 13th August last. [illegible] was a lock-keeper at Holt Fleet, one of the locks on the Severn navigation. After the death of his wife [illegible] he took deceased to live with him as his housekeeper, according to the testimony of the neighbours, they often quarrelled, and lately deceased had been subjected to ill-treatment from him. On the day in question he was very ferocious to her, and having ill-used her [illegible] turned her out of doors. She ventured back late [illegible] shortly afterwards screams were heard from the [illegible] short time. In the morning Butler informed his son that the woman had not returned, but he expected [illegible] do so in a day or two. From a variety of circumstances suspicion was aroused, the river was dragged, and the deceased was taken out some yards from the mouth of the lock. Several marks of violence were found upon the body, and it was the opinion of medical men that deceased was stunned by blows before she was thrown into the water. The jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder, with a recommendation to mercy on the ground of the prisoner's advanced age. Mr. Justice Byles assumed the black cap, and passed sentence of Death in the usual form. The prisoner remained unmoved throughout the whole of the proceedings.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT: LIVERPOOL.—The Liverpool Murder. Henry Brown, 32, and Thomas Lindon, 27, were indicted for the wilful murder of Thomas M'Carthy, at Liverpool, on the 1st inst. It appears that both the prisoners and the deceased were connected with disreputable houses, and had been drinking with some women at various public houses. On leaving [illegible] two prisoners and deceased went into the street, where [illegible] the girls saw Brown take a pistol from his pocket and strike [illegible] into deceased's eye. Deceased fell, and Linden then struck [illegible] him heavily in the side when he was lying on the ground. The prisoners then lifted him up, when Brown struck him a [illegible] time in the eye with the pistol, knocked him down, and [illegible] who wore heavy boots, again kicked deceased. It did not appear that he had given any provocation. Deceased died a few days after, and a post-mortem examination showed that death had been caused by inflamation of the brain, caused by a severe wound on the left eye such as the barrel [illegible] would cause. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty against both prisoners, but recommended Linden to mercy. Mr. Justice Byles said that the recommendation of the jury in favour of Linden would be forwarded to the proper quarter, but he could hold out no hope of a remission. He in the meantime he besought both of them to make the most of the time allotted to them in making their peace with God. In the case of Brown no doubt could be entertained of the clearness with which his guilt had been established. His lordship then passed sentence of Death in the usual form. Ellis Green, 46, was indicted for the murder of Elizabeth Jones, his sister-in-law, at Liverpool, on the 1st of October. The prisoner, his wife, and deceased lived together in a court leading from Harrington Street. On the night in question prisoner came home intoxicated, and almost immediately commenced an assault upon his wife and deceased. He knocked deceased down with a violent blow, and placing a box upon her chest, and with his nailed boots inflicted serious injuries upon her. He afterwards kicked her with great fury about the head and face, and not content with that he threw the box upon the breast of deceased, and struck several blows upon the head and face with his fist. She tried to get to her feet, but fell down again; blood ran from her mouth and nostrils, and she was removed to the Northern Hospital, where she died on the following Monday. In defence it was urged that the prisoner was not aware of the dreadful injuries which he was inflicting, as he was drunk, and he had no malicious intention; and that the crime was manslaughter. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty. Mr. Justice Mellor passed sentence of Death in the usual form.—

MIDLAND CIRCUIT: LEEDS.—The Bradford Murder. John Hanson, 22, warp dealer, was charged with the wilful murder of David Armitage, at Bradford, on the 31st October. It appeared that about 10 o'clock on the night named three men were walking along the high road near Bradford, and overtook the prisoner and deceased in company with a young woman. A dispute arose between them whether the prisoner should pass on the wall side [illegible]

Miscellaneous.

THE SHELL MOUNDS OF CAITHNESS.—At a recent meeting of the Anthropological Society, Mr. Laing, the late Finance Minister in India, read a paper on the shell mounds at Keiss, in Caithness, and the contents of some kists found in and near them. The place where these mounds have been collected is about seven miles to the north of Wick, extending for some distance along the coast and for a mile or two inland. The interest attached to them is that they resemble the "kitchen middens" of Denmark, which consist of heaps of shells and bones, the refuse of the food of the men who are supposed to have lived in the prehistoric period. Mr. Laing said that considerable confusion had arisen in the exploration of the kitchen middens from want of care, and the implements of the early stone period had thereby become mingled with those of bronze; but he had been careful in his excavations in Caithness to avoid such confusion. He described five of the shell mounds which he had examined, and the results had shown that the heaps had been accumulated at different periods. In the lowest stratum were found mingled with the shells of limpets and periwinkles, which appear to have constituted the principal articles of food of these ancient people, some bones of oxen, of horses, and pigs, and stone implements of the rudest possible kind. Specimens were also found of the bones of a bird that has long been extinct. In continuing his explorations he came to some kists consisting of slabs of stone just large enough to hold the body of a man, and inside, covered with sand, he discovered the skeletons of those who had been interred. Most of them were very short, not being more than 5 feet 4 inches long, and in those kists no implements of any kind were found; but in two instances he discovered kists of a much larger size, the skeletons in which measured 6 feet and 6 feet 4 inches. These were presumed to have been the chiefs of the race, and buried with one of them were 15 stone implements of small size and of the rudest character, exhibiting a lower degree of art than the flint implements found with the bones of extinct animals in tertiary geological deposits. Several of the skulls were exhibited on the table. The skulls of the chieftains presented little difference from those of ancient British skulls, but the others appeared to be of a lower type, and to resemble in some particulars the skulls of negroes. Among the shells and bones found in the mounds there were two human jawbones, one of which was the jawbone of a child about five years old, which bore the marks of having been gnawed, indicating that the child had been eaten. He also mentioned that on some of the shell mounds there are the remains of round bays built with the sandstone of the neighbourhood, and evidently constructed at different periods; the foundations of them being the heaps of shells constituting the lowest stratum of the mounds. The inference he drew from the small size of the implements found, and from the fact that most of them were made from the stone of the neighbourhood, was that the ancient people by whom the mounds had been accumulated had no communication with the inhabitants of districts from which flints or harder stones could have been procured. In the discussion which followed the reading of this paper, Professor Owen said that the skulls differed in several essential particulars from the form of the Ethiopian skull; one of them might be mistaken, from part of its configuration, for that of an Australian, but the small size of the molar teeth showed that it was of a different type. With respect to the jaw-bone of the child, he observed that he was well acquainted with the marks made by savages on the jaws of animals they devoured as food, and he feared the evidence which the child's jaw afforded tended to prove that our progenitors who inhabited Scotland at a remote period must have been cannibals. The dental cavity is filled with nerve pulp, which savages relish, and the child's jaw-bone indicated that it had been broken to extract that substance. The fact of chief interest deduced from the examination of the remains of the animals was the presence of bones of the great awk, now deemed extinct by ornithologists, but thus clearly proved to be entitled to a place in the records of British birds. The discussion was ultimately adjourned to Tuesday, the 20th inst., when Dr. Hunt, the President, adverted to the vague manner in which the subject had been hitherto treated, by adducing general resemblances between the skulls found in Caithness and those of negroes and Australians, and called attention to the points to which it was desirable to direct attention, with the view of ascertaining who were the primitive inhabitants of this island. Mr. Higgins, Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Carter Blake, Dr. Miller, Mr. M'Clay, Mr. Prideaux, Mr. Reddie, Mr. Bendyshe, and other gentlemen took part in the discussion, which turned principally on the character of the skulls, the antiquity of the implements, and on the question whether those ancient inhabitants of Scotland were cannibals. Mr. Carter Blake compared the skulls with those of other types, for the purpose of showing that they did not correspond with the skulls of negroes or Australians, and he was especially desirous to disprove the opinion expressed by Professor Huxley at the last meeting of the Ethnological Society, that they belonged to what was called the "river-bed" class of skulls. The question of cannibalism was taken up rather warmly by Mr. M'Clay, a native of Caithness, who was anxious to exculpate his ancestors from such a charge. He considered the fact of the finding of a single jaw-bone of a child among the shells and bones, the refuse of food, was no proof of cannibalism; that it might have been gnawed by a wolf, or the child might have been murdered and her body thrown on the heap. Mr. Bendyshe quoted St. Jerome to show that the savages brought from the north of Scotland by the Romans preferred human flesh to that of oxen, and that there were certain parts of the body, such as the breasts, that they particularly relished as "tit bits." Captain Burton said that his experience as a traveller taught him that cannibalism was a necessary state through which mankind must pass in their progress to civilisation. He was willing, in consideration of the feelings of some gentlemen present, to except Caithness, but only Caithness. Mr. Laing, in reply, said that in regard to the question of cannibalism, he inclined to think, from the circumstances in which the jaw of the child was found, that in that instance at least the body had been eaten; and he referred to the evidence of Professor Owen respecting the manner in which the bone had been broken to extract the marrow, in confirmation of that opinion. Next, as to the character of the skulls, they were different from those found in the Danish "kitchen middens," for the latter were round, resembling those of the modern Esquimaux, while those from the kists in Caithness were of an opposite character, and indicated a southern origin. The proof of the great antiquity of the people was to be seen in the extreme rudeness of the weapons found in the kists and in the lowest stratum of shells. Those implements were of the rudest possible kind, and resembled some found in the kitchen middens of Denmark. In the museum at Copenhagen, the implements taken from the middens were classed in the order of antiquity according to the rudeness of their construction, and the most ancient exactly resembled those brought from Caithness. He did not attribute very great antiquity to them, not equal to that of the implements found in geological deposits, but he thought they might be dated several hundred years before the Christian era.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Dec. 19.

The supply of Beasts is large as compared with the corresponding day of last year; but last Monday's supply being short, there is a demand for choice descriptions. Prices are well maintained throughout. The number of Sheep is large for the day, and trade for them very slow. On the average prices are lower. Good Calves are scarce and dearer. From Germany and Holland there are 810 Beasts, 470 Sheep, 20 Calves, and 130 Pigs; from Scotland, 180 Beasts; from Ireland, 150; from Norfolk and Suffolk, 1030; and 1200 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

The supply of Beasts is large for the day, this being almost a holiday market. The number of Sheep is also large. There is but a very small amount of business transacted in either department. The few sales effected are at lower rates. Good Calves are scarce, and realise late quotations. Our foreign supply consists of 295 Beasts, 450 Sheep, and 22 Calves,

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Dec. 19.

There was a short supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this day's market, and a moderate quantity of spring corn, with fair arrivals of Scotch and Irish Oats. There have been large imports of foreign Oats, and a moderate addition of other articles. There was a fair business transacted in English Wheat at last Monday's prices for dry samples. Foreign Wheat was in retail request at no variation in prices. Town-made Flour was unaltered. Country marks brought about previous rates. American brands sold fully as high. Best malting Barley was more inquired for, at quite as high rates. Secondary sorts were dull, but grinding samples were more saleable. Malt realised about former quotations. Beans made previous rates. Peas commanded as high prices. The sales of Oats were to a fair extent at last Monday's currency.

FRIDAY, Dec. 23.

The arrivals of English Wheat fresh up this morning were limited, but in fair average condition. Very few buyers were in attendance, and the demand for both red and white qualities was inactive; nevertheless, Monday's prices were supported. We were well supplied with foreign Wheat. Importers generally were tolerably firm as to price, but the business doing was much restricted, at about previous quotations. Floating cargoes of grain commanded very little attention, at about last week's currency. The show of both English and foreign Barley was tolerably extensive. Malting parcels sold to a moderate extent, on former terms. Grinding and distilling qualities were very dull, but not cheaper. We have to report a dull sale for malt, the supply of which was seasonably extensive, at about stationary prices. Oats changed hands to a fair extent at Monday's quotations. The supply was rather on the increase. Beans met a heavy inquiry, at barely late rates. In Peas very little was passing. Prices, however, were supported. The Flour trade was in a sluggish state on former terms. Linseed and cakes were steady in price. In other articles very little was doing. This market will be closed on Monday next.

LIVERPOOL: Dec. 20.—We have had a fair attendance of millers and dealers at our Corn Exchange this morning, and Wheat has attracted a good consumptive demand at the extreme rates of last Friday. Flour meets a fair share of inquiry at former prices. Indian Corn is checked by the advance of 6d. per qr. demanded, at which holders remain firm. Oats and Oatmeal slow of sale. Beans, Peas, and Barley are each steady at late rates. Market closes firm, but cannot be called active.

FRIDAY, Dec. 23.—The market was fairly attended. Wheat, very little offering, and prices are 1d. per cental dearer; demand good. Flour quiet, at late rates. Indian Corn held for 3d. to 4d. advance. Beans, Oats, and Oatmeal firm, at late quotations.

for the South, where it will no doubt co-operate with General SHERMAN in his future movements. From Tennessee we learn that General HOOD, who had shut up the Federal army in Nashville, has been routed by General THOMAS, with a loss of from 3000 to 5000 prisoners, and from 30 to 40 cannon. General GRANT has despatched an expedition under General WARREN to destroy the Weldon Railroad, with the mills and depots, in order to prevent the Confederates from receiving supplies by that road. General WARREN destroyed the bridge across the Notoway River, and 15 miles of railroad, but found the Confederates in such force and so strongly entrenched near Hicksford, that his further progress was effectually barred, and he returned forthwith to head-quarters. The House of Representatives has adopted by a majority of 85 to 51 the resolutions for terminating the Reciprocity Treaty with Great Britain.

A telegram from Calcutta states that the British forces have entered the Bhootan territory, and commenced operations against the hostile chiefs by assaulting the fortress of Dalimkote, which they captured with slight loss; but an accidental explosion of powder had caused the death of three officers and seven men.

THE COURT.—The Queen and Royal family continue at Osborne. On Saturday Prince Arthur arrived at Osborne from Greenwich Park. Prince Leiningen arrived on a visit to her Majesty. In the afternoon the Queen distributed Christmas gifts to the wives of the labourers and others on the Osborne Estate and the children of the Whippingham School. The presents were laid out in the servants' hall, and consisted of articles of clothing for the women, and toys of various descriptions for the children, for whom also a Christmas tree was prepared. Her Majesty was assisted in the distribution of the gifts by the Princesses Helena, Louisa, and Beatrice, Prince Arthur and Prince Leopold. On Sunday afternoon the Queen, the Princess Helena, Prince Arthur, Prince Leopold, and Prince Leiningen, attended Divine Service at Whippingham Church. On Monday the Queen, Princess Helena, and Princess Louisa, walked in the grounds. On Tuesday the Queen, accompanied by Prince Arthur and Prince Leopold, walked out; Princess Louisa took a drive. On Wednesday the Queen and Royal family took their usual exercise in the grounds.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.—The Prince returned to Sandringham on Friday, from his visit to Mr. H. Villebois, the master of the West Norfolk Hunt. The Princess did not go to Marham House, as was expected, in consequence of the inclemency of the weather. The first day of the Prince's visit was spent in shooting the Narborough Contract, when about 500 head of game were bagged, and the second was spent in the Marham Scrubbs, when nearly 600 head were killed. On Saturday the school children on the Royal estate were presented by their Royal Highnesses with new scarlet cloaks, jackets, and caps, and every cottager received an allowance of beer according to the extent of his family. The Prince afterwards went out shooting. On Christmas-day their Royal Highnesses attended Divine service at Sandringham Church, and received the Sacrament. On Monday the Prince's labourers, numbering 120, and the children belonging to the Sandringham, West Newton, Wolferton, and Dersingham schools, numbering 150, making a total of 270, were entertained at dinner at Sandringham in the presence of the Prince and Princess and Prince Albert Victor. On Tuesday the Prince, accompanied by Prince Leiningen, the Marquis of Bowmont, Earl Cowper, Sir Frederick Johnstone, and the Hon. W. Carrington, who arrived on the previous day on a visit, went out cover shooting. On Wednesday the Prince and his guests again went out shooting. Their Royal Highnesses will proceed to Holkham on Monday, on a visit to the Earl and Countess of Leicester, who will give a grand ball on the 5th to a large number of the county aristocracy in honour of their Royal Highnesses.

Ernest Hawkins to the canonry of Westminster, has been conferred by the Bishop of London on the Rev. Dr Mortimer, Head Master of the City of London School. The Venerable R W. Evans, B.D., has resigned the archdeaconry of Westmoreland, and the Bishop of Carlisle has appointed the Rev. John Cooper, M.A., vicar of Kendal, as his successor.

ARRIVAL OF LORD LYONS.—The Royal mail steamer China, from New York, arrived at Liverpool on Sunday morning. Among her passengers were Lord Lyons, British Minister at Washington, and Professor Goldwin Smith.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur of Thursday publishes a Note, stating that the extraordinary Budget for 1866, which amounts to a higher figure than the previous year, will be entirely balanced without having recourse to any extraordinary financial measures. It is stated that all the men at present on leave have received notice that they are placed in the reserve. The number to which the measure applies amounts, it is said, to 120,000. The corps of occupation at Rome is also to be greatly reduced. The Patrie announces that the opening of the Legislative Session will take place between the 10th and the 15th of February, and that the Budget will be laid before the Corps Legislatif on the first day of the session, so as to afford ample time for its discussion. It is likewise said that the monthly allowance at present paid to the members of the Corps Législatif will be converted into a fixed sum for the Session, so that the deputies will no longer have any interest in protracting the sittings into the summer months as they did this year.—The Paris papers, with scarcely an exception, condemn the Pope's Encyclical Letter as a revival of mediæval doctrines, and consider that by its publication the Pope has irretrievably damaged his own cause, has widened the breach between himself and the Court of the Tuileries, and declared war against modern society. The Constitutionnel, in an article signed by M. Paulin Limayrac, states that the Letter has caused general surprise; that its application is impossible, and that if any danger exists, it is in the reaction to which such attempts may give rise. France, it says, will remain faithful to the principles inscribed at the head of the Constitution. The same paper of yesterday, in another article signed by M. Paulin Limayrac, says that the result of the Encyclical Letter is to "control the consciences of Catholics, to rejoice the enemies of the Church, and thus increase the difficulties of the mission which France has undertaken and which she pursues in the interest of the Holy See." The Opinion Nationale says that the Holy See has consummated in the most formal way its rupture with every Government founded on national sovereignty. The Siècle points out that moderate and enlightened Catholics like Count de Montalembert, who hold that liberty and the Papacy are not antagonistic, are reduced to silence, and that the modern Torquemadas, such as M. Veuillot, find their extreme doctrines ratified, endorsed, and adopted by the Pope himself. The Temps says:—

"The Holy See condemns wholesale and retail all that modern society has thought and accomplished since the middle ages . . . It is specially France, the 'eldest daughter of the Church,' who is charged with entertaining impudent and perverse opinions. We are no friends to the Concordat, but we must confess that such language is calculated to surprise us."

The France describes it as an interdict launched forth against the principles which at present serve as the basis of political society, and says:—

"Liberty of conscience, of worship, and of opinion, complete independence of the civil as regards the religious power, are therein designated as pernicious and detestable errors. The theory which results from the document is this:—The people in the hand of their princes; the princes under the authority of the Pope; the Pope, to an extent of which he alone is the judge, may interfere in temporal affairs; the princes cannot under any pretext do so in religious matters; the Roman Catholic religion alone is to possess the right of having a public worship; the princes are obliged to protect it, and to repress the celebration of other forms of worship, not only in the name of public order, but because those worships are contrary to the true religion; the Church has the right to inflict corporal punishments on those who violate its laws, and the crime of heresy, which has been effaced from all modern codes, is maintained and punished as in the middle age. The old public law, which in France served as the basis of the relations of the Church and the State, is not less reproved than our present one. What will be the effect of this new manifestation of the Roman Court? In our opinion it will be the same as that of the condemnation pronounced by Gregory XVI. against modern liberties in 1832."

The Duchess of Norfolk has recently visited France, accompanied by her son, the young duke, and other members of her family, for the purpose of taking a farewell of Lady Minna Fitzalan Howard, her Grace's second daughter, who, after passing through the customary course as a novitiate, has taken the black veil. The new nun only completed her 21st year last month.—A curious manuscript has just been purchased at a second-hand book shop at Lyons, and placed among the archives of that city. The volume, written on parchment, gives an account of the receipts and expenses of the province of the Lyonnais and of the city of Lyons for three years at the end of the 16th century, with numerous details connected with the history of that part of the country.—An old arm chair has just been disposed of at the sale rooms in the Rue Drouot, which possessed all the interest attaching to an historical relic. It was made for Maria Theresa, and occupied the post of honour in her boudoir. At her death it came into the possession of her daughter, Marie Antoinette; and was afterwards one of the few articles of furniture the Royal captives in the Temple were permitted to retain. After the tragical death of the King and Queen, his Majesty's valet, Clery, was permitted to take it away. He carried it to England, where it successively passed into the hands of the Prince Regent and the Duke of Cumberland. The latter took it with him to Berlin, where it was given to an upholsterer to repair. The workman engaged in the renovation discovered in the lining a diamond the miniature of a boy, and a collection of He appropriated the jewel, and gave the papers to a watchmaker named Naundorff. discovered the miniature to be the likeness young Prince, and the papers to be secret from Louis XVI. On the strength of these himself off as Louis XVII., and after sundry as the Duke de Normandie, died in Java ago. The upholsterer revealed what he had on his deathbed; and the arm chair was his relatives, hoping, probably, to find some in it. It then passed into the hands of a traveller, who brought it to Paris, where it possession of an old woman who died in an and, finally, was disposed of the other antiquarian, to whom it was knocked down francs.—This is the severest winter which known in Paris for many years, and the low temperature is occasioning great distress among poorer classes.

SPAIN.—A Council of War was held on the question of San Domingo. General P... nounced himself entirely opposed to the abandonment of the island from a military point of view, submitted to what might be recommended Government upon political or economical The other members of the Council, with the possibility of temporarily suppressing the rection, were in favour of abandoning the island. Spanish soldiers were sacrificed, falling victims the enemy, but the climate, without glory or the country.—It is said that the chief topic sation at the Spanish Court is the scandal the recent marriage of Mdlle. Balfe, the divorced Sir John Crampton, the English ambassador, to of the first class, in whose veins the purest is supposed to flow. It appears that the Queen notified to the duke her regret that it will be for her to receive his bride at Court, as she incur the risk of exposing the Ambassador of great Powers to the unpleasant situations which arise from his meeting his former wife at the The duke, on receiving this communication, returned to her Majesty not only all his orders, gold key as one of the Court Chamberlains.

THE DUCHIES.—It is announced that Bavaria decided on advancing her title to the Duchies. number of claimants is now raised to seven—the of Augustenburg, Prince Peter of Oldenburg, Prince of Hesse, the Ernestine branch of the House Saxony, Prussia, Austria, and Bavaria. There is a rumour that a claim has been preferred by the of Rantzau, formerly proprietor of the Rantzau, which was expropriated by Denmark another by Count Styrum, who is related to the House of Oldenburg.

HESSE CASSEL.—Several German journals speak the probability of the Elector of Hesse being set by the Diet as incapable of governing. The Landgrave William is the nearest agnate, but as he will be 77th year in the present month, his son Frederick aged 44, and married to the daughter of Prince of Prussia, will, it is expected, be appointed Regent should a change take place.

BAVARIA.—It is asserted that the negotiations Bamberg between Herr von der Ptordten and Baron von Beust have resulted in a complete understanding between the Saxon and Bavarian Governments relative to the further steps to be taken in the question of the Duchies. The conference also had reference to the scheme for dividing Germany into three Powers—Austria, Prussia, and the Middle States. This plan was agreed upon in principle.

AUSTRIA.—The Archduke Louis Joseph, youngest brother of the late Emperor, Francis I., died on the 22d inst., in his 80th year. He was born at Florence in 1784, and during the reigns of his brothers Ferdinand I. and Francis I., exercised a considerable influence on the government.

PRUSSIA.—Herr von Balan has been appointed Prussian Envoy at Brussels. Herr von Heydebrand, formerly Minister at Weimar, has been appointed representative of Prussia at the Papal Court. Judgment was delivered on Friday in the cases of the Polish prisoners indicted for high treason. The majority were acquitted. The remainder found guilty of acts tending to the commission of treason. Extenuating circumstances, however, admitted. Sentence of death was passed upon the following refugees, in accordance with the of the public prosecutor:—Dzialynski, Guttry, Wawicz, Skoraczewski, Taczanowski, Zakezewski, Latowski, Jaroczewski, Seytried, and Lukas. The following were sentenced to 12 months' ment:—Zorawski Mankowski, Czartoryski, Sezaniecki. Kurnatowski, Mielecki, Hulewicz, kowski, Zablocki, Moszczewski Mittelstadt, well, Natalis von Sulerzyski, Kalkstein, Chotomski, Ketezynski, and Schultz. To 15 imprisonment:—Rymarkiewicz and Jarochowski 18 months' imprisonment: Rustejko and Theodor Jackowski. To two years:—Kosinski and Niegolewski. The following were acquitted:—Laczynski, Swinarski, and Szoldrski. In the cases of Bronikowski, Jaraczewski, Oppen, Rozycki, and kowski, fresh proceedings will be instituted.

Authority ... more than the union of material force and of numbers. A happy injustice of fact inflicts no injury upon the sanctity of right. It is allowable to oppose and revolt against legitimate princes. Violations of oaths and every act contrary to the eternal laws are permissible in the cause of patriotism."

The Pope further condemns Bible Societies, Secret Societies, Socialism, Communism, Clerico-Liberal Societies, the Protestant doctrine of private judgment, the subordination of the ecclesiastical to the civil power, civil marriage, the right of divorce, the abolition of the celibacy of priests, the preference due to the state of marriage over vows of chastity, and the doctrine that it is no longer necessary that the Catholic religion shall be held as the only religion of the state to the exclusion of all other modes of worship.—Baron von Meyendorff, the Russian representative at the Papal Court, has returned to Rome, and it is believed that he will be present at the reception of the Diplomatic Body at the Vatican on New Year's Day. On the night of the 26th inst. a detachment of French troops attacked the band of brigands under Cetoco, near Veroli, in the Papal States. Seven brigands were captured, and several French soldiers wounded. The Giornale di Roma of Wednesday, in reference to this encounter, says that the Pontifical Government does not encourage, but is rather the victim of brigandage. Cardinal Andrea has paid a visit to Prince Humbert, who has taken up his residence at Naples for the winter. His Eminence was received with all the honours due to his rank.

GREECE.—Advices from Athens state that the King has intrusted Professor Kyriaku, of the Moderate party, with the formation of a new Cabinet. It is asserted that M. Buduris, the Deputy from Hydra, will be the new Minister for Foreign Affairs.

TURKEY.—A very stringent Press law has been promulgated. The Tunisian Envoy has left Constantinople, having satisfactorily fulfilled his mission. The Porte has granted the concession for the construction of a railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem. The country palace or konak of Fuad Pasha, the Grand Vizier, was totally destroyed by fire on the 11th inst. Nearly the whole contents of the building were consumed, including a large collection of plate and jewellery, and the box containing his Highness's decorations and official seal.

MOROCCO.—The Emperor of Morocco has determined on erecting electric telegraphs in his States. The first line will connect the cities of Fez, Mequinez, and Morocco with Tangier. To understand all the importance of this innovation, the reader must know that the Emperor, who has hitherto done nothing without the advice of his astrologers, consulted them during his stay at Rabat, and they replied, after a whole night's study, that the electric telegraph was an infernal invention, which would bring calamities on the Sovereign and his dynasty. The Emperor, however, disregarded their predictions, and has decided, not only that the telegraph shall be established in his empire, but likewise that any who dare to destroy the apparatus or wires shall be beheaded.

EGYPT.—The English frigate Caradoc arrived at Alexandria from Constantinople on the 22d inst., having on board Sir Henry Bulwer, who will probably pass the winter in Egypt.

INDIA.—The Bombay Gazette says that Sir Charles Trevelyan is better, and that there is no immediate necessity for his proceeding to Europe. The Friend of India, on the other hand, says that he returns to England in February next, by the advice of his physician, as residence in India for another hot season is considered unsafe. Sir Hugh Rose met with a serious accident at Meerut on the 20th ult., when out hunting; in attempting to leap a stiff wall, his horse struck the top of the bank, and turned a complete somersault, falling on his Excellency. Sir Hugh has broken one of his ribs, but it is hoped that nothing more serious has occurred. Sir Hope Grant is to be the new commander-in-chief, relieving Sir Hugh in March next. Colonel Norman is to be the military member of Council, vice Sir Robert Napier, and is succeeded in the military secretariat by Colonel Stewart, deputy-adjutant-general. A proclamation was issued by the Governor General on the 12th ult., announcing the intention of Government to annex the Bengal Dooars of Bhootan to British territory. The campaign has opened with the capture of the strong fortress of Dalimkote, with slight loss of two officers and 50 men. An accidental explosion of powder caused the death of three officers and seven men. The invasion of the country by British troops has caused great consternation in Bhootan, and the feud between the rajahs, who are for peace, and the Pillos, who are for war, has almost broken out into civil war. The construction of the telegraphic line to the Bhootan Passes will be completed in December. The Government of India is in communication with the Rajah of Cashmere regarding cruel punishments and mutilations inflicted by his officers in Goozerat, some women having been found there with their tongues cut off by order of Rajah Motee Sing. The Ameer of Cabul having found that his breach of faith towards Afzul Khan was alienating all the Sirdars and warlike tribes, has released him, but still retains him under surveillance. The tribes of the Soleman hills have resolved on supporting the cause of Afzul Khan, and it is even said that they have formed an army to march against the Ameer in his cause. A grand khullut, consisting of diamond necklaces, &c., has been sent by the Emperor of Russia to the King of Bokhara. The Russians have of late been very busy in Central Asia, and it is said that the embassy to the King of Bokhara proposes a joint advance on Thibet, &c. There is also a report that the long reign of Sir Jung Bahadoor in Nepaul has come to an end, the King's party having placed him in prison. A pestilential fever has succeeded the late storm in Bengal. The fish in all the tanks south of Calcutta died, and the water became tainted. Sad intelligence has been received from almost all quarters of injury to the crops from want of rain, and there is every prospect of severe suffering during the coming season, throughout the whole country. The mail steamer Hydaspes has been wrecked in the Straits of Rhio, between Singapore and Batavia. The passengers and cargo were saved.

JAPAN.—The Paris papers publish news from Japan, stating that the treaty between the European Powers and the Tycoon, in reference to the Prince of Nagato, stipulates that an indemnity be paid of 18,000,000*l.*, and that a part of the Inland Sea be opened for trade.

UNITED STATES.—Admiral Dahlgren reported from Port Royal on the 12th the arrival of three scouts, bearing despatches from General Howard, announcing that Sherman had been perfectly successful thus far, and that his army was in fine spirits within a few miles of Savannah. The Richmond papers of the 16th state that Sherman carried Fort M'Allister by storm on the 14th. This capture put him in communication with the Federal fleet, and necessitated the reinforcement of Savannah. Fort M'Allister is on the Ogeechee River, 15 miles south-west of Savannah. It was garrisoned by only 150 men. A steamer from Charleston Bar, on the 14th inst., brings a report that news had reached there by a flag of truce that Sherman had captured Savannah and 11,000 prisoners, after eight hours' fighting. It is also said that the vessels off the harbour were seen by a passing gunboat decorated with flags, and salutes were being fired as though in honour of some great victory. No confirmation of this news has yet been received. The Richmond papers state that up to the 18th no attack had been made upon the defences of Savannah, which consist of a triple line of works. General Hardee commands the position. General Beauregard reached Charleston on the 7th inst. Some accounts represent that Sherman would attack Savannah at once, and would encounter a desperate resistance. Other theories are that he will, before making any attack, first establish his base on the coast at Darien, or at some point south of the Savannah River. General Thomas reports from Nashville that on the 15th he attacked General Hood's left, and drove it from the river below the city nearly to Franklin Pike, a distance of eight miles, capturing Chalmers's head-quarters and trains, 1000 prisoners, and 16 guns. He again attacked him on the 16th, and after a battle which continued all day, drove him from all his intrenched positions, and captured from 3000 to 5000 prisoners, and 30 to 40 cannon. Unofficial despatches announce that Hood was retreating and endeavouring to get away, while Thomas was pressing him vigorously, capturing guns and men. General Canby reports that the expeditionssent from Vicksburg and Baton Rouge to cut Hood's communications with Mobile, had completely successful. The Federal General Kilpatrick was reported mortally wounded. A naval and military expedition, under Admiral Porter and General Butler, left Fort Monroe on the 12th for the Southern coast. General Stoneman has made a raid in Breckenridge's rear, and captured Bristol, Abingdon, and Glade Springs, Western Virginia. He also burned the bridge over the Holston River, and has moved towards Saltville. General Grant is reported to have been reinforced by 4000 men of Sheridan's army. General Warren, with the 2d and 5th Corps of Grant's army, previously reported marching towards Stoney Creek, has returned to head-quarters. He proceeded to Hicksford, on the Weldon Railway, where he found the Confederates in force, strongly intrenched and effectually barring his further progress. He states that he destroyed 15 miles of the railway and the depôts, together with numerous mills, barns, and dwellings. No engagement of consequence occurred during the movement. It is understood that General Fremont will be appointed United States Minister at Paris, in the place of the late Mr. Dayton. The House of Representatives adopted on the 13th inst., by a majority of 85 to 51, Mr. Morrill's amended resolutions for terminating the Reciprocity Treaty with Great Britain. The acquittal of the St. Alban's raiders by the Canadian authorities has created a strong feeling of indignation throughout the North, and the military commanders on the frontier are directed by General Dix, in case of further acts of depredation, to shoot down the perpetrators, if possible; and, if necessary for their capture, to cross the Canadian boundaries and pursue them wherever they take refuge, and not to surrender them if captured, but send them on to head-quarters for trial by court-martial. Resolutions have been introduced into Congress, and referred to the Committee for Foreign Affairs, denouncing the conduct of the Canadians, recommending the organisation of an army corps for the protection of the frontier, and directing the Secretary of State to demand from the British Government payment for all cargoes and ships destroyed by British piratical vessels. The New York Times says that "Canada has been turned into a base of rebel operations, and Canadian territory must be respected no more than Virginian or South Carolinian territory. This may lead to war, and if so, let it come." Much excitement exists in the cities and towns on the northern frontier in consequence of warnings received by the authorities of designs by the Confederates in Canada to enter and set fire to them. The Militia in Detroit have been ordered out by the Mayor, and nightly patrol the streets. The New York Times asserts that the Brazilian demand for reparation for the seizure of the Florida is insolent in tone, and that Mr. Seward's reply is firm and conciliatory. It does not endorse the seizure, and expresses a desire that the matter should be fairly and satisfactorily adjusted.

CANADA.—The St. Alban's and Lake Erie raiders have been discharged from custody by Judge Coursal of the Montreal Court, on the ground that the Governor-General had issued no warrant authorising their arrest, and that the Canadian Extradition Act of 1861 was not in force, because it had not been assented to by the Queen in Council. The Canadian Cabinet held a long Council at Quebec on the 15th, and unanimously denounced the judge's decision. Attorney-General Carter also decided that the decision was wrong, and ordered the re-arrest of the raiders. The police are making great efforts for their recapture; and as the officers are already on their track, there is little doubt that they will soon again be in custody. Another Cabinet Council was held at Quebec on the 16th, at which the subject of rebel raids across the border was again under consideration. Parliament has been summoned to meet on the 19th January, when laws will be passed to meet the urgency of the great change of public feeling towards the Confederates, since they have shown an intention of embroiling the two countries in war. Stipendiary magistrates have been appointed on the frontier, especially to take cognisance of breaches of the international laws, and they are to be aided by a strong police force. The chief of the police has refunded the money found upon the raiders. It is supposed that Judge Coursal will be dismissed. The Toronto Globe states that the Canadian authorities have been informed that a regiment of Confederate troops has been detailed and temporarily disbanded, with orders to proceed singly to Canada, there to reunite for incursions into the Federal States.

PERU.—Advices from Lima to the 27th November, received through New York, state that war with Spain was imminent. The Legislature was in session, discussing the advisability of notifying Spanish vessels to quit the ports of the Republic within a certain number of days. The flagship of the Spanish Admiral had been destroyed by fire at the Chinchas.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

LORD WHARNCLIFFE AND MR. SEWARD.—In consequence of Mr. Seward's refusal to allow the distribution of the money raised at the Liverpool Bazaar among the Confederate prisoners in the North, Lord Wharncliffe has published in the Times the following correspondence between himself and Mr. Adams, the United States Minister in London. His lordship at the same time replies to some of Mr. Seward's statements, and says that the fund, so far from having been mainly contributed by those who had been engaged in trade with the South, included contributions from all parts of the United Kingdom, from the Continent, Canada, and even from the Northern States; and that the movement originated with, and was all but entirely carried out by the Southern ladies now in England. Lord Wharncliffe adds that the refusal of the Federal Government will not practically affect the distribution of the fund:—

"Wortley Hall, Nov. 12.

"Your Excellency,—A bazaar has been held in St. George's Hall, Liverpool, to provide a fund for the relief of Southern prisoners of war. It has produced a clear sum of about 17,000*l*. In preference to any attempt to reach the intended object by circuitous means, a committee of English gentlemen has been formed to address you on the subject. As chairman of this committee I venture to ask your Excellency to request the permission of your Government that an accredited agent may be sent out to visit the military prisons within the Northern States, and minister to the comfort of those for whom this fund is intended, under such supervision as your Government may direct. Permit me to state that no political end is aimed at by this movement. It has received support from many who are opposed to the political action of the South. Nor is it intended to impute that the Confederate prisoners are denied such attention as the ordinary rules enjoin. But those rules are narrow and stern. Winter is at hand, and the clothing which may satisfy the rules of war will not protect the natives of a warm climate from the severe cold of the North. Sir, the issue of this great contest will not be determined by individual suffering, be it greater or less; and you, whose family name is interwoven with American history, cannot view with indifference the suffering of American citizens, whatever their state or their opinions. On more than one occasion aid has been proffered by the people of one country to special classes under great affliction in another. May it not be permitted to us to follow these examples, especially when those we desire to solace are beyond the reach of their immediate kinsmen? I trust these precedents and the voice of humanity may plead with your Excellency and induce you to prefer to the Government of the United States the request I have the honour to submit.—I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

"The Hon. C. F. Adams." "WHARNCLIFFE."

"Legation of the United States, Nov. 18.

"My Lord,—I have the honour to acknowledge the reception of your letter of the 12th inst., asking me to submit to the consideration of my Government a request of certain Englishmen made through your lordship, to send out an accredited agent to visit the military prisoners held by the United States, and afford them such aid, additional to that extended by the ordinary rules of war, as may be provided by the fund which has been raised here for the purpose. I am very sure that it has never been the desire of my Government to treat with unnecessary or vindictive severity any of the misguided individuals, parties in this deplorable rebellion, who have fallen into their hands in the regular course of war. I should greatly rejoice were the effects of your sympathy extended to the ministering to the mental ailment not less than the bodily sufferings of these unfortunate persons, thus contributing to put an end to a struggle which otherwise is too likely to be only procrastinated by your labours. Be this as it may, I shall be happy to promote any humane endeavours to alleviate the horrors of this strife, and in that sense shall very cheerfully comply with your lordship's desire, so far as to transmit by the earliest opportunity to my Government [illegible] of the application which has been addressed [illegible] your lordship to receive the assurance of my [illegible] consideration.

"CHARLES FRANCIS [illegible]

"Legation of the United States, [illegible]

"My Lord,—I have the honour to inform [illegible] submitted to the consideration of my Government [illegible] your lordship's note to me of the 12th of November [illegible] reply of the 18th of that month, and I have now [illegible] of the conclusion which has been reached. I am [illegible] say that permission for an agent of the commit[illegible] your lordship to visit the insurgents detained in the military prisons of the United States, and to distribute a money 17,000*l*. of British gold, cannot be granted. I am [illegible] further constrained to siguify to your lordship that [illegible] note my correspondence on this subject must [illegible] close.—I have the honour to be, my lord, your lordship's obedient servant,

"CHARLES FRANCIS [illegible]

"To the Lord Wharncliffe."

DECORATIONS OF ST. PAUL'S.—The large [illegible] under the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral, [illegible] Bishop of London to-morrow evening will inaugurate the special Sunday evening services for 1865. The [illegible] undergone some changes since the last series of [illegible] was brought to a close. Preparations are now [illegible] filling the eight spandrels formed by the great [illegible] of the dome under the Whispering Gallery with [illegible] of art, designed to represent the Church Militant [illegible] crowned by a blaze of golden light and colour [illegible] dome, embodying the conception of the Church Triumphant. Eleven of the principal windows of the fabric will be treated in a special manner, after designs by Professor Schnorr, of Dresden, and Mr. Penrose, the Cathedral surveyor. Four of them have been already painted, and two others are in progress. Of these the cost is borne by the Drapers' and Goldsmiths' Companies, and of two more by Dr. Rogers and Mr. Brown, of the firm of Longman & Co. Towards the general subscription for the general adornment of the Cathedral her Majesty has subscribed 100*l*., the Prince of Wales 50*l*., and the Duke of Cambridge 25*l*.

PROPOSED SCOTTISH HALL IN LONDON.—A meeting composed of representatives of the Highland Society of London, the Caledonian Society of London, the London Scottish Volunteers, the Scottish Hospital, and the Caledonian Asylum, held at the hall of the Scottish Hospital on the 21st inst., Sir J. Henry Maxwell in the chair, it was unanimously resolved "That it is very desirable to have a central building for the business purposes of the various Scottish Societies in London, and for other national objects." The meeting then resolved itself into a committee, and adjourned till the 31st of next month, when the propriety of calling a public meeting of the Scottish in London will be discussed.

THE PUBLIC RECORDS.—Sir John Romilly, Master of the Rolls, at the recommendation of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, has sent to the Ordnance Survey department in Southampton a collection of national documents, to be copied by the photographic process. This collection contains a series of charters, treaties, and letters, selected from the Record Office. They illustrate the history of the country from the commencement of the reign of William the Conqueror to the end of the reign of Queen Anne, and will be published in chronological order, with translations as to illustrate the gradual change in the language and in the mode of writing during the last 800 years. The seals attached to some of the documents are of great interest; that which is attached to the treaty of peace between Henry VIII. and Francis is in gold, measuring of four inches in diameter, and carved in relief by Benvenuto Cellini. The seal attached to the patent of knighthood conferred on Prince Edward by the King of Castile is also of gold, as is also the seal attached to the Pope's Bull conferring the title of Defender of the Faith on Henry VIII. Among the documents is an original copy of Magna Charta.

THE STREET BOARDMEN.—A few days since the Commissioners of Police issued an order prohibiting the practice of men parading the streets with boards containing the advertisements of exhibitions, musical and other performances. As many hundred men who are incapacitated by advanced age or other causes for more active labour were thrown out of employment by this order, some members of the musical profession had an interview with Sir R. Mayne respecting the hardship which it inflicted upon a poor but industrious class of men. The result is that Sir R. Mayne has given his sanction for the men to renew their occupation, on the distinct understanding that they are not to parade the streets in groups to the annoyance of the traffic.

FRANZ MÜLLER.—The Odessa Gazette says that Müller, the murderer of Mr. Briggs, was formerly in the Russian navy, but was dismissed the service in consequence of robbing the captain of his ship of his watch.

WORKING MEN'S EXHIBITIONS.—The working men of Lambeth have opened a second collection of industrial objects in the Ragged School near Lambeth Walk. The opening took place on Saturday evening, when Mr. Doulton, M.P., presided, and there was a large attendance. The present exhibition is of the same character with its predecessors, both in Lambeth and Islington, and is not inferior to them in interest. It also shows as usual that workmen seldom amuse their leisure hours with the construction of objects at which they daily work, and in the manufacture of which they might be supposed to excel. Another exhibition was opened on Tuesday at Stratford, in the presence of the Rev. A. J. Ram, vicar of West Ham, and the principal inhabitants of the district. The articles exhibited number nearly 500, and include a variety of works executed by working men in their spare hours at the close of their daily labour. Among them are "The Dutch Lady;" a fruit piece; an "Old Mill in Norfolk," &c., by Peter Hyde Astley, a tailor; "High and Low Life," by George Bull, a journeyman painter on the Great Eastern Railway, and several landscape pieces by Mr. C. Taylor, a house decorator of the neighbourhood, who was formerly a silk weaver. There are also innumerable specimens of men's, women's, and children's handiwork, including models of every description, cases of stuffed birds and animals, shoes, sewing machines, drawings, carvings, and every description of needlework. Under the latter class appears an elaborately embroidered infant's long dress, entirely worked by Robert Barnes, a groom employed in the neighbourhood, which appeared to be an object of great interest to the ladies, by whom it was greatly admired.

DEMOLITION OF HAMPTON BRIDGE.—Workmen are now employed in taking down the old tottering wooden bridge at Hampton. It has, for the last few years, been in a dilapidated condition, and a new iron bridge will be constructed in its room. Foot passengers and vehicles are now conveyed across the Thames in a ferry or horse boat, at the same charges as the toll of the old bridge. As much of the new bridge has been already fixed, very little delay will be occasioned.

VALUE OF LAND IN THE CITY.—In the Sheriff's Court a few days since, in the case "Robinson v. The Metropolitan Railway," a special jury awarded 5000*l.* for a freehold house in Charterhouse Square, built 150 years ago when the place was a fashionable locality. In the Lord Mayor's Court, in the case of "Prince's Devisees v. The Metropolitan Railway," the Jury awarded 1700*l.* for the reversion of No. 17, Little Moorfields, at present let on lease for 18 years to come at 45*l.* a year. In the Sheriff's Court in the case of "Searly v. the Tottenham and Hampstead Railway," a special jury awarded 1200*l.* for land taken, and 1500*l.* for the depreciation of the other portion, in the Junction Road, between Kentish Town and Holloway, making together 2700*l.* The sum claimed was nearly 16,000*l.*

MURDER ON SAFFRON HILL.— On Monday night the neighbourhood of Saffron Hill was thrown into excitement by a report that four men had been stabbed at the Golden Anchor public-house, at the corner of Castle Street. It appears that on Saturday night some Italians were ejected from the house for making use of abusive language, and on Monday night some of them entered the tap-room for the avowed purpose of having revenge. They first abused the Englishmen they found there, and broke the seats, after which an Italian named Sarafini Polioni, a picture-frame maker, stabbed Alfred Ribbeck, the potman, and three other men, named Harrington, Bannister, and King. The assassin was immediately taken into custody, and the wounded men were removed to the hospital, where Ribbeck and Harrington were found to be so dangerously wounded that their depositions were taken in the presence of the prisoner, whom they both identified as the man by whom they had been stabbed; but Harrington refused to sign the paper, stating that he freely forgave the prisoner, and hoped God would forgive him also. He died in the hospital on Tuesday morning, and Ribbeck is not expected to survive. The assassin was taken before the magistrate on Tuesday afternoon, when the charge against him was proved by numerous witnesses. He was however remanded, as, from the state of the other man, there is reason to fear that he will have to answer for two murders instead of one. The coroner's inquest was held yesterday, when the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the prisoner.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended Saturday the 24th inst., were 1523. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 years 1854–63, corrected for increase of population, was 1390. The present return is therefore 133 above the average. During the week the births of 947 boys and 900 girls, in all 1847 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854–63 the average number was 1858.

ALDERSHOT.—On Sunday morning a person named Hardy, a milkseller, and his wife were passing along a lane which skirts Aldershot Cemetery, when they found a man lying dead, covered with blood, and marks of a struggle around the body. They procured a light and assistance, and communicated with the police, who on examining the body found it to be that of a pensioner named James Raynsford, who had belonged to the 84th Regiment, and was about 55 years of age. His coat was off, his shirt-sleeves were turned up, his fist clenched, and his arms bent in the attitude of fighting. His face was covered with blood, there was a severe cut over his right eye, which was blackened, and his lips were much swollen, as if from bruises. From subsequent inquiries it appeared that he was last seen alive at half-past nine o'clock on the night before at the Royal Exchange Music Hall. He was then under the influence of drink. A man named Samuel Watmore had been seen out late on Saturday night near the spot where the body was found, and was known to have entered a beerhouse adjacent. The police therefore took him into custody on the charge of having caused the death of the deceased. On Monday morning he was taken before the magistrates at the Petty Sessions, and remanded for three days. At the inquest on Wednesday the evidence of the medical men showed that it was highly improbable that he had anything to do with the death of the deceased. The jury returned an unanimous verdict of death from exposure to cold while in a state of intoxication.

BRIGHTON.—On Christmas Eve the quiet village of Portslade, about four miles from this town, was the scene of a deliberate murder. A number of labourers were carousing in a cottage occupied by John Coom, who has been a cripple since childhood, and lives alone in the tenement in question. Among the company was a man named Joseph Sharp, farm labourer to Mr. Hudson, of Blatchington, with his wife and daughter, and during some "chaffing" a quarrel occurred between Coom and Sharp, who inflicted sundry slight blows on Coom, who sat perched on his bench by the window. Coom became exasperated, and said to Sharp, with an oath, that if he did that again he would do for him. The other labourers do not appear to have interposed between the men, but continued drinking. In the heat of the altercation Coom sprang from his bench, and hopping to the door of the washing-house adjoining the kitchen, seized a gun which hung upon the wall, and which was loaded and capped. Turning suddenly round he hopped towards Sharp, and taking deliberate aim, shot him through the head, causing instantaneous death. Coom was at once taken into custody, and conveyed in a cart to Hove Police Station on the charge of wilful murder. It appears that the murderer, who is about 35 years of age, is a perfect cripple, having lost the use of his limbs, which are doubled under his haunches, by accidentally drinking a quantity of vitriol when a child. Four or five years ago he kept a horse and cart, and maintained himself by carrying parcels between Portslade and Brighton. His cottage has long been famed as a rendezvous for men ejected from the village public-house at unseasonable hours; and, being passionate in temper, he inspired fear amongst his associates by carrying loaded fire arms, and has often threatened the lives of persons who have aroused his anger.

CHELMSFORD.—On Wednesday morning Francis Wane, who was condemned at the recent assizes for the murder of a woman named Blunt, with whom he formerly cohabited, but who was about to be married to another man, was executed in front of the county gaol. He made a full confession of his guilt, and died penitent. Although he had deformed feet, he mounted the steps leading to the scaffold without any assistance, and when the drop fell he appeared to die almost immediately. There was a considerable crowd assembled, but they conducted themselves in the most orderly manner.

COLESHILL.—At the petty sessions on Monday, Mr. Richard Barker, farmer, of Whitacre, was charged with trespassing in pursuit of game upon land in his own occupation, over which Sir Robert Peel reserved the exclusive right of shooting the game. This case had been adjourned from last petty sessions, at the request of the prosecutor, for further evidence. After this evidence had been given, the defendant's solicitor asked that the summons might be dismissed, on the ground that the defendant could not be a trespasser upon land in his own occupation, and also that he had been summoned upon a wrong section (the 30th instead of the 12th) of the Game Law Act. The bench convicted the defendant in the full penalty of 2*l.* and costs. A case for the superior courts was granted, and it will be brought in due course before the Court of Queen's Bench.

COVENTRY.—The late Mrs. Hill Morgan, of Cheltenham, has bequeathed the sum of 10,000*l.* for the erection of a new church in this city, and 2000*l.* as a fund, the interest of which is to be employed annually in the relief of the poor of the district in which such church is situate. The deceased lady was a native of Coventry.

DERBY.—On Friday morning at an early hour, a man called James Potter, a bailiff, aged 55, residing in Traffic Street in this town, met a police sergeant on duty to whom he was known, and said that he would not go home unless the officer would go with him. The officer, suspecting that something was wrong, accompanied him to the house and found the street door locked, upon which they made an entry through the window. They then examined the different rooms, and on arriving at one on the second floor, Potter refused to go in. The officer, therefore, went in alone, and there found Potter's wife lying on the bed, quite dead, with one leg out of it, her head towards the window, and one arm stretched out, while blood was trickling from the bed clothes. Two surgeons, on examining the body, found a short wound under the right breast, which on being probed was discovered to be of great depth. On searching the bedroom the officer found by the side of a chest of drawers a spike which had been unsheathed from a walking stick, with which the deed was perpetrated. Mrs. Potter was 50 years of age, and had a large family. On the previous evening she had gone to the inspector of police who lives in the same street, and said that her husband would have to be taken to the asylum, as he was abusing her very much. The man, who has been in a low desponding way for some time, and was jealous of his wife, was taken before the magistrates on Friday morning and remanded until Thursday, when he was committed for trial on the charge of Wilful Murder.

ECCLES.—James Britch, the poor man who found 6000 silver pennies in this neighbourhood in August last, has received from the office of the Duchy of Lancaster a Treasury warrant, authorising the payment to him at the Branch Bank of England at Manchester, of the sum of 73*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, being the metallic value of the coins as ascertained at the Royal Mint.

GATESHEAD.—The inquest on the woman who died at the Spen on Sunday week from the results of injuries inflicted by her husband, Matthew Atkinson, terminated on Thursday in a verdict of Wilful Murder against the prisoner, who was committed for trial at the assizes.

LEWES.—The marble bust of the late Duke of Richmond was placed in its position in the Assembly Rooms at the County Hall on the 21st instant, under the personal superintendence of the sculptor, Mr. M'Dowell. On the front of the pedestal is the following inscription:—

"Charles, fifth Duke of Richmond, &c., K.G.; born A.D. 1791; died A.D. 1860. In early life he served with distinction in the Peninsula and at Waterloo, and retained to the last his love for the army. As a peer of Parliament, as a Minister of the Crown, as a lord lieutenant of his native county, as a warm friend to agriculture, he performed honestly and ably the duties entrusted to him and the work which he undertook. In every relation of life his good sense and energy, the frank courtesy of his manners, and the kindness of his heart, won for him the respect and affection of all who knew him. This memorial has been placed here by his Sussex friends in grateful recollection of his virtues and his services."

LIVERPOOL.—Thomas Lindon, one of the two men who were condemned to death at the recent Assizes for the murder of M'Carthy, has been respited. A memorial in favour of Brown, his accomplice in the murder, is in course of signature. The execution of Brown and Ellis Green, who was condemned for the murder of his sister-in-law, is fixed for the 7th of January.

MALDON.—Mr. Chichester Fortescue, M.P., Under Secretary for the Colonies, attended the annual dinner of the Liberal Independent Club in this town on the 15th inst., and in returning thanks for the toast of her Majesty's Ministers, spoke as follows on the New Zealand war, on transportation to Australia, and on the proposed federation of British North America:—

"He wished he could announce to the meeting that the war in New Zealand was at an end. He was not, however, able to do so, and the last accounts from the colony were not quite so satisfactory as our hopes had led us to expect. The submission of the natives had not yet been secured, and it would evidently require another campaign before peace could be restored. However, in spite of certain contretemps and certain disappointments, all he could learn from the colony by the last mail, led him to the belief that the campaign which had lately begun would be the last of a war which he hoped and believed would not be witnessed again. He knew that fears had been entertained by many good men in this country that the Government of New Zealand was inclined to deal hardly with the natives, to deprive them in an unjustifiable degree of their land, and even to continue the war for the sake of the gain supposed to be derived from the imperial military expenditure in those islands. But he confessed that he did not believe in the desire of the New Zealand colonists to continue the war longer than it could be helped. His knowledge of the great sacrifices which they had been, and were still, making, by the shedding of colonial blood, by the spending of colonial money, and by the paralysis of colonial trade, led him to the conviction that they would not be inclined to continue the war a day longer than could be helped. He felt also sure that the natives would not be treated unjustly with regard to their land. Precautions had been most properly taken by Mr. Cardwell, the present head of the Colonial Office, that the large powers with respect to the confiscation of native land, which the Colonial Government had taken, should not be abused. It was impossible that the Government in the islands of New Zealand engaged in deadly conflict with another race could view these matters with that calmness and impartiality which the Imperial Government was able to bring to bear upon them; and, therefore, it was the duty of her Majesty's Government to take particular care that no wrong should be done to the native race in the terms of peace. At the same time he thought that portion of the natives of New Zealand who had been, to their great loss and ours, perversely shedding their blood and the blood of the colonists and of her Majesty's troops, should receive a severe lesson, which should prevent them from pursuing a similar line of conduct in the future. He believed that that was necessary and just, and the best thing which could happen both for us and for them; and this, he believed, would be the practical result of the powers given by her Majesty's Government to the Governor of New Zealand. He would add one word as to the general subject of our dealings with this interesting colony of New Zealand and its native population, because there had been in the public press and elsewhere a good deal of ignorant and unjust accusation indulged in with respect to our dealings with that remarkable native population. In the first place, could we be blamed for having taken the Government of New Zealand? Any one who knew anything of the history of that colony must feel that we were not open to blame upon that point. Our people had already gone to New Zealand in very considerable numbers before we assumed the Government; and it was perfectly certain that magnificent islands, equal in extent to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, could not have been left in the possession of a small, sparse, and already diminishing native race, and must inevitably have been, sooner or later, occupied by some European Power. In fact, it was well known that it was a race between Great Britain and France as to which of those great Powers should obtain possession of New Zealand. Our Government went, then, to New Zealand, because they were forced to do so, and because it was their duty to keep order between British subjects already settled there and the native race. So far he thought that we were open to no blame; and what had happened since? In spite of the present unfortunate war, in spite of the prejudice which the power of a great country like this against a small native race might excite in some minds, he maintained that the war had been caused by no proceedings on our part. Let any one examine the history of our dealings with these natives, and he would find that, however much we might have failed in other respects, we had not oppressed them. In this war the natives had not risen against any violation of their liberties, against robbery of their property, against tyranny and wrong. We had, he admitted, failed to maintain for any length of time peaceful relations between races differing so greatly from one another; but this was a result which perhaps had not yet been achieved by any European nation. It was a result which we hoped to attain, but which we failed to attain; but our sins had been more those of omission than of commission. We had not been oppressive, but, on the contrary, we had been tolerant; we had tried perhaps to do more than was possible, and had substituted theories for facts. For instance, we voted these natives to be British subjects, enjoying all the rights and privileges of British subjects. Our Ministers in their early despatches to colonial Governors enjoined them to treat the natives as British subjects, and above all to enforce law and order; but the fact is the natives of New Zealand declined the privileges offered when coupled with the conditions of law and order; the colonial Government had no power to enforce the principle laid down, and it was found impossible to reduce the theory to practice. Then came a change which was highly beneficial to the English race in New Zealand, but not so beneficial perhaps to the native race, viz., the introduction of responsible government into the colony. He did not mean to say that the responsible Government of New Zealand had oppressed the natives, but that change had increased the weakness of the executive Government, and had induced those difficulties of a double authority under which we were now labouring —a state of things in which it was most difficult, with a semi-savage race to deal with, to wage a war of any kind. In this war, and the difficulties with which we had to deal, we had been free from blame; we had not reached that beau idéal which we set before ourselves; but, on the other hand, he was ready to maintain that, compared with the relations of any European Power with any other race of savages the world ever saw, at any period of history, our relations with New Zealand stood out in favourable relief. Let them be compared with our dealings in former times with the natives of North America, or with the dealings of the Government of the United States at this moment with the natives of North America, and reason would be found, in spite of all drawbacks, to congratulate ourselves upon the degree of prosperity which in a very few years the young colony of New Zealand had attained with a comparative freedom from outrage or bloodshed, or putting the white man against the black man, or the dark man against the white man. He said this although war was raging at this moment, a war which he hoped would soon come to a termination, and which was being conducted even by the natives themselves to a very great degree upon the principles of civilisation. There were two other colonial questions of striking interest at this moment. The first was the question of transportation to Australia, and he could but congratulate the meeting upon the abolition of transportation in that direction. It was well known by the public press that that system was at an end, the Government having announced its intention to put an end, with the sanction of Parliament, to that small remnant of transportation which still remained to Western Australia. Upon this subject he must say that our patience had been rather tried by our fellow-countrymen on the other side of the world. They had taken the matter into their own hands with a degree of vigour and temper which had made it rather difficult for her Majesty's Government to deal calmly and justly with the question. However, he was glad to say that the act of shipping a certain number of ex-convicts back to these shores—rather a strong measure—had been the work of certain individuals at Melbourne, and not the act of the colonial Government; and in spite of this somewhat provoking conduct her Majesty's Government had announced to the colonists that in a short time transportation to Australia should cease. The other colonial topic to which he wished to allude was the project of the federation of the British provinces of North America. He had no authority to go into details upon that subject, or to express the opinion of her Majesty's Government; but he knew well that they would very well represent the feeling of this country if they entertained no jealousy whatever of the growing power and prosperity of those great provinces. On the contrary, her Majesty's Government, like all the rest of Englishmen, wished to see these provinces growing more and more in all the elements of power. He believed that the project in question would greatly contribute to such a result. He believed that it was our interest, and the interest of the human race, that an independent, self-reliant power should rise up in North America, and that the whole population of that vast continent should not be moulded upon one type. He had no doubt that the relations between this union of colonies and this country would remain the same as they were at present, and that they would remain under the sovereignty of the Queen. Their change would be that they would be rather better able than they had hitherto been to contribute towards their own defence, and that, instead of being several minor provinces, they would prove one great dependency of the Crown, the government of which would be an object worthy of the ambition of the greatest of our public men."

MOLD.—Great efforts have been made to get the bodies of the eight colliers who were drowned in the pit at Mold some days since, but hitherto without success. A singular incident is reported to have occurred during these proceedings. A horse was discovered standing up to his neck in water, and was fed with gruel till he was rescued.

OXFORD.—Dr. Newman has recently purchased some land in Oxford, for the purpose of erecting a college for Roman Catholics, if the scheme should find favour with his ecclesiastical superiors. A meeting of the Roman Catholic bishops was held at the residence of Cardinal Wiseman last week to discuss the project in all its bearings. The meeting was held with closed doors, but it is reported that the views of the prelates were in opposition to those of Dr. Newman, and that the result of their deliberations has been transmitted to Rome, and will not be made public until the Pope has given his decision.

PENZANCE.—The Norwegian bark Christine Agathe, in ballast, and the bark Havannah, of Liverpool, with a cargo of mahogany, came into collision on Saturday morning 30 miles south-west of the Lizard. The Christine Agathe has arrived at this port with five of the Havannah's crew on board. The fate of the Havannah is not known.

PICKERING.—At the last meeting of the local bench of magistrates, the surveyor of the highways for the parish of Kirbymisperton summoned the rector, the Rev. C. J. Sympson, and the following parishioners, Mr. Suggett, Mr. Hardcastle, and Mr. Hardcastle, jun., for refusing to pay the rate for the maintenance of the parish highway. The sums claimed were—from the rector, 20*l.* 11*s.*; Mr. Suggett, 14*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*; Mr. Hardcastle, 3*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*; and Mr. Hardcastle, jun. 16*l.* 16*s.* Rates proportionate to these charges had been paid by other parishioners, and it was shown that the rate was duly made, allowed, and published according to law. For the defence it was shown that the rate sued for was at the rate of 1*s.* in the pound, and was, therefore, 2*d.* in the pound in advance of the maximum sum allowed by the Highway Act, namely, 10*d.* in the pound. The objection was fatal, and the bench dismissed all the cases.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Mr. W. B. Page, the landscape gardener of this town, has received orders to lay out and plant the grounds surrounding Netley Hospital. An extensive terrace in front of the hospital has been adorned with cedars. A cemetery has also been ordered to be laid out and planted at the back of the hospital about a quarter of a mile distant. The Queen takes great interest in these improvements.

STAFFORD.—On Tuesday morning Richard Hale, who was condemned, with his paramour Cecilia Baker, at the recent Assizes, for the murder of his illegitimate child, Eliza Sillitoe, at Coseley; and Charles Brough, a miner, who at the same Assizes was condemned for the murder of an old man called George Walker, who lived by himself in a hut on a common at Bignall Hill, were executed in front of the county gaol in the presence of about 6000 persons. Some of the spectators took up their places during the night, but most of them began to assemble at 6 o'clock in the morning. Although the crowd was hardly so great as was expected, it was disgracefully noisy and riotous. Brough, who had all along been suffering much from illness, confessed his crime, but Hale denied his guilt to the last.

STRATFORD-UPON-AVON.—The Birmingham papers give the following particulars of the ancient deeds relating to properties adjoining Shakespeare's birthplace recently discovered in that town. The deeds are as follows:—August 28, 15th Elizabeth, 1573.—Grant of William Wedgwood, of Stratford-upon-Avon, to Richard Hornebye, of Stratford-upon-Avon, smith, of a piece of land at back of tenement belonging to said Horneby, fronting Henleye-streete. The seal in this deed bears the initials W.S., and the sealing was witnessed by John Shaxper and others. 45 Elizabeth, 1602.—Lease of tenement last mentioned with the land at the back, Richard Hornbye, Anne his wife, and Thomas, his son and heire, to Frauncis Horneby. April 16, 1614, 12th James.—Conveyance by Thomas Horneby to Thomas Jelffe, of Old Stratford, yeoman. March 12 1620, 17th James.—Conveyance by Thomas Jelfe to Thomas Nasshe, of Lyncolnes-inn, gentn., of tenement adjoining the Bell of Thomas Bragden. The above property is bequeathed in the will of Thomas Nash, of 1642, to his cousin, Edward Nash, but is not included in the Chancery proceedings between Edward Nash and Shakespeare's grand-daughter, Elizabeth Nash. 20th September, 17 Eliz., 1575.—Grant William Wedgwood to Edward Wyllies, of King's Norton, yeoman, of two tenements in Henlye-streete, adjoining the tenement of Richard Hornbye, and the tenement of John Shakespr., yeoman. The sealing of this deed is witnessed by John Shaxpr. and others, but the seal is gone. 20th July, 1609, 7 James I.—"Conveyance, by Edward Willys to Osborn and Austyne, Trustees, for Edward Wyllies and Thomas Wyllies, of Handsworth, of a tenement (formerly two) known by the signe of the Bell, adjoining the tenement late Willm. Shakspere. The word "late" is interlined in this deed.—April, 1611, 9 James I.—Conveyance by Edward Willis to Wastell and Willies, as Trustees for Symon Wastell, of Aston, of small piece of land, 17 footes square, behind the Bell, and adjoyning the freeholde of one John Shakespere. This piece of land was purchased from John Shakespere about 1589, but the conveyance is lost. January 22, 1613, 10th James.—Grant by Edward Wyliss to Edward Willys, Mary, his wife, and Thomas, his son, of the Bell, occupied by Robt. Brookes, adjoining tenement, late William Shakespere. December, 1613, 11th James I.—Conveyance of Edward Willis to Symon Wastell, of land 17 footes square. April 24, 1615, 13th James I.—Alice Bragden, widow of Thomas Bragden, release of dower on the Bell, occupied by Thomas Rumney, to Edd. Willis. March 5, 1637, 12th Charles I.—Grant of annuity, Thos. Willis and Wife, and Nash, of Stratford, and Osborn, of Great Barr, farmer, to Thomas Nash, of the Bell, adjoining premises occupied by John Rutter (the Maydenhead). The above property is not included in the will of Thomas Nash (being purchased only one month before his death), and therefore passed to Edward Nash, his cousin, as heir-at-law. The 14th of Ch. II., 1663.—Lease by Edward Nash, citizen of London, to James Strayner, of the Bell, adjoining the Maydenhead, then occupied by John Tomes. The witnesses to these documents comprise, besides John Shakspere, Frauncis Collyns, the executor and witness of, and a legatee under, the poet's will, George Nashe, John Nash, J. Green, Thomas Greene, &c. Both the properties are described as bounded on the north by the Gillpitts or Guyldpytts. To the deed of 1573 is affixed a seal, bearing the initials "W. S.," entwined with the true lovers' knot, and bearing a close resemblance to the engraved signet ring preserved in the Birthplace Museum as a relic of Shakespeare, but very much smaller. The whole of the deeds have been presented, through Mr. Halliwell, to the National Museum in this town.

WIGAN.—On Thursday week a colliery accident, by which two persons lost their lives and two others were injured, took place at Messrs. Mercer & Evans's Pearl Lane Colliery, at Ashton. A young man named Abraham Corns, the engineer, was lowering a party of four men to the four-feet mine, when he reversed the engine, believing that it required such a check to be applied to enable him to stop with ease at the mouthing where the cage was to rest. Unfortunately, however, as the cage neared the spot he forgot that he had already reversed the engine, and again altered the motion, the effect of which was to send the cage down the shaft with increasing rapidity. It dashed through the scaffolding, and the mistake having been discovered in the engine house it was brought to a stand about twenty-four yards below the mouth. The men in the cage seeing the position in which they were placed, one of them attempted to spring out at the mouthing as they passed, but fell to the bottom of the shaft, a distance of 61 yards, dragging with him one of his companions. These two were of course killed on the spot. The others, who held fast in the cage were saved, though they sustained a severe shock. The police, considering Corns's conduct culpable, took him into custody, and at the inquest on Friday the jury found that he had been guilty of censurable negligence, but ought to be committed for manslaughter. On Saturday the county magistrates discharged him from custody, and he will be proceeded against by his employers on the minor charge of breaking the special rules.

NEW NATIONAL ASSOCIATION.—A meeting of the citizens of Dublin, convened by the Lord Mayor, was held on Thursday, in the Rotunda, to organise an association for the overthrow of the Irish Church Establishment. It was feared that a riot would ensue, as a Protestant Committee had issued a placard inviting all Protestant citizens to attend the meeting. The Grand Orange Lodge, however, on Wednesday held a special meeting, at which they passed a resolution expressing their unfeigned surprise and indignation that the Lord Mayor should so far forget his position as to call a meeting of the citizens for an object which involved the violation of the solemn oath he had taken at his installation, and prohibiting all Orangemen from attending it. The demonstration, therefore, passed off without any disturbance. The attendance was respectable, but the large landed gentry were absent almost to a man. The room was packed, and bludgeon men were employed to repress opposition. Archbishop Cullen, Bishop Leahy, Bishop Keane, the Lord Mayor, and Mr. Maguire, M.P., spoke. Resolutions in accordance with the object of the meeting were passed, and the rules of the new organisation, which is to be called "The National Association of Ireland," were adopted.

BURNING A PRIEST IN EFFIGY.—The Roman Catholic clergy of Tralee on Sunday week denounced in their chapels the Fenian Society, the Society's Reading Room at Tralee, and a paper published in Dublin called the Irish People, and cautioned their congregations against the pernicious principles of the Society. The Rev. Mr. Collins, of Skibbereen, has since been burnt in effigy by the Fenians of that town, the first instance, it is said, of such an insult to a priest by members of his own creed, influenced by political feeling. The Irish People, although the entire Roman Catholic press has denounced its principles in consequence of the affair at Skibbereen, has since held up the priesthood to scorn, and declared that their flocks owe them no allegiance in political matters, and that they are the enemies of freedom.

AGRARIAN OUTRAGE.—Thomas Reynolds, petty sessions clerk at Rathcore, county Meath, was fired at on Tuesday evening, and died on Wednesday morning from the effects of the wounds. The constabulary have made several arrests.

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.—The Duke of Argyle has been elected President of the Associated Societies of the University of Edinburgh. There were four candidates, the Duke of Argyle, Lord Ardmillan, Professor Christison, and Sir Archibald Alison.

THE YELVERTON MARRIAGE CASE.—We stated last week that Mrs. Longworth Yelverton had attempted to re-open the whole question of her marriage before the Scotch courts on the strength of some new evidence embodied in affidavits. This evidence was to the effect that a woman named Sarah Mullins, who attended the major's brother in his last illness, had heard this brother declare that the major confessed to him that his Scotch marriage with Mrs. Longworth was a genuine and valid marriage. The Courts refused the application, but the friends of the major have now produced counter-affidavits, signed by the Hon. Mrs. Yelverton's coachman, Lord Avonmore's butler, Lady Avonmore's maid, and the medical attendant of the family—all deposing that they were in daily attendance on Mr. Yelverton during his last illness, and that, to their certain knowledge there was no woman of the name of Mullins in attendance on him, nor any female whatever, except his mother, wife, and sister.

THE GREENOCK MURDER.—At the Glasgow Circuit Court on Wednesday, Daniel Stewart was charged with the murder on 22d November, of Robert Williams, a woman, by stabbing him with a knife in the abdomen. He pleaded guilty to the minor offence of culpable homicide. Lord Ardmillan, while admitting that provocation had been given by the deceased, commented severely on the use of the knife, which he characterised as an unmanly, and inhuman mode of conflict. His Lordship sentenced the prisoner to 21 years' penal servitude.

THE GOVAN OUTRAGE.—Mike M'Glinchy pleaded guilty at the Glasgow Circuit Court on Wednesday to the charge of a very brutal assault and rape on Margaret Addie, on the 16th July, on the high road across Govan Common. Lord Ardmillan, in passing sentence, said the prisoner should consider himself extremely fortunate that the public prosecutor had refrained from pressing for extreme punishment. The crime committed under the circumstances was, according to the law of Scotland, punishable by death. The public prosecutor had consented to the passing of an arbitrary sentence, and that would be penal servitude for life.

COLLISION ON THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN.—On Monday morning the mail train from Manchester, shortly after leaving the London Road Station, came in collision with an engine and tender, which were backing into a siding near Longsight. The tender only encountered the full force of the collision. There was no loss of life, but the stoker and engineman of one of the trains were much shaken.

THE FATAL ACCIDENT IN THE BLACKHEATH TUNNEL.—Another of the platelayers who were injured by the recent collision in the Blackheath Tunnel has died from the injuries he received, and two or three other persons remain in a precarious condition. The inquest was resumed on Thursday, and again adjourned for a fortnight.

COLLISION ON THE SOUTH DEVON.—The mail train from London, due at Plymouth at 5.25 on Sunday morning, while running through the Kingsbridge Road station came in collision with a goods train shunted to an adjoining siding. The tail of the goods train projected over the down line, and was struck by the front second-class carriage of the mail train. The ends of two compartments of the carriage were torn off, and two of the goods trucks were damaged. The passengers escaped with a few contusions, excepting one gentleman, who was thrown out of a damaged compartment, but it is hoped that he is not severely injured. The accident blocked up the line for four hours.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—Camille v. Donato.—The One-legged Dancer.—Mr. Rolt, Q.C., made a special application to Vice-Chancellor Wood a few days since for an interim order to restrain Signor Donato, the one-legged dancer, from appearing at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, where he had been announced as the leading attraction in the Christmas pantomime. The application was made on behalf of Messrs. Camille and Marnet, theatrical agents, who stated that they 12 months ago engaged Donato, and re-engaged him to Mr. Charles Morton, of the Oxford and Canterbury Halls, for his appearance at the Oxford. His Honour granted an interim injunction. On Monday defendant's counsel applied to Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, by special appointment, at his private residence. After arguments lasting nearly the whole day, the Vice-Chancellor discharged the order, remarking that had Vice-Chancellor Wood known the circumstances he would never have granted the interim order. His Honour also decided that the Covent Garden Opera Company are necessary parties to the proceeding. The plaintiffs are therefore at liberty to renew their motion for an injunction on the first day of term on amending their bill by making the English Opera Company parties, if they see fit to do so.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.—Attchal Sing v. His Highness the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh.—This was an action before the Lord Chief Justice for a breach of agreement and wrongful dismissal. It appeared from the evidence of the Maharajah that his Highness had engaged the plaintiff, who was a Sikh soldier, as a falconer, and had brought him with him to England. Two years ago he left his Highness's service, and now brought an action for salary, for loss of caste, for the loss of prize money which he might have gained if he had remained a soldier, and for many other charges, which the Maharajah declared to be extravagant, besides which the plaintiff had broken the contract entered into between them. The jury stopped the case, but the counsel for the Maharajah stated that his Highness was still willing to pay the plaintiff's passage to Calcutta.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT: LEEDS.—The Attempted Wife Murder in Sheffield.—James Thompson, 26, a butcher, was charged with maliciously cutting and wounding his wife Emma Thompson, with intent to murder her, at Sheffield, on the 1st August. The parties had been married in 1861, but shortly afterwards Mrs. Thompson returned to her mother, in consequence of the cruel treatment she experienced from her husband. He met her and assaulted her on subsequent occasions because she refused to live with him again. On the morning of the 1st August he went to a slaughter-house, procured a knife used for killing sheep, deliberately sharpened it, and, watching his opportunity, plunged it into his wife's right breast in the open street. By skilful surgical and medical treatment at the Sheffield Infirmary she was saved from death. The prisoner pleaded Guilty, and was sentenced to be kept in penal servitude for the term of his natural life. The Attempted Murder at Halifax.—Thomas Drake was indicted for feloniously attempting to drown Elizabeth Wilson, with intent to murder her, at Halifax, on the 6th of December. The prosecutrix and prisoner are only 17 years old, and had been living together for some weeks; but the prosecutrix had left the prisoner about a month before this occurrence took place. The prosecutrix then lived in a furnished room, and used to go to work every day in Halifax. On the 6th December she arrived too late at her work, and had to return home again. As she was returning she met the prisoner by the canal. He accompanied her towards her home. When they had got under the canal bridge he caught hold of her with one hand and put his other hand over her eyes and pushed her into the water. She sank three or four times, while the prisoner stood looking on without offering her any assistance, and he then walked away. John Furness, a man who happened to be passing, bravely jumped into the water, and saved the prosecutrix at great peril to his life. The prosecutrix was then laid on the grass, and while the people on the spot were attending to her, the prisoner threw himself into the water and attempted to drown himself. The defence was that the prisoner was not in his right mind at the time. Mr. Justice Keating, in summing up, said that the witness Furness had conducted himself in a most gallant and humane manner, which reflected the greatest credit on him, and he regretted that he was unable to grant him a public reward. It was for the jury to consider if the prisoner at the time was in a state of mind to form any intention at all, for it appeared that from an accident he had three or four years ago, he was subject to fits, and never was "himself" for some days after, and that he had a fit the night before; but still the jury must look at his conduct at the time to arrive at a right conclusion as to his state of mind. The jury found the prisoner Guilty, and told his lordship that they had made a subscription for the witness Furness to show their appreciation of his services. His lordship himself added a handsome donation, and said that they had better give the money to the officer of the Court, as probably there might be other persons in court who might be desirous of adding to it. He then said that, under the circumstances, he should only sentence the prisoner to 15 years' penal servitude. Robbery.—Patrick Stenson and Joseph Smith were indicted for robbing Francis Cundall of 7*s.* 6*d.*, at Leeds, on the 15th October. The prosecutor went in the evening of the 15th October to the Fountain publichouse, in the Army Road. At that time he was rather the worse for liquor. He found the two prisoners drinking at the bar with some women, all of whom were unknown to him. He told them that he lived in the Kirsdale Road, which is about two miles from the publichouse. The two prisoners said that they were going the same way, and were going to take a cab, and invited the prosecutor to go with them. A cab was called; the prosecutor, the two prisoners, and two women got inside, and two other men got outside. The cabman was told to drive towards Leeds, which is in a contrary direction to the prosecutor's house. When the prosecutor found this out he tried to stop the cab, but soon after Stenson seized the prosecutor by the throat, and another man put his hand over his mouth to prevent him screaming. He was then robbed. Stenson soon after got out of the cab and pulled the prosecutor out after him; Smith jumping out the other side. The prosecutor cried out "Murder," when a Mr. Kendall ran to his assistance, and found him struggling on the ground with Stenson. Smith then rushed at him, knocked him down, and kicked him in the face. The jury found the prisoners Guilty. A former conviction having been proved against Smith, the Judge sentenced him to 15 years' penal servitude, and the prisoner Stenson to 7 years' penal servitude. Burglary.—Thomas Flint and William Surridge were indicted for burglariously breaking into the house of Mr. Wilkinson, a mason, at Bolton-super-Deane. This burglary was committed with great violence, and the prisoners were guilty of great brutality towards the prosecutor and his housekeeper, the only inmates of the house. The prosecutor on the 8th December went to bed about 10 o'clock, having examined the house. About three o'clock he thought he heard a noise; he therefore lighted a candle and went down stairs, but finding all secure he went to bed again. Five minutes after he heard a crash, and got up again, and on reaching the bottom of the stairs saw three men, one of whom he identified as the prisoner Flint. They seized him, and told him they wanted his money and would have it. One of them knocked him down and held him by the throat with his head to the ground, and told him if he spoke he would cut his head off. His housekeeper, Emma Parkin, on hearing the noise, put her head out of the window and gave an alarm, whereupon the man who was holding the prosecutor told one of the prisoners to go up stairs and cut her throat. The two prisoners then went up stairs into the housekeeper's bedroom. Surridge, whom she knew by sight, held her down on the bed while Flint ransacked her boxes. He then dragged her down stairs in her night dress, threw her down on the floor, and attempted to ravish her. The prisoner Surridge asked her where the money was kept, and told her he would murder her in a few minutes if she did not tell him. At last the two prisoners and the other burglar were alarmed by some one throwing a stone through the window, whereupon they left the house, Flint having taken 11*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* belonging to the prosecutor. For the defence an alibi was set up, and it was also said that the prosecutor was mistaken as to the prisoners. The jury found the prisoners Guilty, and they were sentenced to eight years' penal servitude.

OXFORD CIRCUIT: READING.—Attempt to Murder a Brother.—Jesse Oakley, a labouring man, 20 years of age, was indicted for feloniously cutting the throat, with intent to murder his brother Isaac Oakley, at Chieveley, on the 12th December. The prisoner pleaded guilty, but his lordship determined upon hearing the evidence. Several witnesses were then examined, and it appeared that the prisoner, who was in husbandry service about 10 miles from Hill Green, in the parish of Chieveley, where his parents resided, went unexpectedly to his father's house on the 11th inst., and in the evening attended Divine service at the chapel of the Primitive Methodists, for which body he acted as collector of subscriptions towards the chapel at Peasemore. After service he went home and sharpened a table knife for the purpose, as he stated, of cutting a piece of skin from his finger. On the following morning the prisoner's brother, a boy about nine years of age, named Isaac, went out for the purpose of going to school, when the prisoner met him, dragged him across a field to a chalk-pit, where he made him sit down, and then took the neckerchief from his neck, and inflicted in his throat a deep gash, three inches long, and an opening in his windpipe large enough to admit a finger. Soon after the prisoner's mother met him; and of his own accord he told her that Isaac was in the chalk pit, where she found him bleeding very much. He was conveyed home, where he was attended by a surgeon, who sewed up the wound, and the boy progressed favourably, but he was in a precarious state, and as he gave his evidence he was wrapped in a blanket, and looked exceedingly ill. There was no doubt about the facts, but there was some evidence that he was not in a sane state of mind. The Jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty, on the ground of insanity, and Mr. Justice Byles said that he concurred in the verdict. OXFORD: Arson.—George Roberts, Robert Ballinger, and James Hamilton were indicted for setting fire to a stack of straw, the property of Giles Brooks, on the 30th September, at Forest Hill. The three prisoners were seen running from the burning rick, and afterwards gave themselves up at Oxford for the crime. Roberts, who is only 16 years of age, was stated not to have taken an active part in the affair. He was found Guilty, but recommended to mercy by the jury, the other prisoners pleading guilty. The former was sentenced to five years' penal servitude, and the two latter to seven years's penal servitude each. George White and Alexander Davidson pleaded guilty to setting fire to a stack of Barley, two stacks of Wheat, two stacks of hay, and one stack of straw, the property of William Cother, at Middle Aston, on the 1st September. White, who had been previously convicted of felony, was sentenced to 12 years' and Davidson to 10 years' penal servitude.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT: AYLESBURY.—Arson.—John Smith, 32, and William Mason, 36, labourers, pleaded guilty to a charge of wilfully setting fire to a stack of hay, the property of Benjamin Baker, at Calverton, on the 23d November; and James Devall, 23, labourer, pleaded guilty to setting fire to a rick of straw, the property of John Read, at Turville, on the 13th September. Baron Bramwell, in passing sentence, said—Smith and Mason, yours is the common case of people who are in some sort of want, and to get taken care of burn down valuable property. Believe me it is a very great mistake. Why don't you go to the workhouse, where you will be taken care of, and can get out when you please? Or, if you must commit a crime, commit a smaller one, and do not destroy such a quantity of property. I sentence you to 8 years' penal servitude. As to you, Devall, your conduct is worse, as you were in work, and you did this because you did not like your master using a threshing machine. The use of these machines is of the greatest importance to poor people, as they are the means of giving them cheap bread; you might as well burn growing Wheat. I sentence you to 15 years' penal servitude.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Dec. 26.

We have a fair supply of Beasts for the day. Trade is active, and the best qualities are rather dearer than on Thursday last. The number of Sheep is very small. There is not much trade for inferior descriptions. Choice qualities are readily disposed of at full rates. There are very few Calves on offer, and they realise high prices.

THURSDAY, Dec. 29.

We have a fair supply of Beasts, and trade is slow. Prices consequently are lower. The milder weather makes purchasers very cautious. The number of Sheep is fully equal to the demand. Trade is dull at a slight reduction in price. Good Calves are very scarce and dear. In some instances our top quotation is exceeded. Our foreign supply consists of 324 Beasts, 1910 Sheep, and 19 Calves.

POTATOS.—SOUTHWARK, Monday, Dec. 26.

During the past week the arrivals coastwise have been small, but still large by rail. The trade still continues dull at about the former rates. The following are this day's quotations: — Yorkshire Flukes, per ton, 90s. to 110s.; do. Regents, 80s. to 95s.; Dunbar Regents, 85s. to 95s.; Kent and Essex Regents, 80s. to 95s.; do. do. Rocks, 70s. to 75s.; Perth, Forfar, and Fife Regents, 70s. to 80s.; do. do. Rocks, 65s. to 70s.; Belgian Whites, 55s. to 65s.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Dec. 26.

The Corn Exchange being closed, no business could be entered into. In the country markets held on Saturday prices of Wheat in good condition were well supported, and as the imports from American ports have almost ceased, and little being on the way, millers in the interior will have to use more English Wheat. The severe weather in the north of Europe will prevent shipments being made, and our growers will now have more prospect of selling their produce, so that the year is likely to open more cheeringly for them, and the lowest time may now be considred as past. Feeding stuffs will be in great demand throughout the remaining winter months, and grinding Barleys will be wanted, and this article may take more favour than of late.

FRIDAY, Dec. 30.

The weather since the 23d was fine and frosty up to yesterday, but more or less foggy; since yesterday it has been milder. The Wheat trade during the above interval has been firm, and in several markets a slight advance in price has been established. Spring Corn of all kinds has maintained its previous value, with the exception of Oats in London, which, owing to large arrivals by steamer have, in some instances receded 6d. per qr. Flour has not undergone any change in price or demand. Since last Friday 27 grain and seed laden vessels have been reported as arrived at ports of call. The demand for floating cargoes of Wheat and Maize has been more active since Saturday, and we quote both 6d. per qr. dearer. Barley is likewise improving, and there is rather more disposition evinced to entertain forward business generally. Paris, Dec. 29.—The country markets are inactive, and Wheat buyers here show great reluctance to purchase. Flour is firm, and there is not much offering. The six marks for present delivery are quoted equal to 31s. 3d. per 280 lb. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 34,507 cwt. The arrivals of all grain, both English and foreign, this week have been very small. The attendance at to-day's market was limited. The little English Wheat fresh up met a quick sale at Wednesday's prices. Business in foreign was unimportant, and quite of a retail character, but on the sales effected late rates were fully supported. The value of spring corn was unaltered, with the exception of Oats, which were in some instances rather cheaper.
